FRIDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1918.

and the name beneath it is La France. This is the France for which the world's best soldiers fight, a nation symbolized by a woman's face."

This, the Simple Life.

The "movies" are closed and the joke about the evening dishes being piled in the sink is temporarily out of order. All the patrons of the "movies" were not so slavish to their lure as a woman who admitted hiding the remnants of supper in the stationary tubs with the lids down. The inexpensive film recreation has endeared itself to the common peoples, for it is the life of the world reproduced in motion. There has been a "get acquainted" quality to the "movies" that nothing heretofore has equaled in value, for it has been essentially human food for human minds. One-half of the world had always hankered to know how the other half lives. Along came the "movie," with "Behold! See what you have heard, read or imagined. I am a medium of education."

There are many non-believers in the "movies." Offsetting them are those people who have seen and believed and become even better informed in current happenings than such non-believers as minimize the value of the "movies." For informing quality there is about as much difference between the legitimate stage and the "movies" as between the door-stopper cat and a yowling pussy. The best argument for the "movies" is that the people like them.

It is remembered that a busy physician in this city stopped long enough during office hours to comment, "What's in this movie business, anyway? I used to think it was just a simple cinematograph show, but all my patrons talk 'movies!'" There is no reason to connect that physician's shortening his office hours with his conversion to the motion picture, but he found out that there is a certain fascination about seeing the other half of the world in action.

As the best sort of a dessert to the usual run of "movies" there came the pictures from the other side, convincing even skeptics that Yankee soldiers do laugh when going into battle and that Uncle Sam has a need for Liberty loans and 100 per cent. patriotism. In a manner that no actor or actress on the legitimate stage could imitate the "movies" told the story of war, brought tears and gladness, and cemented friendliness between the American people and their war comrades.

So, although the family dishes may be washed each night during a necessary closing of the "movies," there is a strong possibility that father, mother and children are looking toward that day safe from pestilence when optimism will again look from the film in the midst of ruin.

All-Wool Patriotism.

What quality is your patriotism? Do you

A Triumph!

The Light of

Vibrates with tense situations and strikes an intelligent as well as a popular appeal. Its grandeur of scenery is a positive delight. Dustin Farnum realizes every demand made upon him. His vivid portrayal of the wild but lovable Gene Stewart should meet with the heartiest commendation from picture patrons.

Exhibitor's Trade Review

A wealth of good material—Dustin Farnum is fascinating in a masterly production characterized by breadth and beauty of treatment.

Moving Picture World

Based on one of the best known American books, with the popular Dustin Farnum in the lead, its quality is excellent. The beautiful desert scenes and cactus country form a fascinating background. Dramatic values and plot—action afford thrills and suspense.

Motion Picture News

One of the most picturesque and impressive Westerns ever unrolled on the screen, it is a vivid and actionful picture. The story is rich in human interest and engrossing adventure. The production is superb. The great West has probably never been more impressively filmed.

Morning Telegraph

A corking good production that will undoubtedly please. An out-of-the-ordinary special, presenting a stirring romance of the West with real action in an artistic atmosphere. A story that holds from start to finish. Interesting characters so presented, introduced and carried through the action that the audience comes to feel it knows them intimately. Dustin Farnum in this picture does by far the best work he has yet registered on the screen.

Wid's Daily

Dustin Farnum in "The Light of Western Stars" perfectly typifies the Western hero with conviction, virility and red-blooded action.

Exhibitor's Herala

Invites Motion Picture Companies to avail themselves this winter of the unexcelled conditions in

The Land of Sunshine

Demonstrated by actual experience of several of the largest picture corporations to possess:

1. More sunny days than California or Florida, and far less fog or rain.
2. Sunlight of unusual actinic power, giving a greater number of working hours, and greatly cheapening the cost of producing pictures.
3. A mild equable climate where it is possible to work out-of-doors all the winter.
4. An adequate fuel supply is available for artificial lighting purposes when required.
5. A varied scenery ranging from deep canyons and steep mountains to level prairies, from the shaggy wilderness to rural scenes of genuine pastoral beauty.
6. One night's ride from the ocean, and thirty miles from Lake Medina, a fresh water gem set down in the mountains, which is eighteen miles long by three miles wide, nearly as large as Lake George in New York State.
7. This wonderful natural setting for motion pictures has never been photographed—it is new and attractive, not old and familiar.
8. San Antonio is a modern city of steel and concrete, with a population of 175,000. It has all of the city conveniences and advantages. Motion picture work is new in San Antonio; the city officials, the Chamber of Commerce and all the citizens are willing to co-operate. "Locations" can be secured without cost, service can be had at reasonable prices—no gouging will be permitted.
9. San Antonio is the site of the greatest military camps in America. It has twelve separate and distinct establishments, representing every branch of the service. It has the largest aviation field and the greatest balloon schools in the Army.

Proved by Actual Test

Director Frank Powell made the greater part of "The Heart of the Sunset," the latest picturization of Rex Beach, at San Antonio. Mr. Powell organized the Sunset Pictures Corporation, of which he is now director general, and located it at San Antonio. They are now working on their third picture. In addition, the Vitagraph Company several years ago made "The Mystic Kingdom," under the direction of Theodore Marston, at San Antonio.

Studio and Laboratory Available

Mr. Frank Powell, of the Sunset Pictures Corporation, generously agrees to allow, under certain conditions, the rental of its studio and laboratory for developing negatives and making sample prints, to recognized picture companies desiring to work in San Antonio this winter. Stage space 80 x 100. Developing and printing capacity 1800 feet daily.

Permanent Location

If after actual test, motion picture corporations of established reputation wish to locate permanently in San Antonio, the Chamber of Commerce will co-operate with them. Under no circumstances will the Chamber of Commerce undertake to finance motion picture companies. Correspondence is solicited with established companies. Address

Motion Picture News

HAS THE QUALITY CIRCULATION OF THE TRADE

"The Exhibitors' Medium of Communication"

Volume 18. No. 18 November 2, 1918

We Are With You!

LET us clear the air on one point—for now and for all time. Let us state, as clearly and bluntly as we know how, the attitude of Motion Picture News towards the members of the industry who have temporarily discontinued trade paper advertising.

Motion Picture News stands enlisted for one hundred per cent help to the entire industry.

Motion Picture News offers every facility of its columns and its organization to all the industry.

We are with you!

We are as willing and anxious to be a vital part of the industry in its hour of storm as we were—and will be—an important part in its days of prosperity.

It is granted that the above is but a repetition of the sentiments expressed at every possible opportunity in last week's issue. We said then, and repeated, and reiterated:

What can we do for you?

The words were not intended as a mere mouth-filling phrase. They were our "Oath of Allegiance." They were the concrete expression of the spirit and purpose of every member of our organization.

And we see no harm in repeating a pledge.

That our intentions may be clearly understood—and our performance measured by those purposes.

A Week for Thought

A WEEK has passed, and with it the opportunity for some wry and dry thought.

Some thoughts that confirm us even more strongly—if that were possible—in the attitude we announced last week.

Conferences held during the week and a word heard here and there bring to a clear focus these points:

(1) The manufacturers and producers—with only a few exceptions — are standing now with their backs to the wall.

(2) The decision to suspend trade paper advertising—while in our opinion fundamentally unwise —can at least be said to have been justifiable.

(3) Many of the larger companies will not face conditions any too bright even when the ban is lifted.

Points one and two have been said before in varying words by observers within and without the industry. But it has taken the crisis born of the epidemic to bring manufacturers to the point where they are sitting down and admitting the truth to each other.

They are cold, blunt, hard facts. They probably have no place in a trade journal in the opinion of those who believe that organ's function to be the preaching of optimism and creation of false courage.

But the picture industry has been skating along on the thin ice of borrowed money and manufactured hope long enough to have earned a drenching.

And if manufacturers are benefitting by hearing the truth from one another, then the whole industry will benefit by letting exhibitors and stars read the truth.

Back to "Our Part"

WITH the facts as stated in mind, Motion Picture News believes that now, of all moments, is the one when a trade journal should be dedicated to "Service to the Utmost."

Assuredly—

When manufacturers are confronted with the loss of over eighty per cent of the country's theatres for from two to four weeks;

When overhead, even after ruthless cutting, remains a staggering drain;

When some are struggling with internal business problems; others with a slowing up in rental collections that will extend into the period following the lifting of the ban; and all are faced with the serious phases of readjustment;

Is this the time for a trade paper to indulge in the disgruntled resentment we see in some quarters; is this the occasion for the use of the bludgeon slogan, "No advertising, no publicity?"

¶ Their number made a personal acknowledgement almost an impossibility.

¶ Just as these few words are all too insufficient to express the depths of feeling they have touched.

Most certainly—No!

While Motion Picture News may stand alone in its attitude—it has stood alone in the past and it has been right. It is willing to stand alone now—and it is right.

What of "The Reader?"

AND now, Friend Reader, we come to you. In this issue you will find every bit of news and service that we would give you in a week that saw a hundred pages down on the advertising ledger.

For, we believe, when we accepted your subscription money and your loyal support, we entered into a bargain to provide you with all the news of the industry in season and out of season.

Don't you feel that way about it?

As for the press agents, we can't assure them that they will find every bit of mimeographed copy they turned out in this issue. They won't find, for example:

The stories which tell us that "this picture is breaking all records for contracts and already thousands of theatres throughout the country are showing it to packed houses." (At a time when over eighty per cent of the theatres are closed!)

The stories which tell of pictures "released October 27th" and other dates within the four week closed season. (Judging from some of the copy many of the mimeographers do not know yet that their companies have suspended releases.)

The "brain storm" stories. (Enough said.)

As for the rest—it's all in this issue, every bit of real news. And service—why the Exhibitors' Service Bureau is running ahead at top speed, the Complete Plan Book is offering every available aid in making your plans for booking and advertising when the ban is lifted.

"Better Pictures—Longer Runs"

SPEAKING of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau reminds us of an interesting comment of one of the manufacturers that was reported to us during the week. He is quoted as saying:

"The thing that would surprise you about the manufacturers' meetings during the period of this four week ban is the way they are talking 'Better pictures, longer runs.' They are up against it now, and all you hear is 'We must have fewer pictures, better pictures and longer runs.'

"It makes me laugh because I remember how long W. A. Johnston banged away at that idea, and how little attention 'the wise ones' paid him. Now they are all converted—but will they give W. A. J. the credit? Not on your life."

We mention the conversation because we have often wondered if the manufacturers realize the aid the Exhibitors' Service Bureau is giving in bringing exhibitors around to longer runs.

Exhibitors realize it—they have told us so. Their letters have told us how the practical advertising and presentation stories in the Service Bureau are making many dollars for them and in many cases enabling them to change successfully from a daily change to longer run policy.

Look it over—this week or any week. You have a little time to spare these dull days, Mr. Manufacturer. Call for the office file of Motion Picture News and get in touch through the Exhibitors' Service Bureau with "the man on the firing line."

It's an exhibitors department for exhibitors. It'll make you forget Times Square for fifteen minutes and feel that you are sitting in a three by four box office.

Isn't that worth a lot?

On the Conservation Highway

WHEN we quit writing "sports" for a living we swore that never again would we fall so low as to inflict every successful manager with the nickname—"Miracle Man."

But we are tempted and we have fallen. We can't let the opportunity go by without saying that Frank Tichenor is "The Miracle Man" of this game.

When "Tich" took hold of General Film he possessed personal popularity but few believed that he could put the old G. F. back anywhere near to its once commanding position.

There were many willing to lay bets that he couldn't keep it off the rocks. There were some who laughed, and a few who sneered.

But these same fellows are now anxious to let you know that they are personally acquainted with the Frank Tichenor who is vice-president of the General Film that is now back as a staunch, strong distributing organization, handling a wealth of good product, and booking—if our observations on a recent up-State trip are any criterion—at a speedy pace.

"Tich" made his play on the one point that General Film stood foremost—a complete, efficient, extensive distributing organization. He followed the conservation highway—and he is only beginning to reap the benefits.

His latest move is a deal with William L. Sherry that you can read about on page 2747. Aside from the influenza developments it is the big news event of the week—so don't miss it.

A Sacrifice to Patriotism

HAROLD LOCKWOOD'S death was as much a sacrifice to patriotism as if he had died in muddy khaki on the red-hued fields of France.

We saw and heard him at Madison Square Garden on the evening that he was selling Liberty Bonds. He worked like a Trojan, mixed hard plugging and pleading with smiles, and stood for hours rolling perspiration as a result of his strenuous efforts.

His desire to do his part outweighed the counsels of his advisors. The result was the cold that brought on pneumonia and his death.

There's a tragic note to it all. We remember the day when Edison asked our sub-rosa advice as to whether we thought Lockwood worth $100 a week. He was then with American—and now, after years of sincere, whole-hearted work, he was reaching the crest and his due reward.

The industry suffered other losses during the week because of the influenza epidemic, notably the deaths of R. W. Lynch, vice-president of Triangle and Myrtle Gonzalez.

We have grouped the news concerning these unfortunate events on page 2746.

Our News Service to the Test

WE have received many compliments during the week on the fact that last week's issue of Motion Picture News gave the most complete reports of conditions throughout the country because of the influenza scourge.

This week our correspondents have again combed the field for you and presented an exhaustive resume of present conditions and the outlook.

One fact seems to stand out—that a goodly percentage of the theatres are looking forward to being open by the first day of November.

Another fact is prominent—that no section of the country will escape the effects of the plague. It is spreading, inexorably, inflexibly, with a steadiness that is weird.

Our reports of conditions will be found on pages 2744 and 2745.

Outlook Bright in Many Sections

All of New England Expected to Follow Lead of Boston in Reopening—Northern New Jersey Ban Lifted—Reports from Other Territories Promise Action by November 1st

FOLLOWING the lifting of the influenza ban in Boston and most Northern New Jersey towns as forecast in last week's Motion Picture News, reports received during the current week throw a cheerful light on the situation in many sections of the country.

New Haven, Bridgeport and Hartford have remained open throughout the scare and during the week many other cities followed the lead of Boston in reopening, with indications that all of New England would soon be in the optimistic line. From other sections exhaustive telegraphic investigation discloses that November 1st is looked upon as the likely reopening date for a large percentage of the theatres.

The outlook, however, indicates that it will be many days after that date before anything close to one hundred per cent of the theatres are again open and the exchanges are working anywhere near to normal. The general exhibitor sentiment would seem to be that there is no hurry in reopening until conditions are entirely clear. Theatre managers throughout the country are looking for boom times after the long shutdown and they have no desire to take the edge off by reopening while the fear of crowds is still present in patrons' minds.

Outlook in New England Is Promising

NEW HAVEN, CONN. (Special).—With Boston already open and its theatres fast getting back into full stride, the balance of the New England territory is beginning to show signs of life. The influenza epidemic seems to have passed through its cycle and is now subsiding everywhere, with the result that new sections are lifting the ban rapidly.

The New London district opened last Monday. Plans also called for the opening on October 28th of Springfield, Pittsfield, Meriden, Wallingford and South Manchester.

There is as yet no sign of a ban being placed on the theatres in New Haven, Hartford, and Bridgeport, where managers have kept running throughout, though attendance has been a bit hurt by the general effects of the scare on the public.

Penn. Managers Optimistic Over Prospect

HARRISBURGH, PA. (Special).—While no hint as to the date of lifting the state-wide ban on theatres has come from the Health Department, prospects here are distinctly optimistic. Deaths from the plague are on the decrease throughout the state and reports to Harrisburgh headquarters indicate a reduction in the number of new cases.

State Health Commissioner Royer is now at work on the preparation of the plan for the reopening of the theatres and will probably make it public late this week. As announced in MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week, the Commissioner expects to lift the ban by sections as the epidemic abates. A close check is being kept on the reports from each section and the plan now being prepared is to be in line with these reports.

LABOR A PROB LEM

Theatres and Exchanges Worry Over "After-the-Plague" Period

REPORTS to Motion Picture News would indicate that one of the big problems to be faced by exchanges and theatres when the influenza ban has finally been lifted from the country will be the question of labor. Operators, ushers, exchange shipping clerks and other helpers have been laid off in most sections and reports from New Orleans and other points indicate that most of them have already drifted to highly paid war industries. Will they come back?

From Cincinnati comes this report: "The nitrate plant at Ancor, on the outer edge of Eastern Cincinnati, may have considerable bearing on the theatres here. The authorities in charge of the plant plan to conscript labor and theatre ushers have already been placed in the preferred class for service. The plant and its inducements during the period of idleness in picture ranks offer a problem."

Wisconsin Looks for Relief November 1st

MILWAUKEE, WIS. (Special).—Expectations throughout Wisconsin would seem to be that the ban on theatres and public gatherings will last for some time yet but that the prospect is bright for its lifting by November 1st.

Exhibitors in Milwaukee have offered every facility at their command to the local Health Commissioner in combatting the spread of the plague. In interviews with a MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative the theatre owners stated that they believed it preferable to gain the confidence of the public by rmaining closed as long as actually necessary rather than to open prematurely and have the situation take a relapse. Milwaukee is in the care of an international bacteriologist who is felt to be an authority and the exhibitors are well satisfied to stand by him and aid to their utmost.

MADISON (Special).—State Health Officer Harper has expressed himself as hopeful of being able to allow the reopening of theatres before the first day of November. Theatre men here are banking their hopes on this.

Reports to the Health Officer would indicate that the epidemic has passed the climax in Wisconsin and is now in the convalescent stage throughout the state.

Atlanta Territory Is Brightening Up

ATLANTA, GA. (Special).—Local exchanges have seen so little cash in the past few weeks that they won't know a yellow back again when they receive one, but late indications would point to a brightening up of the situation about the beginning of next week.

The local situation is showing decided improvement, the decrease in the number of new cases having led the Atlanta Health Officer to tell some picture men that he may possibly be able to lift the ban the first of next week.

Reports are much similar in the near-by territory, though it is probable that the communities now shut up will follow Atlanta's lead in the matter of lifting the ban. Local exchanges report some Florida towns reopening on Monday, October 28th.

Des Moines Hopes for Action in Week

DES MOINES, IA. (Special).—Conditions throughout Iowa are reported as rapidly improving and the various health authorities seem inclined to the opinion that the influenza is on the run. Theatre managers in Des Moines interviewed by the NEWS representative are optimistically making plans for the reopening of their theatres the first of next week.

Postpone all Reopenings in Indiana

Extend Ban Another Week, with Prospect of Further Stretching—Rochester Abandons Schedule and Makes Shutdown Indefinite—Los Angeles Exchanges Optimistic

WHILE the health officers in the state of Indiana expected to lift the ban on theatres October 20, they since decided that the theatres could not open again until October 26.

As the influenza epidemic has not reached a crisis in that state, according to the health officials, there are no early prospects of the theatres being allowed to open as expected.

Many theatre owners in various sections of the country were disappointed when the local or state health boards extended the closing order.

Where the disappointment was the most keenly felt was in those cities where the first shutdown was only scheduled for a single week or ten days.

More than eighty theatres were affected by the closing order in Los Angeles and all the theatres in the nearby cities are also closed for an indefinite period.

At Rochester, N. Y., where the theatres were scheduled to open again on October 21, the Commissioner of Public Safety declared that they must remain closed indefinitely.

Rochester Opening Was Postponed

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—The theatres of Rochester, N. Y., did not open on Monday, October 21, as scheduled. In fact, the last pronouncement of Commissioner of Public Safety R. Andrew Hamilton is to the effect that they will be closed indefinitely, which means until the influenza epidemic is known positively to be abating.

When that time will be is a matter of conjecture, for the number of cases has been mounting steadily day by day. On October 21, the day set for the reopening, there was a total of 550 new cases reported, bringing the total to date up to 6,688. The total number of deaths has been 175.

As it was known the week before that there was no chance of opening on the day scheduled, moving picture men had resigned themselves to it and were merely marking time until they were able to make definite plans again. Some of the houses, such as the Regent and Piccadilly, have been improving the opportunity to screen a large number of films ahead in readiness for reopening.

These houses are required to show all pictures to Commissioner Hamilton before booking them, a task which usually is performed after show hours or early mornings. With the theatres closed, a good chance was offered to clean up a large number of films.

The loyal spirit shown by the theatre men through the closed period has come in for warm commendation from public officials and newspapers. Despite the heavy loss that the exhibitors suffered every day their houses were closed, not a word of complaint was uttered.

It is believed that the prompt closing of the theatres, with all other public gatherings, helped to keep the epidemic in check and prevented it from reaching the serious proportions that it attained in many other cities of the state.

WHO OWNS THIS FILM?

THE National Anti-Misframe League, organized by Motion Picture News, is in receipt of the following telegram:

Los Angeles Closed, But Very Optimistic

LOS ANGELES.—All the theatres in Los Angeles closed their doors for an indefinite period in compliance with an order from the Los Angeles health department. More than eighty houses in Los Angeles alone are effected. All theatres in San Diego, Long Beach, Pasadena and other nearby cities, as well as all Arizona houses, were also closed.

Since the original order was promulgated more recent orders have been issued placing a ban on all outdoor gatherings. Cabaret and musical entertainment in the restaurants and cafes is also prohibited. In all probability the theatres will not be opened for at least two weeks from the date they were closed.

All exchange managers of Los Angeles met and discussed ways and means of conducting their affairs during the closing of all theatres in Los Angeles and nearby towns. Harry Lustig, Pacific Coast representative of Metro with headquarters in Los Angeles, presided at the meeting.

Managers, however, generally speaking, said the temporary lull in business would be a help rather than a hindrance. They feel that during this period they will be able to readjust their offices, rearrange advantageously their bookings and in a general way clean house and clear the decks for action when a bigger business follows the temporary suspension.

Among the exchange managers who were extremely optimistic were David Bershon, of Universal; W. H. Hepburn, of Vitagraph; Guy Gunderson, of Kleine System; B. E. Loper, of Select Pictures; Bernard Fish, of Goldwyn; Harry Ballance, of Paramount-Artcraft; F. E. Hancock, World Film, and Manager Lamb of Metro.

Indiana Theatres Are Still Closed

INDIANAPOLIS.—The ban on public gatherings of every description throughout the state of Indiana, which was to have been lifted at midnight October 20, was extended Friday by the state board of health until midnight, October 26.

The ban in the city of Indianapolis will be kept in effect indefinitely and will not be lifted until the situation justifies it.

The object of such action by the state and the city is solely to prevent people getting together in crowds of five or more persons and therefore applies to meetings of every description, the state board of health says. This includes religious, political, business or social—schools, theatres and churches—and also to congregating in such places as poolrooms and bowling alleys.

Nehls Hastens to Coast

A hurried trip to the Pacific Coast, by General Manager R. R. Nehls of the American Film Company, Inc., is the result of the influenza epidemic's effect on the film business in general and the conditions in California in particular.

This is the first trip to the studios at Santa Barbara, California by Mr. Nehls, although he has been one of the executives of this big corporation for years.

In addition to the general management of the corporation, Mr. Nehls has always personally supervised the detail work and given the finishing touches to the subjects as they came from the coast to the Chicago offices.

Michigan Latest to Ban Shows

Nebraska Action Now State-wide—Plague Spreading to Coast Points—No Exchange Territory Outside New York Free of Ban Now—Exchanges Deserted

DESPITE numerous encouraging reports that theatres in some sections will reopen next week, the shut-down of theatres and distribution appears to be more complete this week than last. Exchanges are practically deserted, the scourge spreading to such dimensions that no exchange territory outside of New York is free of the ban.

A wire to MOTION PICTURE NEWS, October 24, from Omaha, Neb., carried the news that the Governor of Nebraska had closed all theatres, churches and other public gatherings until November 2. This order was sweeping, including the whole state, but is probably the first in which the date of lifting the ban was mentioned. Omaha had already been closed since October 4.

From the mountain territory of the west, in the vicinity of Salt Lake City, it was reported that the epidemic has not been checked as late as October 24. No prospects of opening soon were promised. Schools are closed and meetings forbidden. Many new cases of influenza were reported.

Washington Remains Unchanged, But Hopeful

The influenza situation at Washington, D. C., with its attendant effect upon the theatres, remains unchanged this week. It is reported the reopening of the theatres is indefinite, and that the civil authorities show no inclination to take the ban off amusements in that vicinity. Despite hopes of exhibitors and public, no information can be obtained as to when the theatres may be permitted to open their doors again.

News from Spokane, Wash., October 24, was no more encouraging than reports from Central States or the East. If anything, the situation was declared worse around Spokane than formerly. No information was forthcoming as to when the exhibitors could expect a notification permitting them to open their houses. Spokane's total number of influenza cases to October 24 was 1,246.

Michigan was tied up completely by October 20, by order of the governor, and not only were the theatres closed but the churches, schools, lodges, pool rooms and other places where the public gathered, were closed. In Detroit the retail stores were notified to close at 4 P. M. The opinion was expressed in Detroit that the motion picture theatres would be closed from three to four weeks. The Detroit exchanges notified exhibitors that all release dates would be advanced four weeks, or whatever length of time the houses were closed.

Ohio Situation in Doubt, But Openings Expected

Late reports from Cleveland, Ohio, to MOTION PICTURE NEWS carried the conflicting news that several towns expected to open Sunday, but that Martins Ferry, Chillicothe and Tiffin were the only towns open this week in Ohio. Toledo fostered hopes of being permitted to open its motion picture theatres October 27, but even the most optimistic did not express the opinion that the town would be able to attend the theatres Sunday. Cleveland was positive that no theatres would be open October 27, nor till the epidemic passes the crisis.

Lansing Closed Tight

From Lansing, Mich., the report was sent out that the State Board of Health had announced that the influenza situation was becoming more menacing each day. It was said the lifting of the state closing order was very unlikely for a considerable time to come. The Lansing schools are also closed.

Flint, Mich., reported that it expected to remain under the closing ban for at least ten more days, if not longer. The average reported there of influenza cases was 100 cases a week, with ten deaths.

Section Reports

EVANSVILLE, IND.—The influenza epidemic in Southern Indiana on October 24 was steadily increasing. Local theatre men fear the colsing order will be lengthened by at least ten more days than were originally expected.

SAN DIEGO, CAL.—The influenza situation here is well controlled, with less than 400 cases in the city to date. The scourge is also light in military camps in this vicinity.

OGDEN, UTAH.—Since October 1 there have been 1,500 cases of influenza in this city, entailing 50 deaths. The situation shows little improvement, but health officials believe the crest of the malady has passed. The ban on motion picture theatres is expected to be raised in another week.

DENVER, COLO.—The total number of cases reported in Colorado is 8,997, with the number of deaths placed at 311. New cases reported to October 23 totaled 781. On that day it was reported the epidemic was being checked, and that the outlook was hopeful. At that time it was said the theatres may open in ten days or two weeks.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—The danger in Rochester has not yet passed, and no chances are being taken. Influenza cases up to October 23 amount to 7,237, but a decrease has been reported in new cases.

MUNCIE, IND.—The influenza situation here is not regarded as favorable to the opening of the theatres October 28 as intended. New cases are being reported each day.

TAMPA. FLA.—All theatres have been closed since October 8. The epidemic has not yet reached the climax here, is the general opinion. New cases and deaths are being reported daily. Albert H. LaBelle, owner of three theatres and secretary of the Florida Exhibitors' League, is the first victim in picture circles to be reported. He died October 20.

BUTTE, MONT.—Three hundred new cases were reported here October 23, bringing the total to 2,300. Deaths to date are estimated at 92. Scobie is the first Montana town to be affected.

LACROSSE, WIS.—All local theatres have been closed the past ten days and prospects are evident for ten more days of darkness in the theatres. The situation has not abated and the State Health Board has assumed full power.

GREEN BAY, WIS.—No improvement is noted here. Several new cases of influenza have been reported, in addition to several deaths.

FOND DU LAC, WIS.—Motion picture theatres here have been closed since October 10, and no indications have been seen of the lifting of the closing order.

RICHMOND, VA.—The doors of ten more Liberty theatres in this section have been reopened, and it is expected that all of the

McAdoo Thanks the Industry

Brady Receives Letter of Appreciation for Efforts in Behalf of Loan and War Savings Stamps—Zukor Praised

IN a letter to William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, expresses his thanks and appreciation for the work done by the industry in placing the Liberty Loan and War Savings Stamps appeals before the American people.

In his letter, which follows in full, he expresses his appreciation of the work of Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who is chairman of the Committee of the National Association appointed to co-operate with the Treasury Department and the stars and producers who collaborated in the thirty-five Liberty Loan pictures.

Treasury Department,
Washington,
Oct. 9, 1918.

MR. WILLIAM A. BRADY, President,
National Association of the Motion Picture Industry,
New York, N. Y.

DEAR MR. BRADY:

The great financial enterprises of the Government incident to the conduct of this war could not have been carried out successfully without the enthusiastic co-operation of all elements of business activity.

The great motion picture industry has been conspicuous in its enthusiastic support of these enterprises. Mr. Zukor and his associates who have represented your organization in its relations with the Treasury Department have given unstintingly of their time, talent and labor to help get the Liberty Loan and War Savings appeals before the American people. In this patriotic activity I know they have reflected the attitude of the entire motion picture industry.

I want particularly to express my thanks to the stars and producers who have collaborated in the thirty-five motion picture subjects in behalf of the Fourth Liberty Loan. I believe these animated appeals are very effective in strengthening morale and in helping to arouse the public to its responsibilities in connection with the financing of the war.

I wish I might bring this message to you personally, but, because of my inability to do so, I am asking Frank Wilson to convey to you my expressions of appreciation and esteem.

Cordially yours,
(Signed) W. G. McADOO.

Harold Lockwood Passes Away

Metro Star Succumbs to Illness of Ten Days Caused by a Cold—In Pictures for Several Years

HAROLD LOCKWOOD, Metro star, died in his apartments at the Woodward Hotel, New York, on Saturday, Oct. 19. Death was due to pneumonia.

Mr. Lockwood had been ill for only ten days, and, despite the serious condition of his illness, it was believed that because of his strong constitution he would survive the crisis. The end came as a distinct shock.

On Oct. 8 Mr. Lockwood appeared at Madison Square Garden during the Motion Picture Exposition as a Liberty Bond salesman. He worked on location the following day in exterior scenes for "The Yellow Dove," but on Thursday his condition became such that he was obliged to take to his bed. His ailment was pronounced as a severe attack of grippe, which developed quickly into pneumonia despite the efforts of his physicians to check it.

Born in Brooklyn, N. Y., April 12, 1888, he made his first public appearance on the stage about twelve years ago with Otis Harlan in "The Broken Idol." After a season with this organization he went into vaudeville, thence into pictures. His first screen engagement was with the Rex company. Successively thereafter he was with Nestor, the New York Motion Picture Company and Selig. From Selig he went to the Famous Players studio as leading man for Mary Pickford and Marguerite Clark. He attracted universal attention and received numerous offers, among them one from the American Film Company stipulating that he was to be co-starred with May Allison. Mr. Lockwood accepted this offer, and thus was created the Lockwood-Allison combination. After their contracts with the American expired, Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison joined the Metro forces, retaining their team for a year under the Metro banner, when Mr. Lockwood was made a star in his own right by R. A. Rowland, Metro's president.

The funeral was held from Campbell's Funeral Church, Broadway and Sixty-sixth street, New York, Tuesday, Oct. 22.

Erdmann Manages Cleveland F. P.-Lasky

The appointment, last week, of George W. Erdmann as manager of the Cleveland branch of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, reveals the rise of a young man from cameraman to the head of one of the largest film exchanges in the country.

Mr. Erdmann was born into the amusement business at Albany, N. Y., where he spent the earlier years of his life during the days when he received his education in the public schools. His father and his uncle for years controlled the musical situation in Albany. They were known as Erdmann and Madden's Band and Orchestra.

It was some time in 1890 that Mr. Erdmann started in the motion picture business as a producer on a small scale. During that year a Catholic priest brought back a large number of photographs of the Passion Play. These Mr. Erdmann transferred to slides, and for many months they were shown in churches, halls and theatres.

Influenza Takes Several from Industry

The Spanish influenza the past week has left a trail of death in the motion picture industry. The pneumonia scourge has left no branch of the business untouched, from players to exhibitors.

Harold Lockwood, Metro star, died suddenly in New York, as told in another story in this issue.

R. W. Lynch, vice-president of Triangle, died on October 21 in San Francisco while on a tour of the Triangle branches. Mr. Lynch, who was a brother of S. A. Lynch, succumbed to pneumonia, following influenza.

Albert H. LaBelle, owner of three Florida theatres, and secretary of the Florida Exhibitors' League, died October 20 of the influenza.

The Spanish influenza epidemic removed two very prominent exhibitors in the Dallas territory last week. These were James B. Wilson, owner of the Gem and Jewel theatres of Sherman, Texas, and Ben Meyers, manager of the Queen theatre, Tyler, Texas. Both men were very popular with the exchanges in Dallas, which sent floral offerings. Mr. Wilson has been engaged in the picture game in Sherman for a number of years. Mr. Meyers was also an old hand at the picture game. Their loss is keenly felt in this territory.

After an illness of but a few days, A. B. Doctoroff, sales manager of Southern Paramount in Dallas, died suddenly, a victim of the influenza epidemic, on Oct. 8, while in discharge of his duty in Palestine, Texas. He was buried Wednesday in the Jewish Cemetery, Dallas, and to his last resting place there followed the friends of "Doc," as he was familiarly known, numbering virtually every man on Film Row in Dallas.

C. C. Wells, of the Isis theatre, Cedar Rapids, Ia., died October 19, of influenza.

John Collins, the director, whose illness was reported last week, died October 23 at 4 p. m. His wife, Viola Dana, the motion picture star, is very low with the same ailment, influenza

Vitagraph Makes One for Canada Drive

Besides making six Liberty Loan pictures for the recent United States Liberty Loan drive, Vitagraph has made a picture for the Canadian Government to be used in its 1918 Victory Loan campaign. The picture was made under the personal supervision of Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company of America, and was directed by Wilfrid North. Agnes Ayres, Templar Saxe, Charles Kent, Harry Kendall and others are in the cast.

Nathan Manages the Symphony

Al Nathan, who until recently was at the Broadway theatre in New York, and later at the Holman theatre in Montreal, has been transferred to the Symphony theatre, New York. Mr. Nathan is now in full charge of affairs at that theatre.

Sherry Transfers Offices to General

Conservation Prompts Move by Which Pioneer Organization Takes Over Selling and Physical Distribution—Sherry Service to Maintain Separate Identity

FRANK TICHENOR, vice-president of General Film, and William L. Sherry joined hands this week on the biggest film deal so far of the fall season. The result is the transfer of the William L. Sherry Service to the General Film Company—in so far as the selling and physical distribution of the product is concerned.

Aside from this conservation move, securing large savings in overhead expense and routine work, the William L. Sherry Service will retain its separate identity and home offices as heretofore. In addition, New York, Northern New Jersey and Western Connecticut will continue to be served with the Sherry program from its own exchange in New York City.

The entire deal is in line with the policy of conservation long advocated by Frank Tichenor, and which now finds the Hodkinson, United and Sherry programs as well as many independent series going through the General Offices.

Takes Effect at Once

According to the terms of the agreement, the branch offices of the Wm. L. Sherry Service will be discontinued at once and will be taken over by the local branches of the General Film Company in the fourteen cities outside of New York where the Sherry Service has been represented.

Mr. Sherry was beaming with satisfaction when seen at his offices following the completion of the new deal. "I feel free at last," said he, "to give my full time and attention to the quality of the Sherry Program and the efficiency of the Sherry Service, now that the physical handling of the product is placed in the hands of a distributing organization that has facilities for handling film that are unsurpassed.

"These are extraordinary times and business of all kinds must adjust itself to constantly changing conditions. Conservation of material and of man power has come very much into vogue, and any plan that helps to eliminate waste is to be considered as a patriotic service. The handling of the Wm. L. Sherry Service by the General Film Company is strictly a conservation measure. Every separate organization entails a separate set of overhead expenses. This is particularly true of an exchange organization. In ordinary times this may be justified, perhaps. But in times like these, sensible men agree that everything should be done to lower the fixed charges of doing business.

"One of the best known ways of eliminating overhead expense is to merge parallel interests, where such a merger is feasible and equitable. Consequently it did not take Frank A. Tichenor, general manager of the General Film Company, and myself long to come to a complete understanding and agreement along those lines. Our arrangement is in the form of a contract, distinctly fair to both sides, and continuing for a definitely stated period.

"By this arrangement a considerable load is taken off my shoulders. In all my exchange experience my watchword has been 'Service.' My arrangement with the General Film Company to take over the actual work of distribution leaves me free to devote my entire time to the matter of service. There is no more admirable or thorough film distributing organization than the General Film Company. It covers the United States and Canada to the farthest ends. By virtue of long establishment its system and personnel are settled and reliable. So far as booking and transportation and general exchange detail are concerned, my troubles are over. The 'General' will take good care of all of that.

"And that leaves me free to do what I have wanted to do—to devote my time to actual contact and acquaintance with the exhibitor. When I left the Paramount organization and started the Wm. L. Sherry Service, a few months ago, I had it definitely planned to spend practically all of my time on the road keeping in close touch with the exhibitor. The exigencies of war time have interfered with my plans until my recent affiliation with the General Film Company. Now I am foot-loose and I am going to demonstrate the meaning of real service. From this time on my time will be devoted to seeing that the exhibitor who books the Sherry Program is getting everything that is coming to him. Every additional help that can possibly be given will be forthcoming.

"According to my present plans, I expect to cover the entire territory two or three times a year and meet in person every exhibitor who does or does not use the Wm. L. Sherry Service."

May Add More Stars

The arrangement with the General Film Company will bring about no change in the present Sherry Program, except for the later addition of one or two more stars. The Sherry Program at present consists of the following contributing producing companies: the Frank A. Keeney Productions, featuring Catherine Calvert; DeLuxe Pictures, Inc., featuring Doris Kenyon; the Golden West Producing Company, featuring the ever popular G. M. Anderson; the Harold J. Binney Productions, featuring Vangie Valentine, and the Burlingham Travel Pictures.

Catherine Calvert is now in the midst of her fifth production under the auspices of Frank A. Keeney, in a story entitled "For Her Family's Honor," by E. Lloyd Sheldon.

Doris Kenyon is about to begin her fourth production on the Sherry Program. The working title of this feature is "Twilight." It is an adaptation of "The Alchemy of Love," which appeared in the October number of the Metropolitan Magazine.

G. M. Anderson returns to the screen via the Sherry Program, after an absence of many months. One of Mr. Anderson's first feature releases is "Shootin' Mad," which opened at the Strand, New York, October 21.

Vangie Valentine, the newest star on the Sherry Program, is sponsored by Harold J. Binney. She is now at work on her first production, "Vedvet and Rags," written by George Edwards Hall.

CONSERVATION

General Film-Sherry Action in Line With W. A. J.'s Editorials

CONGRATULATIONS are due William L. Sherry and Frank Tichenor for a move that is a real step towards motion picture conservation—in the transfer of Sherry distribution to G. F. offices.

Incidentally—when we first met Frank Tichenor after the deal had been announced and expressed our good wishes he said: "Well, it is in line with the policies of conservation that we have always advocated in the General organization and that William A. Johnston has so long and ably championed in Motion Picture News. It is just another one of the things which W. A. J. has been hammering at and which are slowly but surely coming to pass."

Rogers Gets Nomination to Congress

Gustavus A. Rogers, of Rogers and Rogers, who is quite well known to the motion picture industry, has been nominated as a Democratic candidate for Congress in the Twenty-ninth Congressional District, comprising Rensselaer, Saratoga, Washington and Warren counties.

Mr. Rogers has a residence in Warren County, where he spends a considerable portion of the year. He also has an office at Glens Falls, as well as at 66 Broadway, New York, and is connected with several of the industrial enterprises there.

Mr. Rogers will be remembered on account of his activity in the motion picture patents suits and his being for many years the attorney for William Fox and the Fox Film Corporation.

An Anonymous Letter

MOTION PICTURE NEWS is in receipt of the following communication which it publishes, despite the fact that it came unsigned in a plain envelope, because of its undoubted interest to the thousands of film salesmen throughout the country.

The article bears the heading, "A Few Words for the Salesmen, Please!" and then follows:

When the summer season sets in, film exchanges throughout the country begin to anticipate the exhibitor asking for a reduction in the price of his service, and the exchange in turn plans just what argument they will use to refute this request. In most cases the exhibitor either is made to sustain the loss at the same price of service, or cancel his present service; or go without. The exchange, in these instances seem to feel that the exhibitor is not at all fair—that when the exhibitor is enjoying good business, during the cool season, he is not willing to share his profits, by paying a better price for the service he receives. This may be very true.

BUT

With the epidemic of Influenza at hand, the exchange is playing the very game that he expresses displeasure at from the exhibitor. In good times, when business is at its best, and the profits on productions are enormous, the salesman is not given a fair increase in his salary, in proportion to the amount of business he is securing for his firm, but is told NOT to ask for any increase in salary. And now, NOW with the epidemic but two or three weeks in swing, the exchange uses the same tactics as the summer "crier," and lays off the bulk of its selling men. The men who are really responsible for the business that is carried upon the books of their respective exchanges. The salesmen are the under-pay of the industry; they are discharged at the mood of their superiors; they are given less consideration than an ordinary office girl or boy. They are the mainstay of the exchange, and are really the most essential body of men connected with the sales departments or exchanges. It is therefore unjust and without reason that the salesmen have been given a lay-off without pay, when at the same time exchange managers, and other higher-ups are holding their jobs at preposterous salaries, when they, so far as the exhibitor is concerned, are the least needed, for the upkeep of the theatre.

Most every business has its good or bad seasons. Every business, with but a few exceptions, has a sales force to support. In almost every other industry the sales force is respected, and sustained, not in the spirit of "doing them a favor" to keep them, but because they are a necessary asset to the maintenance of the business. In the film business it seems to be just the opposite. If the film industry is not founded on fairness and justice to all—it is certainly not an AMERICAN BUSINESS, but instead is an autocratic business. If the film industry cannot survive but a few weeks of poor business, and maintain their sales force through but a short period of trials—it is a business to be pitied, or rather, not a business at all.

Will the trade papers allow this condition to exist? Or will they take upon themselves as the only means of bringing to light some of the radically mistaken methods in the industry? The salesmen support all issues put to them by the trade papers, why can't the papers in turn help them to further their just cause? They need it and need it badly RIGHT NOW.

In and Out of Town

E. S. Flynn of Minneapolis, until recently the manager of the Fox Film exchange in that city, is visiting in New York City.

"Smiling" Bill Parsons, of the National Film Corporation of America, whose comedies are distributed through Goldwyn, is in New York from the West Coast.

Monte Katterjohn, the scenario writer, who has been doing special work for Paramount, is expected in New York this week.

Reginald Barker, Goldwyn director, has gone to the Coast to direct a new picture immediately the influenza ban is lifted.

T. S. Cooper of Montreal, secretary of the General Film Company (Limited) of Canada, was a visitor at General Film headquarters in New York last week.

Rogers Visits Select

Branch Manager C. R. Rogers of Select's Boston office paid a visit to the home office and conferred with General Manager Arthur S. Kane. Mr. Rogers also paid his respects to President Lewis J. Selznick.

Chicago Famous Players-Lasky Moves

The Chicago exchange of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, formerly located at 220 South State street, moved into its new offices at 845 Wabash avenue on Oct. 14. This building, which is eight stories in height, stands at the northeast corner of Ninth street, one block from Michigan Boulevard.

Of the eight floors in the building the exchange departments now occupy six. On the third floor are the offices of the district manager, his staff and the sales forces, including the contract department.

The fifth floor is occupied by the publicity and accessories department offices, the film renovating room and a large advertising display room, where lithographs, photographs and rotogravures will be kept on display for the purpose of augmenting accessories sales. On this floor is a theatre capable of seating one hundred people, with a projection room equipped with two of the latest Simplex machines. In the rear of the theatre is a special press stand for the convenience of press representatives in the reviewing of pictures.

The sixth and seventh floors are devoted to the storage of advertising paper and accessories and the preparation of the same for shipment. On the eighth floor are ten vaults for the storage of film, each provided with a thirty-inch vent through the roof, topped with an eight-foot stack.

Honor Roll

E. Richard Schayer just finished a three-months' course at the Central Infantry Officers' Training School and has been commissioned a Second Lieutenant with prospects of getting to France this winter. Mr. Schayer resigned from Paralta last Spring and enlisted in the Regular Army.

John Gilbert will have a chance to do another picture in Los Angeles before going into military service as the Spanish influenza prevents the Government from calling the men into the camp as early as the original schedule.

Manager W. F. Sexton of the Family theatre, Toronto, has received notification that his son, with the Canadian Army in France, has been severely wounded in the left leg.

Herndon Edmond, Baltimore representative for General Film Company, sent in his resignation to Manager J. E. Flax of the Washington office last week, he having been called to the Army. Mr. Edmond has been six years with General Film Company and was considered one of its most valued and loyal employes.

Fox May Secure Minneapolis Theatre

Rumors were current in Minneapolis last week that following the run of Griffith's "Hearts of the World" at the Minneapolis Shubert that that theatre would pass under the management of William Fox, who would present "Salome," with Theda Bara; "18 to 45," "Why America Will Win" and other big features there. No one connected with the Fox exchange there would give out any information about such a deal being under consideration.

It is believed that Minneapolitans would welcome Fox into the local exhibiting fold.

R. K. Evans, for three months manager of the Fox exchange there, resigned his position Saturday, Oct. 5, and has been succeeded by D. Leo Dennison, former special representative for Paramount in the East. Max J. Weisfeldt, formerly connected with the Wholesome Films Corporation of Chicago, has become assistant to Mr. Dennison. Mr. Evans has not made known his future plans, but it is expected that he will remain in the local film field for a time at least.

Flynn of Minneapolis Visits New York

E. S. Flynn, of Minneapolis, was a New York visitor last week. Mr. Flynn has traveled the mid-northwest territory for years, and until recently was manager of the Fox Exchange in Minneapolis.

Just previous to the Fox position, Mr. Flynn was one of Manager Peavey's associates in the Famous-Players Lasky exchange at Minneapolis. He says that Motion Picture News has always been going very strong in his territory.

Tax Fight Threatens Another Split

Exhibitors Recently Organized Into Branch of National Association Hint at "Double Cross" by Manufacturers—File Protest with Senate Finance Committee

OMINOUS signs of another split between organized exhibitors and the manufacturers—such as followed the levying of the fifteen cent a reel charge last year—came this week with the presentation of a protest to the Senate Finance Committee by the Exhibitors Branch of the National Association.

The exhibitors, through a committee of which Alfred S. Black is chairman, allege that the manufacturers, after agreeing to offer no substitute tax plans to Congress, have filed a memorandum suggesting changes in the proposed revenue bill which arbitrarily place the burden of the new rental taxes on the exhibitor.

The original draft of the bill by the House Ways and Means Committee called for a ten per cent tax on rentals to be paid by the producer. It was understood in the industry that this would naturally find its way to the exhibitor's shoulders. But the substitute said to have been offered by the manufacturers calls for the reduction of the tax to five per cent and the insertion of words in the bill stating clearly that it shall be paid by the exhibitor.

"The Agreement Broken"

From Alfred S. Black, MOTION PICTURE NEWS is in receipt of the exhibitors' memorandum, together with the following explanatory letter:

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

I enclose you herewith copy of amendment to Brief filed with the Senate Finance Committee. In view of the action taken by the Manufacturers, there seemed to be no other way open except to file protest. To be sure some Manufacturers have assumed the tax but the vast majority have profiteered thereby, the profit on the tax amounting to more than the actual loss assumed by the few so that the Manufacturers, as a whole, have not paid 1 cent in taxation to the Government.

It is too bad for Congress to realize the Industry is divided upon this question, but the representative of the Manufacturers broke their agreement made with the Exhibitors at Washington and forced the issue. There is no reason in the world why they should not pay their just share of taxation as they can afford to pay same equally as well and much more so, in my judgment, than the Exhibitors branch can afford to pay the tax, in any event, it should be equitably distributed which I am in hopes that it may be.

Yours very truly,
ALFRED S. BLACK.

The memorandum enclosed with Mr. Black's letter follows:

AMENDMENT TO MEMORANDUM dated September 20, 1918.

Prepared by a committee of Exhibitors' Branch of the National Association Motion Picture Industry.

ALFRED S. BLACK, Chairman.

Whereas at a meeting of the representatives of Producers and Distributors' Branch and the representatives of the Exhibitors' Branch of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry at Washington prior to hearing before Senate Finance Committee, it was agreed that no taxations substitute be filed with the Finance Committee.

And whereas the committee representing the manufacturers have filed an amendment to their original brief as follows:

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO SECTION 900 OF THE REVENUE BILL OF 1918.

After the word "producer" in the preamble to Section 900, Title 1X, and after the word "producer" in the first line Section 904-Excise Taxes, insert the word "distributor."

Amend subdivision (5) of Section 900 to read as follows:

(5) On positive motion picture film containing a picture ready for protection and sold, leased or licensed to an exhibitor for exhibition within the United States, five per cent. (5%) of the price collected for which so sold, leased or licensed; said five per cent. (5%) to be paid by the exhibitor to the vendor, lessor or licensor, provided, however, that if any person being a manufacturer, producer, distributor, or importer of positive motion picture film containing a picture ready for projection, shall himself exhibit such positive motion picture film for profit, such person shall be deemed an exhibitor, and said five per cent. (5%) shall be calculated on the fair rental value of such positive motion picture film at the time and place where exhibited.

We desire to protest against the phraseology of the aforesaid amendment whereby it places all of said tax upon the exhibitors.

We admit the manutacturers cannot stand the percentage tax as proposed in the House Bill, but wish to earnestly reiterate that the exhibitors would be doubly overburdened as stated in brief already filed with your committee. We wish also to call your particular attention to the fact that the manufacturers (other than the income tax to which all are liable) are not paying one cent of additional taxation, all the burden of various taxations being placed upon the exhibitors.

We believe that all branches of an industry should be treated equitably, and, if after considering our protests, Congress decides to place some excise or percentage tax upon the Motion Picture Industry that said tax be equitably distributed over the different branches of the amusement business.

In view of the very serious condition the exhibitors of the United States now find themselves placed in, we believe it fair and essential to again strongly emphasize that excess burden of taxation upon the exhibitors will work out very much to the great disadvantage of the best interests of the Government for the reasons heretofore expressed. All of which is respectfully submitted on behalf of the Exhibitors' Branch of the National Association Motion Picture Industry representing the motion picture theatres of the United States.

DATED ROCKLAND, MAINE, OCT. 15, 1918.

Coal Question Bothers Canada Houses

The opening guns of a verbal duel between the exhibitors and some of the churches of the Province of Ontario with respect to a question as to whether the churches or the theatres should be closed if the coal situation becomes acute this winter have been fired at Toronto. The first volley was fired when the convention of the Epworth League of the Methodist Church, in session recently at Stratford, Ont., voted to ask the Government to close the theatres to conserve coal if necessary.

The answer came from Manager James Crang of the Oakwood theatre, one of Toronto's brightest and best suburban theatres, who offered the use of his theatre, rent, heat and light free, for Sunday church services, so that there would be no need for the opening of one or more churches in the Oakwood district at all this winter. It was pointed out by Mr. Crang that his theatre was heated by oil-burning furnaces, so that the coal question really does not affect him at all.

It is also pointed out that almost one-quarter of the moving picture theatres in Toronto have been using wood, soft coal or nothing to heat the buildings, and will continue to do so as long as the weather will permit. This does not take into account the several houses which have, or are installing, oil-burning furnaces.

Laemmle's Secretary Goes to Mayer

Bernard Miller, who has for the past year been secretary to Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has resigned his position to accept an appointment as assistant to the president in the Louis B. Mayer organization, which has opened offices at 2 West Forty-fifth street. He will have virtual charge of the New York office and will be Mr. Mayer's personal representative in New York City.

Posner Buys Theatre at New London

Morris Posner, formerly exchange manager at New Haven, Conn., has purchased the Empire theatre, at New London, Conn., and is preparing to open it as soon as the epidemic of influenza passes.

S. P. Farber has succeeded Mr. Posner as manager of the New Haven exchange of the American Feature Film Company.

THE READER HAS HIS SAY

"Bar the Big Stars" Says This Prosperous Exhibitor

PRINCESS THEATRE COMPANY
HIGH CLASS MOTION PICTURES
ODEBOLT, IOWA

October 15, 1918.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City.
Gentlemen:—

With prospects good for a doubled admission tax it seems high time that exhibitors wake up to what, in my opinion, is the cause of the proposed taxes, namely, high salaried stars and overproduction of films.

Judging from the reception accorded Mr. Brady and other prominent film men by the finance committee it would seem that this same committee thinks the film industry rich and prosperous simply because a few stars are paid enormous salaries and certain companies are turning out such a vast amount of films.

It seems a sad irony of fate that thousands of exhibitors should be taxed heavily for building up a few overpaid stars. In a way it is the exhibitor's own fault although the main fault lies with greedy producers bidding against each other and thus boosting star salaries sky high.

The stars have a right to get all they possibly can but when some of them think they are worth two or three million dollars a year it's just about time to call a halt. If companies would pay the high salaries and then keep quiet about it things would not be so bad, but when the grand and glorious salaries are press agented to the skies it's no wonder people think the moving picture industry is one grand succession of riches after another.

If overpaid stars and overproduction are not rooted out of the film industry during these days of influenza and taxes there is no hope that they ever will be.

For my part no Fairbanks or Pickford or other blazing stars will be shown in my theatre and the people will never miss them either. We have not shown the above stars for a year and a half and not a single person has asked that we do show them. That looks as if stars are not indispensable to the business. We have made five times more money on big specials without featured stars than we ever have on any star films. Seems to me that's a mighty good indication of the trend of the picture business for other exhibitors around here have had the same experience.

We hope excessive salaried stars will be boycotted by exhibitors so that conditions within the film industry will be readjusted as they should be.

Yours very truly,
O. W. LARSON.

A Kick on Liberty Loan Films—and Others —From a Live Wire

LYRIC THEATRE
Terrell, Texas.
October 1, 1918.

Mr. W. A. Johnston,
MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City, N. Y.
Dear Sir:

It was with much interest that I read your editorials in the issue of October 5 and the preceding number. The thought is by no means new to the exhibitor. I always suspected that we (the exhibitors) were the biggest bunch of boobs in any line of business. But I find they are about the wisest in this industry. You'll have to admit this even though it may hurt. You may look around you and see everywhere you go, theatres that cost from $30,000 to $1,000,000. You may look over their poster boards and see every brand of pictures made. And if you notice on an average they are all making money. They have proven they are wise enough to pass the advance on to the public that they've educated to like the stars that they show, whether the manufacturers or producers pay this particular star $10,000 or $1,000,000. per year

I've written you several letters but I suppose they were too radical to publish, as they never appear in print. But in this instance I wish to point out a few instances in which the exhibitor, rather the average exhibitor, is on the job, and equal to all emergencies.

We were advised through the columns of the trade journals that the stars were producing some Liberty Loan films, to assist in raising the Fourth Liberty Loan. We immediately advised exchanges of dates we wanted to use their respective releases. All bookings were okayed. We were to receive one each day from the exchanges beginning on September 27. We received our first one October 1; on September 30 our quota of "The Fighting Fourth" was over the top. We had prepared for this Fourth Loan ahead of the Drive. We showed to about 1,000 of our patrons (at cost) "Gerard's Four Years in Germany" and "Pershing's Crusaders." Now for the next fifteen days (maybe) we will get some of the special Liberty Loan Films. I trust they will prove interesting. Our bookings have been demoralized, and some have canceled bookings, advising us that we will receive one each day. Now these will conflict with other dates that have been previously arranged, which is directly against Washington instructions, as we had explicit instructions to show only one subject each day. Congested distribution will probably give us a half dozen of those subjects on some days, on others none. The exchanges have failed miserably. This is by the way of summary. The conditions are not to be improved by exhibitor nor by the distributor nor by the manufacturer, nor by the actor or actresses, but Government control, which is right in line with conservation, would eliminate all these wasteful extravagances.

For instance, the many idle days. The waste in express charges, the millions of dollars wasted annually in the poster and photographs, the exhibitor buys and has baled after one day's use, and awaits an opportunity to dispose of at 25 cents per cwt. One wise exchange manager who saw he was short of paper sent out a circular letter asking exhibitors to go through their paper and return all put out by them. Of course this was to help conserve and it is the patriotic duty of the exhibitor—only he paid from 50 cents to $5.00 for his lobby display and must send it back to them for resale. Wonder why they don't add a postscript asking exhibitors to prepay express.

No, Mr. Johnston, the exhibitor is and has proven to the exchanges, the manufacturers and all other branches of the industry that he is competent to handle his end of the game. If service is too high he uses something else that costs less. Let Uncle get hold of the situation, and the desired results will be forthcoming, as is demonstrated in the handling of the Government film, "America's Answer," figured on a basis of 25 per cent of gross receipts for so many months past. The proof of the pudding is in the eating of it.

Yours very truly,
E. L. BYER.

From a Town Which Has Met the Influenza Ban

THE SPRAGG AMUSEMENT COMPANY
Bellaire, Ohio, Oct. 21, 1918.

Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Gentlemen—After reading page after page in your valuable paper of houses closed and theatres out of business by the terrible "flu" epidemic, it might be refreshing to learn of one city right in the midst of the epidemic that is not closed—Bellaire, Ohio, an 18,000 city on the banks of the Ohio.

Of course we have our share of the epidemic and have had a few deaths, but our Board of Health took a sensible view of the matter and has not ordered a general closing. In fact we have been asked to help in the epidemic, running slides how to prevent it and posters in front of the house advising people the best course to take.

Wheeling, W. Va., just across the river from us, has been closed three weeks, and really has no larger percentage of cases than we have. Martins Ferry and Bridgeport, Ohio, five miles north, both closed for a week, but are open again. Barnesville and Cambridge west are closed; Shadyside south, with no cases, is closed, as in Moundsville, Benwood and McMechem, across the river in West Virginia.

An unusual situation exists at Bridgeport and Martins Ferry, both saloon towns, have quarantined against Wheeling, a dry town across the river. No one is allowed to cross any of the bridges from West Virginia to Ohio.

When the "flu" epidemic first struck this section we attended the Board of Health meeting and took an active part in the discussion, and our Mr. Spragg had considerable to do with postponing immediate action. When the first scare was over no actiion had been taken. If we had not been on the ground floor, we would have been closed with the balance. We have not as many cases as Martins Ferry and Cambridge, cities here in our class that did close. We have had the local papers publish Dr. Copeland's statement about New York closing and it has had its effect here.

With best wishes,
The Spragg Amusement Co.,
By Ben L. Morris.

P. S.—Just read in "Wids" of Mr. Johnson's terrible loss. Extend to him our heartfelt sympathy.

Here's One of Unusual Interest—He Mixes Wit with Logic for Quite a Letter

Motion Picture News:

To save you postage by further solicitations and replying to yours of recent date, we are advising that we are subscribers to the NEWS when we were operating the Majestic, and bring the service with us to the Airdome, which we have owned since April 11, 1918. This subscription to the undersigned does not expire for some time to come, and there is little question about the renewal at time of expiration, not only for the information your columns pound into the nut of the exhibitor, but to read as well the sympathetic feeling the producer has for Poor Exhibitor.

Some time since, your files will show, you requested a review of our operations and experiences that to this time remains unanswered for two reasons: first, the writer being engaged with other business beside the cares of a motion picture house, is too busy to become a correspondent for a publication of the very high-class order we have concluded the MOTION PICTURE NEWS to be, and display the intelligence entitled to space in its columns.

Second, the report we could have given you then or that we could compile now would not be a solicitor of advertising space from many we note utilize same at the present time.

Our report carrying with it a review of amateurs in the motion picture business would be a very interesting comedy for the "Scientific American," "Popular Mechanics," and such publications, but you would hardly desire to publish the facts that the "boobs'" down at Dunkirk, Indiana, who launched a stock bark on the motion picture world last December, fell victims to the pirates working or lurking in that territory. It would make a sensational heading wouldn't it, and then to go on and name the pirates working the field and uncover the vultures that squawk about the best interests of the Poor Exhibitor, and name the dates of our exploitation wherein we signed a NEW CONTRACT for our protection to learn that before we could get away we were to exhibit for a period of a quarter of a year or more the first RELEASES of this philanthropic producer that made a picture of anything you desired to call it made in a storm.

Contracts made for prints for certain dates and set back the weeks because said contract was not signed by branch manager, the branch manager wasn't here, so they kept our money, or we suppose they will keep it, as at this time it has never been returned, but they are still preaching the best interests of the "Poor Exhibitor," and may be we are subscribing our share toward the space it takes to tell him about his better day coming, and if he gets any pleasure from exulting over his future prospects, we are glad to lend a hand to his pleasure, but we don't get much consolation from the squawking now—we have been pleased and let us say to you now that the influence your publication has over the new beginner looking for facts, caused us to put a great deal of confidence in the lauding of the exhibitors' interests and made us careless.

However, this was possibly cheap education—send one of the vulture representatives to Dunkirk now and you will be safe in going with him as far as he can go.

Let us say too, however, we are cleaning our service book, and when we are around with the new order of things we will not be ashamed to answer questions we were asked by you weeks ago, "What service do you run?" We will answer you later, when we trust we can mention their names as producers that render service making possible the existence of the man that pays for the existence of the industry and makes possible its continuance or possibly its perpetuation.

If it were possible for natural force to weed out these parasites in the industry, the picturization of its procedure would make the crowning production of the century, with the punch and with the appeal to producer, exhibitor and fan who pays for it all. We would like to say something about the percentage parasites that are now seeking the large share of the receipts from showings of war pictures who will after the war allow "Poor Exhibitor" to buy "lemons," and all at the regular service rate as soon as they are old enough and exploit his own patriotism by insisting that their prints were shown in every hamlet to assist the Government in winning the war, forgetting they pocketed all the receipts from excess admissions made possible because of the patriotic ardor of really true Americans—truly great is the "Dollar Patrio," and they are on a parallel—"capital and labor's interests are identical," so "produceers and exhibitors' interests are identical," no—not that we know.

Winding Up the Liberty Loan

"Zukor Day" Gathers in Half Million for Loan

"Adolph Zukor Day" at the Liberty theatre conducted in New York by the Stage Women's War Relief marked up a total of $548,450 in sales of Liberty Bonds. William S. Hart, Elsie Ferguson and James Montgomery Flagg were among those who aided in raising this sum.

But for the fact that "Adolph Zukor Day" had been postponed from the date originally set because of the Liberty Parade it is expected that a much larger sum would have been secured as an extensive program had been arranged.

Subscriptions of $318,700 from the members of the organization of the Famous Players-Lasky Company helped to swell the day's total. In addition the corporation also subscribed $50,000 to the credit of Adolph Zukor and $100,000 to be credited to the various exchanges throughout the country.

Another $100,000 came from Charles O. Baumann, who happened to be in the Famous Players-Lasky offices and expressed a desire to have his subscription listed to the credit of Adolph Zukor Day.

The individual subscriptions were as follows:

Adolph Zukor	$ 25,000
Jesse L. Lasky	20,000
Arthur S. Friend	20,000
J. E. Brulatour	25,000
Emil E. Shauer	15,000
Daniel Frohman	10,000
Blanche Lasky	12,000
Hiram Abrams	10,000
Hugh Ford	9,000
J. C. Graham	2,000
Ethel Clayton	1,000
Elek J. Ludvigh	1,000
Walter E. Greene	1,000
Charles O. Baumann	100,000
Apeda Studios	2,050
Employees, Home Office and N. Y. Branch	14,000
Employees, Fifty-sixth Street Studio	7,400
Employees, Ft. Lee Studio	3,550
Famous Players-Lasky Corporation	150,000
Total	$428,000

Fairbanks Gets Six Million Within Forty Hours

A trip by aeroplane mail from Washington to New York and back again, a speech from the steps of the Treasury Department in New York, a "one man parade" up New York's principal thoroughfare and a wind-up speech from the same platform with Secretary McAdoo, in Washington—these comprise the eventful forty hours of Douglas Fairbanks' life that netted subscriptions of six million dollars for the Fourth Liberty Loan.

Fairbanks made the aeroplane trip to New York in order to match Barney Baruch's subscription of one million. But the million was matched so quickly that he remained in New York long enough to bring the total to six. In the New York party were John Fairbanks and Ted Reed of the Fairbanks Company, and Pete Smith, who took up Bennie Zeidman's work when the latter was stricken in Chicago with pneumonia.

Secretary McAdoo paid a glowing tribute to the work of the screen in his speech welcoming Fairbanks on his return to Washington.

Thirty-two Million! That's William Farnum's Figure

The total of Liberty Loan sales to William Farnum's credit reaches the staggering figure of $32,000,000.

Mr. Farnum's high-water mark was reached on Thursday of the drive's concluding week at a Carnegie Hall meeting presided over by President William Howard Taft. Taking the stage after the former President, the Fox star started his plea with a recitation of his poem concerning Belgium, "My Prophecy," and then launched into an auction of war relics. To such a pitch of enthusiasm did he work the audience that he held their attention for two hours and brought the subscriptions to $32,000,000.

Later in the same evening Mr. Farnum secured subscriptions of $75,000 at the Riverside theatre, where he was accompanied by William Fox. Personal appearances at Fox theatres during the early part of the campaign had netted over a quarter million in purchases.

At a Lambs' Club meeting, Mr. Farnum was the recipient of enthusiastic praise from Edward N. Hurley, chairman of the United States Shipping Board, after his recitation of "My Prophecy."

Geraldine's Dinner Adds $4,000,000 to Her Sum

The dinner Geraldine Farrar gave at Sherry's to 300 wealthy persons added $4,000,000 to the sales of Liberty bonds already credited to her efforts. One million of this sum came in response to Miss Farrar's pledge to sing the "Marseillaise."

There were speeches by Thomas W. Lamont, who presided at the dinner; Ambassador Boris Bahkmetieff, of Russia, U. S. Marshal McCarthy, Sheriff Knott and Police Commissioner Enright, and pleadings by Miss Farrar.

Some of the larger subscriptions were $100,000 from J. P. Morgan, $100,000 from the Farrar family table, where the Goldwyn star's mother, father and husband were sitting, and $200,000 from Henri Bendel, who creates the gowns Miss Farrar wears in her series of Goldwyn pictures.

Fox Booth at "Expo." Sells $89,000 Worth

A final checking up on the last night of the motion picture exposition at Madison Square Garden showed that the William Fox booth disposed of $89,000 worth of bonds throughout the week.

During the week the film players who aided the loan workers in the Fox booth were Jane and Katherine Lee, the Fox baby Grands, Lucy Fox and Irene Blackwell.

The booth was presided over by Mrs. Louise Castle for the Metropolis Canvass Committee, and great assistance in the sale of bonds was given by M. R. Andrews, bond campaign captain for the precinct.

Liberty Tank Rolls Over the Million Mark

Clarence H. Geldart, of the Famous Players-Lasky stock company, who returned to the Lasky studio last week, reported that Fourth Liberty Loan sales to the amount of $1,096,600 were recorded by the Liberty Tank on tour during an itinerary of nine days. James Roban was in charge of the tank and among the speakers were Mr. Geldart and Mary Miles Minter.

They covered among other towns and cities Long Beach, Garden Grove, Annaheim, Santa Ana, Fullerton, Whittier, Orange, Pomona, Corona, Riverside, Hemet, San Jacinto, Paris and Elsinore. At Riverside the sales were $149,450. In Huntington Beach, a town of 16,000, and with a $21,000 quota, the sales reached $42,000. At Hemet, which was almost destroyed by an earthquake a few months ago, $34,000 worth of bonds were sold.

Theda Bara Sells $70,000 in Forty Minutes

Theda Bara set a record at the Liberty theatre in front of the New York Public Library, when she sold $70,000 worth of Liberty bonds in forty minutes to a crowd that packed Fifth Avenue from curb to curb. It was the most enthusiastic and profitable meeting so far held at the Stage Women's War Relief playhouse.

Miss Bara started off with a $10,000 pledge for herself, whereupon there arose a babel of voices and the sales were on, soon reaching the $70,000 mark.

National Studio Boosts Loan Along

The National Film Corporation Studio at Gower and Santa Monica boulevard, Hollywood, went "over the top" in the loan drive with a subscription of slightly over $50,000, which makes an average of a trifle more than $1,000 subscription for every man, woman and child employed at this plant.

William Parsons made his third subscription for this loan, the amount being $25,000.

The National organization, headed by Parsons, was to have been in charge of Tank Victory, in Central Park, one evening, but he was suddenly called East.

"Cavell" Film for N. Y. Strand

Plunkett and Carroll Production Starring Julia Arthur in "The Woman the Germans Shot," Gets Broadway Showing

Added to the most exceptional volume of high endorsement which has already been accorded the new Jos. L. Plunkett-Frank J. Carroll production, "The Woman the Germans Shot," has come the further attestation to the superiority of this timely motion picture in the conclusion of arrangements between the producers and Manager Harold Edel, for the initial presentation of this production at the Strand for the week beginning October 27.

Under the supervision of Director John G. Adolfi, the producers and their staff of assistants have been untiring in their efforts through the past ten days aiming toward the completion of their production and the Broadway presentation in what would mark a record time for such an accomplishment.

Manager Edel's enthusiasm over this Plunkett-Carroll production has been indeed marked. His presentation is promised to set a new mark in Broadway showings of motion pictures.

In the portrayal of the character of the British Red Cross nurse, Edith Cavell, from whose immortal martyrdom this production has been taken, Julia Arthur has elicited for herself a most unusual praise.

The plan for distribution of "The Woman the Germans Shot" is being withheld by the producers until some time during the next week.

Virginia Pearson Entertains Wounded Marines

Virginia Pearson, William Fox star, last week entertained twenty-eight wounded marines, heroes from the battle of Chateau Thierry, at a theatre party at Loew's Metropolitan theatre, Brooklyn, with a supper party afterwards.

All of the lower boxes on one side of the theatre were reserved for the marines and the ladies of the Women's Motor Corps, who drove them from the base hospital at the Brooklyn Navy Yard. The boys were for the most part on crutches and all showed the evidence of battle scars.

The marines have now adopted Miss Pearson, or she them, and she will visit the hospital every Sunday morning hereafter, bringing with her cigarettes and delicacies, and sometimes friends who will offer them a vaudeville show.

Canadian-Made Picture Reaches Screen

TORONTO, ONT.—The first real made-in-Canada five-reel photoplay had its initial presentation at the Strand theatre, Montreal, for the three days of Oct. 3 to 5. The picture, which is called "Power," was made by the Canadian National Features, of Trenton, Ontario, which company went into the hands of a receiver some time ago —after the taking of two features. The run at the Strand was arranged by George E. Brownridge, who was the general manager of the late company. The star of the picture is Holbrook Blinn.

Buffalo Manager Launches "Smoke Drive"

BUFFALO, N. Y.—E. C. Winegar, manager of the Central Park and Premier theatres, has undertaken to launch two drives for the Buffalo Evening News smokes' fund, the first of which was given Sunday evening, October 19, at Lafayette Square. Mr. Winegar has been also active in organizing relief associations in connection with local drafts boards, which provide entertainment and camp necessities for departing members of the national army.

Lust Seeks to Reclaim Disabled Soldiers

Sidney B. Lust, the exchangeman of Washington, D. C., has been appointed advisor to the Chief Educational Officer under the Surgeon-General of the U. S. Army, according to advices received this week. The appointment followed Mr. Lust's request that he be permitted to volunteer his time, work and facilities to the reclamation of wounded soldiers.

Mr. Lust has asked MOTION PICTURE NEWS to announce that all men qualified to assist in this work whom their draft boards have classified in "1-A limited service," write to him at 1209 E St., N. W., Washington, D. C., to be inducted into the service, and he will take up these applications with the officials. As the work broadens there will be need for good men, and the cause is certainly worthy of the best the motion picture industry can give.

Ince Heads New Branch of Film Division

A number of newspapers throughout the United States, with the co-operation of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, have engaged in the taking of motion pictures of the families of American soldiers overseas, to be sent to France as a pictorial message from home to those who are fighting to make the world safe for democracy. Director Charles S. Hart announces that Thomas H. Ince has been appointed advisory director of this new film activity, and will operate in conjunction with the Division of Films.

New Members of National Association

Applications for membership in the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry have been made by the Triangle Film Corporation, the Triangle Distributing Corporation and the Mutual Film Corporation. Thirteen distributing organizations are now represented in the ranks of the National Association and eighty-three producing companies.

Vitagraph Popularizing Its Many Serials

Beginning with "The Fighting Trail," in which William Duncan and Carol Holloway were featured, Vitagraph has set up many records in serial distribution. This fifteen-episode drama was released in September, 1917, and still is one of the most active units in Vitagraph service. It was followed by "Vengeance—and the Woman," in which the same stars were featured, and the newer production set a new record for the number of theatres booking a serial. This mark was in turn shattered by "The Woman in the Web," featuring Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon, and then William Duncan, in "A Fight for Millions," supported by an all-star cast including Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, shattered all previous records.

On October 21, Vitagraph's latest serial, "The Iron Test," was released, with Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway costarred, and the books of the Vitagraph Distributing Organization show that the advance bookings on this production were greater than those for any of its predecessors.

W. H. Sells Fatty Arbuckle Reissues Quickly

With the exception of two territories, the rights to the series of twenty-four single-reel Fatty Arbuckle re-issues have been sold by W. H. Productions Company.

The territories already disposed of are: New England to Boston Photoplay Co., New York State north of Westchester County to the Gardiner Syndicate of Buffalo, N. Y., eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey to Masterpiece Film Attractions of Philadelphia, western Pennsylvania and West Virginia to Standard Film Exchange of Pittsburgh, Ohio and Kentucky to Standard Film Service of Cleveland, Michigan to Strand Features of Detroit, Illinois, Indiana and southern Wisconsin to Bee Hive Film Exchange of Chicago; Virginia, Maryland, District of Columbia and Delaware to W. High Productions Co. of Baltimore; Kansas and Missouri to Emerald Film Company of St. Louis; Oklahoma and Texas to R. D. Lewis Film Co. of Oklahoma City, Okla.; California, Nevada and Arizona to Peerless Film Co. of San Francisco; Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana to Greater Features Co. of Seattle.

Rinehart Succeeds Hall

Director Charles S. Hart of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, announces the appointment of Robert E. Rinehart as manager of the Department of Film Production, to succeed Ray L. Hall, who has resumed his duties as news editor of the Screen Telegram. Mr. Rinehart is now installed at the laboratory of the Division of Films, in the Masonic Temple Building, Sixth avenue and Twenty-third street, New York, and is busy, with his staff, putting the finishing touches to "Under Four Flags," the third U. S. official war feature, which will have its first showing in November.

More About the Influenza Situation

soldiers' playhouses in the various army camps will be in operation again soon. The influenza menace is reported as disappearing from the camps as suddenly as it appeared. Heavy frosts in many sections is believed to have hastened the removal of the ban on Liberty theatres.

West Shows Little Improvement Thus Far

BUTTE, MONT.—Butte's show houses continue dark due to the closing order of the county board of health, following an outbreak of Spanish influenza. About 100 cases of the disease have been officially reported in Butte but indications are that the situation will be kept well under control. The action came like a bolt from the blue and theatre men were taken completely by surprise. All of them are acquiescing in good spirit to the inevitable.

DENVER, COLO.—The influenza epidemic is still raging in every Rocky Mountain state and all theatres as well as all other public places are still closed. It is hardly probable that the ban imposed by state executives and health departments will be lifted before November 1st. Every department of the motion picture business in Denver territory is at a standstill and no business is being transacted. Denver exchanges are open, but practically all employes have been given an indefinite layoff and road salesmen are for the most part included.

DALLAS, TEXAS.—All exchanges here continue to face a tremendous loss through reason of the fact that virtually every theatre in the territory, Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, is closed by the epidemic. All of the salesmen are in, and exchanges are receiving nothing but daily cancellations. Virtually the only big towns open at present writing are San Antonio, Waco and Fort Worth.

In the effort to meet the great need for nurses in stamping out the influenza epidemic in New York City, the Emergency Committee of the Health Commissioner asked the National Board of Review to prepare and distribute to the motion picture theatres in this city a slide asking for the aid of nurses and house helpers in the emergency. Slides were prepared. The exhibitors displayed their usual willingness to use their screens for the benefit of the public and the slide was widely used.

PORTLAND, OREGON.—Due to the Spanish influenza epidemic, Mayor Baker issued a proclamation October 10, which stated that all picture theatres and theatres must close, as well as churches, and all meetings. Orders were received Friday, October 11, by the Universal Film Exchanges of Portland, Seattle and Spokane, of which Sol Baum, of this city is district manager, closing the exchanges.

GREEN BAY, WIS.—Green Bay has been "all dressed up and no place to go" during the two weeks beginning September 29. As stated in recent correspondence, the motion picture houses, along with the theatres, dance halls, schools, roller skating rinks and churches were closed by orders of the Health Department to curb the spread of the Spanish "flu." Never since the introduction of public amusements has the city been so quiet. The lights have been out in the movie houses every night. Conditions showed some improvement at the close of the week of September 13, but orders came from the State Health Department to continue the closing order in effect at least one more week, and the Green Bay Health Commissioner was powerless to permit the houses in Green Bay to re-open.

TORONTO, ONT.—The health board axe fell in Toronto on Thursday, October 13, when an order was issued for the closing of all local places of amusement starting with Monday, October 21, and until further notice. A number of local exhibitors were consulted before the move was made and no objection was raised to the order.

"It is a good thing," declared Secretary Thomas Scott of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario, in reference to the order. "The exhibitors are always ready and willing to cooperate with the authorities when the public is to be benefited." Mr. Scott declared further, however, that the city should arrange for the partial closing of stores where people congregate and that the Government should facilitate the sale of stimulants on the order of physicians during the epidemic. These are, of course, more or less side issues.

Other Bulletins from "Mister Optimist"

SEATTLE, WASH. (Special).—Local theatres are of the opinion that they may be allowed to reopen on next Monday, October 28th, and are laying their plans accordingly.

The week's reports in Seattle show more influenza cases but fewer deaths, due to the older cases coming under control.

BUFFALO, N. Y. (Special).—November 1st is the probable opening date set by Buffalo theatre managers though nothing definite has been secured from the health authorities. But as long as the streets continue as deserted as they are now the managers are in no hurry to reopen. They are well satisfied to get a rest from their strenuous Liberty Loan efforts and clean houses.

ELGIN, ILL. (Special).—Though reports from the rest of the state are none too cheerful, Elgin is at present well satisfied and "knocking wood." There have been no signs of the Spanish influenza epidemic here. The picture shows are ready to reopen the instant the State-wide closing order is rescinded. Efforts of the managers to secure information regarding the date of this relief have brought hopes that before November 1st the epidemic will have waned sufficiently throughout the state to allow of reopening.

CINCINNATI, OHIO (Special).—Cincinnati motion picture theatres may reopen on Sunday according to the best posted men with whom MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative has spoken. The influenza situation is fast getting better and the health authorities indicate that if all continues to improve as well as at present there will be no objection to reopening on that date.

Producers Are Invited to Locate in Texas

The Chamber of Commerce at San Antonio, Texas, is an active, aggressive organization and has cast its eyes towards the motion picture industry. After making a thorough investigation of the industry and the benefits that the producers might enjoy by locating in Texas they have launched a campaign of propaganda with that end in view.

They claim that they have proved by actual test that there are more sunny days in Texas than there are in California or Florida and far less fog and rain. It is also asserted that the Texas sunlight is of unusual actinic power, thereby giving a far greater number of actual working hours per day.

A varied scenery ranging from deep canyons and steep mountains to level prairies, and both shaggy wilderness to rural scenes of pastoral beauty, is also declared to be some of the many reasons that producers of motion pictures would find Texas the ideal spot to make pictures.

The Frank Powell Sunset Pictures Corporation is now located in San Antonio with a stage space of 80 x 100 feet and a developing and printing capacity of 1,800 feet daily.

Correspondence is solicited with established, reputable producing companies and while the San Antonio Chamber of Commerce will under no circumstances finance any motion picture company they promise to co-operate strongly.

New Picture Shows Life of Sailor

The life of a sailor in the United States Navy from enlistment to duty on a dreadnought is graphically shown in "Making a Sailor," a motion picture which had a special showing at the Fulton theatre in New York October 20. The film was made entirely by men of the Photographic Division of the navy, under the direction of Lieut. Wells Hawks, and will be exhibited under official auspices to illustrate for mothers and fathers what their boys are doing in the navy and how they are being treated.

Keeping Your House Dominant

Just One Look at Dayton Advertising Shows How Such a Policy Convinces at First Glance

ONE of the big points in motion picture advertising is to make your theatre dominate its particular field. If you can do that you have won half the battle. You may not get them into the house for the first few weeks, but you are building business for the future that is just as sure to come as you are to get your interest on the Liberty Loan subscriptions.

We are taking up here a little insight into the situation in Dayton, O., because it is a splendid example of the point that we have wanted to illustrate for some time. The mere matter of using white space is not the whole thing in exploitation of a picture. You have to put something into that space if you are going to invite the people to come to your house today, tomorrow and the next day.

Let's look over Dayton for a moment. It is a city with a census population of 123,794. It is perhaps best known as the home of an immense manufacturing plant that pays its people well and works for a good, clean city. Dayton is one of the few municipally "managed" cities in the country. It is a city that had one of the worst floods in the history of the country and got over it about the quickest. Dayton is wide awake and on the job, and therefore we naturally expect that the theatre that is really wide awake is the one that is going to appeal to its own people.

There are only three newspapers in Dayton. The Journal, morning and Sunday, and the Herald, afternoon, are under the same ownership. The News is an afternoon daily and Sunday paper with almost twice the circulation of the other two combined. So far as motion pictures are concerned, the Sunday Journal carries the same advertising as does the Saturday afternoon Herald, and so we have reprinted on the page opposite the Saturday edition only. And we have taken different issues of the Journal and the News so that we may illustrate more than one week's advertising.

There are only twenty-one motion picture houses in Dayton, four of them being first run down town houses. Fourteen of the theatres are neighborhood. The Dayton theatre is the largest, seating 2,500 and being a new house, while the others are the Strand, with 1,800 seats; the Columbia, with 1,000, and the Ideal, with 350, but a house that is setting a splendid record for business.

Looking at the pages opposite the impression that one is given is that the Dayton theatre is the big house there. That is true. But it shows that it is putting over its bigness by the manner in which it is advertising.

In the News this theatre dominates with 11½ inches across four columns. This display is a combination of the announcement of the current production and that Paramount and Artcraft productions will be shown there. Our criticism of this particular advertisement is that it is a little too much crowded and that the attention is likely to be taken away from the current offering. But, even with that, the name of the theatre has been kept dominant, and there is an individuality given the display that causes one to think of the theatre and what it stands for more than a mere picture.

Strand theatre uses 5½ inches across three columns and also goes in for the hand drawn matter. It is in the main an attractive display, but the amount of black space that is used merely as a border serves no purpose. But the sales argument is splendidly put over.

Then, after that, we turn to the Columbia and find—a mere mass of type. There is more than enough reading matter here to fill a couple of pages. The only thing that stands out in the display is the cut of Mary Pickford. Probably there are some of her most ardent fans who will read all that the Columbia theatre has to say about this picture, but they must be mighty anxious to know about Mary if they do.

The Ideal is a small house and it emphasizes in its advertising the names of the stars and the titles of the production. It does not generally use sales argument, but seeks to get the people into the theatre on something on the guaranteed style of advertising—that there is always a good show at the Ideal. Ordinarily we would not say that such a display is good work, but in the case of a house that wants to get them, and get them quick, the fewer words the better. There's plenty of black type and a lot of adjectives. This style of advertising would never bring and keep people in a really big theatre, but it is likely to pack them into a 350 seat house such as this, which seems, without saying so much, to carry the motto, "A little house with a big show."

The advertising of the Alhambra and the New Lyceum is sure card stuff.

When we turn to the Saturday afternoon Herald we find that the Dayton still dominates. Here is a combination of a vaudeville act and a feature picture. The picture, Mabel Normand in "Peck's Bad Girl" dominates, and there is a sales talk that really sells on each of the attractions.

The Columbia here uses less space than in the News, but the desire to say everything possible in a very limited space, 5½ inches double column, seems to have grown to be a habit.

The Strand has another good advertisement here and the Apollo breaks into print with a splendid display on "Crashing Through to Berlin."

In passing, let's make a few remarks about the co-operation on the part of the papers. The Herald confines itself to reading notices, but the News shows a desire to print some of the real news and has a column and a half of interesting gossip of the screen. Its first of its two motion picture pages is devoted to a discussion of what is going on in the world of motion pictures. The whole showing of the News could be improved, but it shows that it has the proper spirit, and with the encouragement of the theatres of Dayton there is no doubt but that it will go over the top.

Take another look at these pages and note how the advertising of the Dayton theatre stands out. It is doing something that probably the larger number of the houses cannot do—employing an artist to design the advertisements. But the manager has something in view himself before he orders the design made. He keeps the selling point of the picture in his mind, but at the same time he remembers that his theatre is a bigger thing—so far as his pocket book is concerned—than any picture. And so you see that the name of the house stands out, not glaringly, but as the first thing that your eye strikes.

Any motion picture theatre can dominate his city with his advertising if he will follow the same general policy that is carrying the Dayton over.

There are a few recipes:

Use plenty of space, enough to get the good will of the newspapers and enough room to carry the message that you have to put over.

Then find out what the picture is about and tell the public as plainly and as attractively as you can without the use of adjectives and superlatives.

Set all of this in an attractive design that will catch and please the eye, and make it easy to read.

And make the first impress on your possible patron that this is the Dayton theatre and not merely a motion picture show.

After you have looked at the pages illustrated, do you need to be told that the Strand and the Dayton are the two leading theatres of Dayton? You know that from their advertising.

But you may say that when you are advertising you are not

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC!

Desiring to co-operate with the Local Health Authorities to prevent the spread of "SPANISH INFLUENZA" in Harrisburg and Eldorado, and to safeguard our patrons, and for the protection of this community, we make the following suggestions and requests.

1—Don't attend our theatres if you cough or sneeze. Stay at home. Coughers, spitters and sneezers will be refused admission.

2—One of the important things in preventing influenza is to avoid chilling the body especially if you are tired. It is suggested that those who attend the shows tonight should remove their heavy wraps and furs while within doors so that they will not be chilled when they go out.

3—Change damp shoes, stockings or other clothing as promptly as possible.

4—Don't be panicky, but be careful. Protect yourself and help to protect others.

5—If you get a cold these days, go home, go to bed and call your doctor. Every cold is serious when influenza is in the community.

6—Stay in bed until your doctor says you are completely well. If you have fever, stay in bed until three days after fever has disappeared. This is the best way to avoid pneumonia and other serious consequences.

7—Our theatres will be thoroughly aired, ventilated and disinfected each day. We are making every effort to protect our patrons, and we desire the co-operation of all good citizens so that it will not be necessary to close the schools, churches and theatres.

8—At present there is practically no "Spanish influenza" in Eldorado or Harrisburg, and if we will all co-operate to keep it out, there will be none.

Ever Advertise When You Are Closed? Here Are Some Lessons From Influenza

ARE you keeping your theatre up to the times?

You will probably answer that you are, but that the epidemic and other things are preventing you showing pictures and that therefore you have to go home to the old fireside and forget all about it.

It takes crises to show what showmen really are. We are not talking from the position of the "arm chair" boys who tell you how to run your business. The advertising pages of this issue, and perhaps of others, show you that we are reflecting the effects of the "lay-off." But the Service Bureau is not. These pages want to impress on you that we do not want to show a moment's pause in the progressiveness of the theatre managers of the country.

When there is all fair sailing and all things are lovely any exhibitor can make money. There are trials and troubles, but generally everything comes out on top just as it should come. But it calls for enterprise when things are going against you to go out and put more money into that selfsame business with the hope of cashing in on it later. The lesson is that the man who hasn't faith in his business and who cannot stand a few hardships is not there when the troubles arise.

Here are concrete examples:

In Harrisburg, Ill., Steve Farrar knew that there was a scare about the epidemic and so he went straight to the newspapers with it. He told the people that his theatre was not closed, but he gave his patrons some mighty good advice. He told the people if they had a cold that looked like it might get into the troublesome stage they had better stay away from motion pictures. And this very warning inspired confidence in those that were well. It heartened everyone. It stamped the Casino theatre as a house that was a real institution in the city, a house that was caring for its patrons' health above the dollars of the box office.

A step still further was taken by the

The Theatres, Schools and Churches Have Been Closed

by the City Commission on the recommendation of the County Board of Health. This action was taken to lessen the possibility of your contracting Spanish Influenza. But it is just a step. The rest is up to you, individually. You must protect yourself

DON'T—

—Mingle in any crowd anywhere—whether on the street, in a store or where not.
—Get on an already crowded street car or elevator. A few minutes' wait may save a few days' sickness.
—Cough or sneeze except with a handkerchief over your mouth or nose.
—Expectorate on the street or sidewalk.
—Expose yourself to cold and wet. Don't over exert.
—Go out if feeling ill.

DO—

—Get plenty of fresh air and sunshine.
—Keep your hands, mouth and clothing absolutely clean.
—Avoid all excess.
—Take care of yourself—Keep fit.
—Buy Liberty Bonds.

STRAND AMUSEMENT CO.

NOTE—The Strand will offer as passes for the redemption of tickets for The 13th Chair.

Closing the house did not keep Strand, Birmingham, Ala., from advertising. It told the people how to avoid the "Flu"

Strand Amusement Company, Birmingham, Ala. Here the theatres were closed. Evidently there was a scare in Birmingham. But the very day that the theatres were closed the management of the Strand inserted an advertisement in the daily papers telling the public how to take care in case anyone was stricken with the epidemic. Except for the signature on the advertisement there wasn't the slightest hint of the theatre in it. It was followed on the second day with another display and after the theatre had set the example the newspapers themselves began to talk about preventatives and cures and the theatre dropped out of the campaign.

Now this isn't a large thing to do.

But what did Harrisburg, Ill., and Birmingham, Ala., show to their respective publics?

You are an exhibitor and if you are a good one you have always put yourself in the position of a patron. You have asked what you could do to appeal to your regular man as well as to the one that you have been unable to bring into your house. In other words you want to attract the attention of every one to your house.

In Harrisburg the theatres were still open. The theatre simply told the people that their health would be guarded there. It invited the people who coughed and sneezed to stay away. That wasn't any offense to those who did cough and sneeze, but to those who didn't it was an invitation to come. It's like the faith in the doctor who cured you the last time; it's not so much the medicine as the faith.

In Birmingham they were closed. The Strand has recently changed ownership and it has done mighty good advertising to establish that fact in the public mind. We told you several weeks ago of the campaign that it carried out to put this fact over. The theatre has had a splendid showing as the result. It went out and talked to the public about the reason that the management had changed. It talked out prices and it talked about the picture that would be shown.

And the result was that when the epidemic hit Birmingham, it went out and talked to the public—not about the theatre—but about the epidemic. It was not a case of a theatre being peeved because it was closed, but a case of an institution showing its interest in the whole city.

The influenza isn't going to last long and we'll be mighty sure in saying that the advertising of the Strand will bring to the house a whole lot of people who have never been there before.

It's hard to get many exhibitors into the habit of advertising when they have a really big picture. On ordinary things it is impossible. But how about the EXTRAordinary?

The man who advertises his CLOSED house under these circumstances is building for the future. When he shows that he is a part of the people, more of those people are coming to him and they are going to keep on coming.

Printers' ink is no longer useful. It is a necessity.

And keeping yourself a part of the community, and, if possible its center, is no longer a good bet but an INSURANCE OF THE FUTURE.

33 Aeroplanes Used to Exploit "America's Answer"

Thirty-three aeroplanes took part in the exploitation of "America's Answer" just before it was shown at the Majestic theatre, Detroit, starting October 14. Paper bombs advertising the showing were dropped in all parts of the city. Special stage settings were provided and a purely military atmosphere was afforded through the whole program. On Monday only one performance was given, in the evening, and it was attended by leading officials, including Governor Sleeper. A new record in exploitation is claimed for Manager M. W. McGee.

At Dayton, Ohio, Prince Axel of Denmark was the guest of honor at the first showing of the film at Memorial Hall, and at the Auditorium, in St. Paul, a marine sergeant spoke nightly between the first and second parts.

Time to DO, Franklin Points Out

IT'S an old proverb: "It's an ill wind that blows no good."

Last week we called your attention to the fact that those of you who are closed have time to think over what you have done, how you can do more, to lay your plans for the future.

We especially invited you to sit down and write us the accounts of the best things that you have done. You have excused yourselves before on the ground that you were too busy. That excuse does not exist now, unless you are really busy in planning things for the future, not only for yourself, but for the industry as a whole.

BUFFALO is one of the cities that has been closed on account of the influenza. But Harold B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, gets some solace out of the compulsory let down in a view of the future. His view will inspire you:

"For the first time in its history the motion picture business is given a chance to stop, look and listen. Over two-thirds of the business has been given an enforced vacation on account of the epidemic. There is hardly a business in the world that has been going at such speed as the motion picture business. Along comes Fate and throws on the emergency brake. Producers stop producing; exhibitors stop exhibiting. Now the producers have time to talk things over and perhaps some of the wastes will be eliminated. Exhibitors will have a chance to put their theatres in order and will have time to reflect, plan and rest and when the re-opening comes the public will have missed you so much that you will be greeted as a long, lost friend.

"The rest that is being forced will prove to be a tonic. The Government will realize more than ever the big part that the theatres of the country are playing in the winning of the war and it is very likely that the big taxes will be conspicuous by their absence.

"MANY exhibitors will have an opportunity to review the work they have done. A change in our habits is a good thing, if for nothing more than to pick ourselves to pieces and try to determine how many faults we actually have.

"We should retrace our steps of the past to see where we might have improved ourselves. If we have been on the wrong track, it is now a good time to switch off somewhere. If on the whole we are making satisfactory progress toward the best goal we must continue to carry on.

"The picture business has been advancing so fast, that it has lacked the necessary checks and balances. Our equilibrium is unstable. Now is the time to secure the needed balance by eliminating everything that is wasteful and unnecessary.

"The motion picture is going to come back stronger than ever and will be built on a more solid foundation than in the past. The popularity of the films will be tested as never before. Your patrons will acquire a newer and greater interest in the silent drama.

"Here in Buffalo we have renovated our houses preparatory to reopening in a blaze of glory. There has been much talk of opening on Friday, November 1, thus continuing where we left off with the added prospect of two wonderful business days. There will also be less confusion in bookings. Films which had been booked for the end of the week will be shown the same as if the closing order had never come. Buffalo has had a street car strike for several weeks but it is expected that the cars will be running by the re-opening date, which will also help business. Local exhibitors are planning for tremendous business and we do not expect to be disappointed."

YOU have had your problems in the past year and you have scored your successes. For some months Mr. Franklin and other live wires in the motion picture exhibition have been contributing their good ideas to these columns, and they will contnue to do so.

But can you not apprecate how much good it will do others if you record here the successful things that you have done in order that others, even if they are hundreds of miles away can score the same sort of success? Can you not appreciate that everything that serves to make the exhibitor in general prosperous is going to add directly to your own net revenue?

We have been having wonderful response here to the appeal to hear from exhibitors, but we want to keep on hearing from more and more until the Exhibitors' Service Bureau represents the one hundred per cent forum of the exhibiting end of the industry.

And it may occur to you in these times when you have a chance to think things over that there is some way that we may serve you. If there is, there never was a better time to call on us.

When a considerable portion of the industry is in a state of suspension WE ARE ON THE JOB.

We are here offering you the SERVICE THAT WINS.

Let us help you, if we can, and do you, likewise, help your fellow exhibitor.

Your Idea and Ours

DO you consider your newspaper merely a place to advertise and to get your press notices? Or do you read it carefully for the tips that it gives you and then use the actual events of the day to boost the picture that you are showing? The exhibitor who does not take advantage of what is happening in this old world of ours every day is overlooking a chance to increase his receipts.

Yet out of the advertising that we have inspected this week we find that the great majority of the exhibitors—and many who have been reputed to be good advertisers—have lost the opportunity to clean up on pictures bearing on the war simply because they refused to leave the beaten path.

Two striking exceptions to this are found in the cases of the Rialto theatre, San Francisco, and the Tremont Temple, Boston. Both of these theatres took advantage of the peace negotiations and they made their displays right up to the minute. Certainly the result must have been larger business than if they had merely followed their usual plan of exploiting these two productions.

Rialto theatre used a quarter of a page in exploiting "The Caillaux Case" and devoted a considerable portion of the space to the words: "Peace Now? No." You can imagine that this immediately attracted the attention of the thousands who had been reading the news from Berlin and Washington. Then followed the simple statement that France answered the Kaiser by executing Bolo Pasha. Now as a matter of fact Bolo was executed weeks ago, but this served to couple up the picture with the very latest events.

Tremont Temple uses small cuts of Foch, Pershing, Haig and Diaz and with each cut carries the declaration, "We stop only for unconditional surrender." Then the patrons are invited to see these men in action in "Crashing Through to Berlin." It is a far more effective argument than columns of reading matter.

No matter how good the original exploitation matter supplied you may have been, you must remember that it was, of necessity, prepared in advance, and when you can take advantage of something that is happening today you are putting the punch over all the harder.

Don't grin because you have to; smile because you want to.

FRANKLIN theatre, Saginaw, Mich., uses ten inches across five columns on "Hearts of the World" and gets one of the best displays that we have seen on this picture. We particularly commend it as one in which the box effects have been used to the best advantage, and it is worth noticing that light rules have been used for these and the heavy effect has been avoided. The center of the display is from one of the cuts supplied by the producers.

Now you can well understand that one of the big selling points for Saginaw folk is the fact that this picture ran for thirteen weeks at the Detroit Opera House. That means more to the people of Saginaw than if the same space had been devoted to reciting how long it has been shown in New York City. There are a lot of people who are not convinced by New York runs, but who are sold the picture when they know that it has scored a hit with their own folk.

Name of the theatre, prices, hours and other matter have been properly displayed. It would be mighty hard to beat this one.

Unconditional surrender—to enterprise.

WHAT do you think of building a $20,000 theatre "back in the woods?" This is just what has been done at Bauxite, Ark., a place that you won't be able to find on the map. Yet this theatre, opened by the American Bauxite Company on Sept. 14, is showing first run attractions of the highest quality and is getting big business from the surrounding territory. This theatre is being made a real institution in the section, proving, as we have told you many times, that you don't have to have a big city to score a big success.

There is no paper published in Bauxite, so manager Jack Parsons uses pages in the weeklies in that section. This is good advertising for a theatre so situated, because it is necessary to advertise the bills for a number of days in advance and to make the displays something on the program order. You will note that the theatre advertises itself chiefly. And in this connection it is interesting to note the list of attractions that Mr. Parsons has selected for showing during Christmas week.

An idea file system in your theatre will save you many a rasping note in your exploitation.

IN this generous piece of advertising we believe that the Strand theatre, Salina, Kan., has gone to extremes on white space. It would have been worth while using all of this space had the display been surrounded by other advertising, but in this case the space was not needed to make the matter stand out and we believe it is rather lost on account of the island position that the few words of reading matter occupy.

Keep the name of the star played up. In cases where you are able to use a large and striking cut of the player the cut does the work as well as large type, and sometimes better. But in this case the only star cut that the manager had available was a single column and this does not get the effect although the designer tried to bring it out by the use of rules. That part of it was good, but at the same time there is no excuse for letting the lettered caption on the cut be the only representation that the player has.

The fellow who "just shows a picture" is getting the patronage of the fellow who is "just going to one."

ORPHEUM theatre, Butte, Mont., used the same design in practically all of its advertising on "Crashing Through to Berlin," ranging from quarter-pages down to two-column displays.

While this design was a striking one, it really failed to tell the character of the production. One might judge from the matter contained in the display that it was the usual imaginative picture with a war setting instead of a real history of the war, portraying actual events. In other words, only a part of the big idea was put over.

Now had the theatre used different designs and different selling talks on the various days there would have been a much more definite appeal. There was liberal space employed, but more repetition of the same design is not the best way to attract general attention. This sort of exploitation is likely to catch the eye one day and be passed by on the other days that it appears. With such a picture as this you want to have cumulative effect from your advertising. If your patrons passes by your argument one day, come back at him with another—and a different argument—and you are much more likely to get him into your theatre before the run is over.

Atmosphere in your theatre may be made to speak louder than words, but don't let it smell that way.

WE like to see a theatre that keeps itself the dominant thing. This the Colonial, Springfield, Ohio, certainly does. You can pick up the paper at any time and immediately identify the display of the Colonial and we haven't the slightest doubt that there are hundreds of Colonial patrons difference. The lettering of the theatre name is slightly different in the two, yet in the same general style and the theatre sales lines "Quality plus Hospitality" is carried in all cases though in a different position.

There is not very much of a sales talk used on either picture, and the only criticism in this regard is the fact that the matter on the Charles Ray picture is entirely too general. Of course the reason for the matter that is used is that before this picture Ray had appeared in several productions which pictured him as a victim of drink and naturally the theatres wanted to get away from this idea in the new picture. But even with this it would have been a stronger argument if there had been a few words about the story of "A Nine O'Clock Town."

The black background used with the half tones rather detract from the appearance of the entire displays. If these were used in cut-out form they would be more striking.

But Colonial theatre advertising is well up to the right mark.

Kaiser is making "right" of existence darned popular. You have to go out and show the reason for being here these days.

CRYSTAL theatre, Waterloo, Iowa, in the advertisements sent us runs too much to the rule effect. Rules, as we have observed often here, are a mighty good thing to let alone unless you are sure of the effect that you are going to get. Now we must admit that the main cause of this use of these rules is caused by the fact that the exhibitor has not been supplied with striking exploitation material and therefore must do something on their own hook. When they get only small cuts that probably mean nothing and when they are without facilities for getting other and striking cuts made they turn to the fancy rules.

But what is the use of attracting the eye when you have nothing to say after you have attention. Now this gallows formation is entirely meaningless to the reader because the sales argument is not followed. "The Greatest Society Drama Ever" and "The Most Dignified and Moral Preachment Ever Presented on the Screen" are meaningless. It is a whole lot better to use straightaway type and SAY SOMETHING in it than to strive for the fancy effect and have nothing to follow up with.

All you have to worry about yesterday's bill is that you did your best.

Don't worry about the bound volumes of your record, but about the advance sheets of your patrons.

Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

ON the program at the Rivoli theatre this week there is a vocal number, "The Last Rose of Summer." As you will hear later it gets over in big fashion, but there is also a "come back" to it and everyone in the audience gets it when the title of Wolfville story, "Rose of Wolfville" is flashed on the screen. No, it is not the same music that comes back as the theme of this picture, but it is "Hearts and Flowers." And when the tune is first played by the orchestra the audience starts humming, sits back in its seats and is in perfect delight with the world.

If you have read the box that is printed on this page you have seen how the element of patriotism is emphasized by the music. But there is much more to a motion picture presentation than putting over a single punch. The thing that gets the real strong appeal over, that puts the atmosphere of the theatre in the hearts of all comes from synchronizing the elements of the bill. We have called your attention to this often in these reviews of the bills at the Rialto and Rivoli, but there has never been a better example than in this case. But we want to point out to you that the musical numbers and the picture are not set together, to form a sort of introduction, but that they are separated by the feature and an orchestral number and still the "atmosphere" lingers.

"Mignon" is the overture at the Rivoli, and it is played with the lights all in gold. This is a brilliant number, the introduction with a harp cadenza and then Mignon's song played on the French horns and then the Titania songs with the burst of the entire orchestra.

"Midst Peaceful Scenes" is the scenic this week, a Post-Pathe photographer by Van Scoy. There is a novel lighting effect being used this week with the scenic, all of them being red at first with the red reflecting on the screen as the first of the somewhat long title starts and then fading into blue, giving the idea of night coming after the red sunset. Then these blue lights die down and there is only the orchestra itself bathed in blue for the particularly pleasing music that is used, "Ansell's Suite," Nos. 2 and 3, and "Night and Love." As usual the titles are in verse and the music seems to be perfectly framed around them.

With a spotlight from the top of the proscenium arch on him Alberto Bachman then plays "Gypsy Airs." After the first few bars the curtains part revealing one of John Wenger's striking settings. In the center is a harpischord with a candelabra burning upon it and through the long thin window in the back one looks out into the night. At either side are one of the Madonna effects and a single hanging light forms the rest of the illumination. The curtains close before the whole selection is ended and the blue lights then merge into gold.

Then comes the Animated which consists solely of the Official War Review, but this is so well arranged and the music so carefully selected that no more of the topical matter is needed. "The Unconquerable Spirit" is the general title of the release. "Democracy" and "Liberty Overture" are played for the introduction and the first scenes showing the French on the Italian front and the Austrian prisoners that they have taken. Then we have a title telling us that "in 1914 the Huns jeered at England's contemptible little army" and the orchestra breaks into "Rule Britannia" and the audience shouts itself hoarse as we see the first of the men who crossed into France to fight and some of the soldiers as they are today, only to shout all the more when another title tells us that the Britishers are now seven millions strong.

With "Boys of Tipperary" being played the scene then shifts to Mesopotamia and we see the soldiers building an observation tower out of sandbags and then we come back to France to see the Polish troops who are fighting with the allies, and here we have "March Russe." "Coriolanus" is played for the pictures of the prisoners of Alsace and Lorraine origin who are kept separated from the other German prisoners by the French. This continues through pictures of the captured German guns being turned on the fleeing Huns. There is one remarkable shot here which shows a number of the cannon lined up along a roadway and firing over the heads of troops that are marching along the road and to the front.

But you can imagine that the real punch comes with the title "Forward Go the Yanks" and then we have pictures of the artillery, of the fighting men in a wrecked town and then the opening of the battle. The smashing climax comes with the appearance of Gen. Pershing awarding the D. S. C. to a number of American soldiers. First "Yankee Doodle" is played twice and then "Invincible Eagle" with "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean" at the end, and then it was on Sunday evening that everyone in the audience arose to pay a tribute to the boys "Over There."

Then comes the musical number that we have already mentioned, "The Last Rose of Summer." The curtains part, revealing Miss Gladys Rice seated in a rose garden, the bushes being barely visible in the background. Immediately behind her is an immense moon and her profile is silhouetted most effectively against this. There is no spot used and the only music is the harp accompaniment. All of you know this old English ballad, simple, but always a most effective musical number when you have something else in the bill to take up the atmosphere as there is at the Rivoli this week.

It is unfortunate that after there is such artistry all the way through the bill that there should be a jarring note in the feature, Lina Cavalieri in "A Woman of Impulse." First we have shown to us an octaroon character who is called a Creole when everyone that knows anything about New Orleans, where a considerable portion of the action is played, knows that the Creole is the purest mixture of French and Spanish, the aristocrats of the aristocrats and then anyone who dared suggest there was a taint in their blood wouldn't hang around very long. And then of all the famous opera houses in the nation there is none that compares in fame or age to the French Opera House of that city, yet we have it impressed upon us several times that "La Vecci" (Mme. Cavalieri) is appearing at the "New Orleans theatre."

"Causona Morosa" is the theme used and during the scenes in the theatre when "Carmen" is being played that music is naturally used. Most of the other airs are the Rothapfel numbered selections. A considerable portion of the music is carried on the organ.

Then with the lights in red we have "The Evolution of Dixie," a selection which has been used before at the Rothapfel houses, is played and when the melody develops

POWER OF MUSIC

Here's a Striking Example of Its Influence in a Theatre

TO those managers who think that the music in their theatre has no influence there is a lesson in an incident that occurred at the Rivoli theatre Sunday evening.

There is a particularly arousing ending to the Animated there which shows Gen. Pershing decorating American heroes of the battlefield. And for this the music is "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean."

The orchestra played this with a crashing effect. We knew that it wasn't the national air, but in a few seconds we were the only ones in the audience that were not standing. And then, of course, we got up, at least out of respect for the others.

It was simply a case of the moving power of the picture and the music in combination. The public was aroused to the highest pitch of patriotism and anything that sounded like it might be a tribute to the nation got an immediate response.

Music has a big place to fill in your house and you are not getting in the possible patrons or arousing their enthusiasm for your theatre unless you take advantage of the power of music with the picture.

from the variations into the "Dixie" as we all know it the lights come up in gold.

Now we get the rose motif back in the Wolfville story that follows, "The Rose of Wolfville." "Hearts and Flowers" is introduced as the second number and it is played three times more during the two reels with the last eight bars of it at the end of the picture. "Withered Flowers," "Pulcinello" and "A Little Love" are some of the other selections used.

"William Tell," played with the lights all gold, is the Rialto overture and the audience responds enthusiastically after the orchestra has pictured the storm and a pastorale and then ends with a crashing gallop.

"The Triumph of Transportation" showing the construction of motor trucks, takes the place of the usual scenic and a large number of musical selections are used to put this over. They start with "Orgies of the Spirit" and then there follow "Dramatic Suite," "Dance of the Bajadares," "Regiment's Return," "Woodland Pictures," "Regiment's Return" repeated and finally at the end "When the Kaiser Does the Goose Step" when we are shown a cartoon of the truck dumping the Kaiser off into oblivion.

Then comes Lorrie Grimaldi singing "Infelice" from "Ernani."

The Rialto Animated this week is a splendid example of the way that a manager who has at his hand the various news weeklies can assemble a program to play upon all of the emotions. It starts with Gaumont pictures of the Liberty Loan parade in New York with the President leading it and the music is "Liberty Bell March." From the same source come reproductions of the Kaiser's tombstone, used in the drive, and here we get Chopin's funeral march, until the title "Tell It to the Marines" and then come sixteen bars of "Marine Hymn."

Douglas Fairbanks arrives by aeroplane to boost the Loan and we have a lot of comedy stuff with "Fairbanks March" played. Next are Hearst-Pathe pictures of the student army being enrolled at Newton, Mass., and "High School Cadets" accompanies it. Screen Telegram takes us to Newark where we have Schwab launching "The Allies" and "The Consort." Here "To Victory" is the music, and it continues through Gaumont pictures of the Filipinos presenting two destroyers to the American navy and Hearst-Pathe views of the non-sinkable lifeboats. From the latter news service come pictures, a lighter little touch, of searching for oysters among the rocks at Portland, Ore., when we have "Dance of the Follies."

Gaumont then takes us over to France and we see a demonstration of the way that the Salvation Army gets the "smokes" to the boys. "He's My Pal" is played twice through and there is an intimate little touch here that brings the tears welling in the eyes. We jump quickly back from Europe with pictures of the limited service men going through the recreative exercises at Camp Greene, S. C., while the orchestra plays "Oh, How I Hate to Get Up in the Morning." Gaumont then gives us a glimpse of the immensity of the war work and the importance of everyone co-operating by showing the oil field at Westlake, La. "Civic Pride" march is used until the wonderful scenes that show an oil well on fire and here we change to "Salambo," an excellent selection to us for agitato effects. Linking right up with this we get pictures of the automobiles that run on coal oil and we have the trio from "Civic Pride" used.

"Rule Brittania" comes in with the Gaumont pictures of Sir Eric Geddes visiting Annapolis and the review of the cadets. The sight of the British flag gets a big hand from the audiences and when you consider the music that is being used you can imagine the sentiment that is stored away in the hearts of all that have seen the picture. With the pictures of the marching men the music changes to "Admirals All."

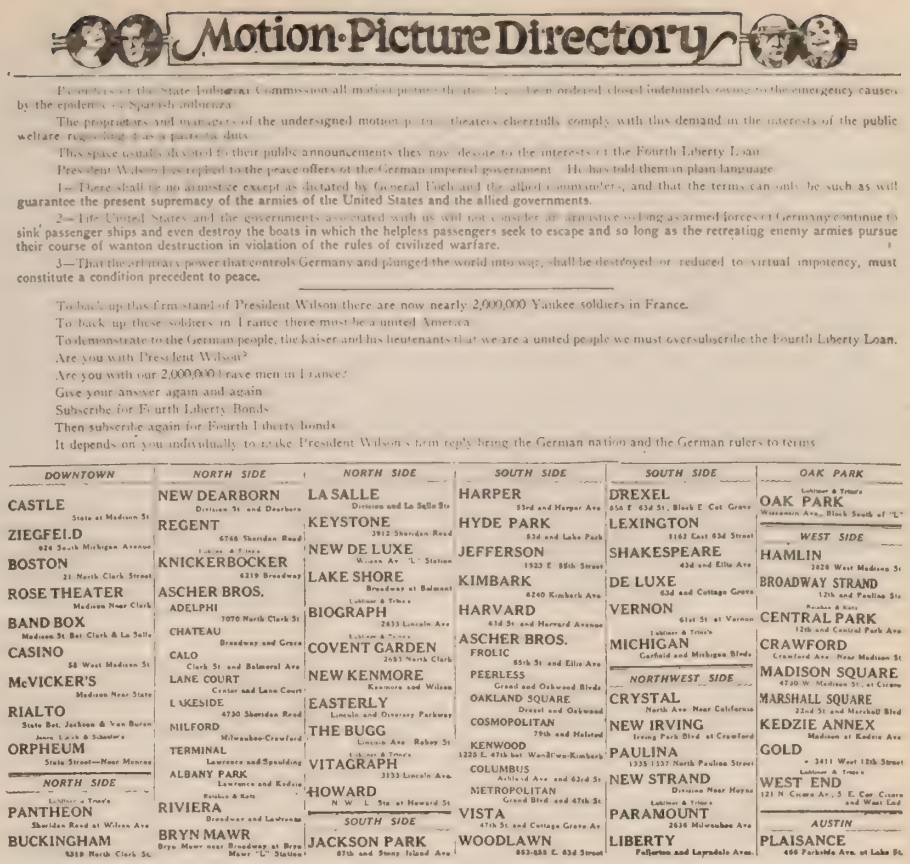
But the big smash. What have we seen in this Animated? We have been largely shown the various war activities. We have started out with the part that the President has played in helping the Liberty Loan. We have gone through with various things that the nation, all parts of it, are doing to be READY, but for the convincing end we get pictures of the boys who have already been over there, of the men that have led out troops to victory on the Marne and before Verdun coming back here to instruct the men who must go to do their part for Liberty. "Hail to the Chief" is used, one of the finest tributes that has been paid to those that have done and dared and the response that comes from the audience is typical of the way that we all feel about it—that it must be done and done well.

It is fitting that after such a stirring weekly Miss Jeanne Gordon should appear in the costume of the France that we all love so much and sing "Viavandiere." There was a repressed shout from the audience when she appeared and when she had finished—well, the recording cylinder is broken.

Then the feature, William Desmond in "The Pretender." This is a typical Western picture, and most of the music is of the lively type, though the theme is "Waiting for You," and there are such selections as "Daffodils" and "My Dreamy Lady" used. There is a particularly fine touch introduced when in some of the schoolhouse scenes "Schooldays" is used.

Now watch the effect of using a selection such as this that is known to everyone. Next to us was a lady who was considerably past the meridian of life. Her daughter was with her. The mother began to hum, and the daughter almost broke into song. We almost wished that Rothapfel had done one of the crude things and had thrown on the screen the words of the chorus and had asked everyone to sing. But that wasn't needed. The singing may not have been aloud, but it was in the hearts and that "Schooldays" was undoubtedly more responsible for the apduction than anything else.

Rialto orchestra then brings back one of our old favorites with selections from "Our Regiment," one of Victor Herbert's best, and then we have a revival of that picture you laughed so much with when it was first released, the Keystone, "The Great Vacuum Mystery." "Oh, Harry, Harry." "Honky, Tonky" and "Tre Bien" are the selections used.



When the influenza closed the Chicago theatres, this is the way they devoted their space in the Tribune to boosting the Liberty Loan

Yes, they really display pictures at the Liberty theatres. Here is the way that they exploited "To Hell with the Kaiser" at Camp Gordon, Ga.

Hyman Scores Hit with the Soldier Boys By Making "Feature" of Liberty Loan Films

EDWARD L. HYMAN, director of the motion picture division of the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities, and who selects all the films that are shown at the Liberty theatres, has just put over a striking stunt with the films made by various stars to boost the Liberty Loan.

He conceived the idea of linking sixteen of these together, adding titles between them and producing a five-reel feature. This was not done so much with the object of boosting the Liberty Loan but rather with the purpose of showing the boys in the training camps through the country why this nation is in the war and to put the spirit of victory in every one.

The film was first shown at Camp Devens, Mass., and there it made a wonderful record. Manager Chappelle, of the Liberty theatre there wired Mr. Hyman: "Had to give three shows today with the Liberty Loan film. Camp Devens is going over the top with one million dollars. Even German prisoners bought bonds."

Major Barret O'Hara, who attracted national attention during the time that he was lieutenant-governor of Illinois, conducted the bond sale and added incentive to the purchase of bonds came when six girls, who were members of a musical comedy act, that was to play the Liberty theatre volunteered to kiss every soldier who bought a $50 bond. According to the Boston American one millionaire private subscribed for $25,000 worth, but tired out before he exhausted the kisses that he has coming to him.

Mr. Hyman is going to keep this film in circulation through the Liberty theatres with the same object in view that gave him the idea of first putting the picture together—that of educating and interesting the men in the camp. Wherever the assembled picture has been shown there has been one result—the greatest interest that has been displayed in any featured. In these sixteen pictures there are a large number of the greatest actors of the screen represented, and it is unquestionably the greatest opportunity that has ever been offered to see such a group of famous players.

Mr. Hyman reports that the interest in motion pictures in the Liberty theatres is growing rapidly. A certain result is that when these boys are back from the war there will be an even greater interest in the screen. Practically the whole of the product of the producers are going into the Liberty theatres and the soldiers are seeing them almost immediately after the release.

Theatre Recruits Dancing Academy and Increased Business

Dancing as an aid to increasing theatre receipts is a plan that has met with huge success on the part of J. C. Ritter, manager of the Rialto theatre in Detroit. The Rialto is a residential theatre in an excellent neighborhood, but Thursday night was always the bad one of the week. Mr. Ritter cast about for something to benefit it, happened to observe what a dancing academy a few blocks away was doing, and hit on the plan of giving a dance every Thursday evening. The Rialto has a big lobby and it is cleaned and waxed after the last performance. The theatre orchestra plays and the young folks with many of their elders, dance from 11 to 12 o'clock. No extra charge is made for the dancing and this has resulted in flocks of dancers making it a point to take in the last show at the Rialto every Thursday.

Brinkerhoff Draws Window Card for Charles Chaplin

A special lobby display card, drawn by Brinkerhoff, cartoonist for the New York World,, and printed in four colors, is one of the unusual advertising accessories provided to exhibitors by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit on its current release of Charlie Chaplin's second million dollar picture, "Shoulder Arms."

The cartoons by Brinkerhoff were made after he had attended a private showing of the comedian's second production for First National. They picture Chaplin in a series of poses and situations taken from the film, with the humor and fun of the scenes given full play.

"ZERO HOUR"

That's the Title of McCormick's Next Article For You

IN the trenches where our boys are fighting in France and Belgium "Zero Hour" is the name given the time just before they are sent "over the top." It is the moment just before the big things begin to happen.

And there is a "Zero Hour" for the motion picture exhibitor. That time comes just before the new bill is to open. The mind of the advertising writer should be the same as that of the soldier who is likely to recall and analyze the why of things just at that time that he is about to offer himself in the supreme sacrifice.

S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, is to resume next week his splendid advertising articles which have attracted so much attention and "Zero Hour" will be their general caption. They will be illustrated by specimens of the advertising that have brought business to the Circle.

Don't miss one of them. McCormick not only knows advertising, but he knows how to put his ideas over to you. If you read them and follow them it's a sure thing that you will find a reflection in the box office.

It's always fair weather when willingness to advertise and newspaper co-operation get together.

Closed Theatres Fail to Prevent Buffalo Motion Picture Men Putting Loan Over

BUFFALO exhibitors did not have an opportunity to fully carry out their plans for cooperation in raising the Fourth Liberty Loan, for along came the influenza and closed their theatres right in the midst of the drive. But this did not prevent the managers from literally going out into the highways and byways and digging up the cash.

Not only did the exhibitors and exchange men succeed in raising their own quota of $200,000 in spite of their houses being closed during two weeks of the drive, but they put on rallies in different parts of the city, especially in front of the motion picture houses.

At one meeting of film men $140,000 was subscribed, the principal purchasers being: Shea Amusement Company, through Pliny B. McNaughton, $75,000; Mitchel H. Mark Enterprises, through Walter Hayes, $10,000; Olympic theatre, through M. Slotkin, $10,000; Elmwood theatre, through Frederick Ullman, $2,500; Palace theatre, through Ira M. Mosher, $1,000; Maxine theatre, $1,000 and many other smaller subscriptions.

Buffalo exhibitors and exchange men were also active on the various committees and bureaus. Harold B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, was head of the Features' Bureau, which staged many of the novelties of the campaign. Associated with him was Daniel S. White, nephew of Michael Shea, owner of the Hippodrome.

In the personnel of the Advertising Bureau were two exhibitors and four exchange men. Earl L. Crabb, manager of the Strand, was chief of the theatre division and Ira M. Mosher was an ardent worker in this division. Richard C. Fox, manager of the local Paramount-Artcraft branch lined up with the Distribution division as did W. A. V. Mack of the Mutual branch, Charles A. Taylor of Pathe and Clayton Sheehan, brother of Winnie Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film company, of the local Fox branch. Almost every manager in town helped out with rallies about town or by special film shows at Lafayette square.

Prominent in this work were Samuel Carver, manager of the Family; J. H. Michael, manager of the Academy; Harry Greenman, manager of the New Victoria; E. A. Wineberg, manager of the Elmwood; Ira M. Mosher, manager of the Palace; J. M. Sitterly of the Gardiner Syndicate and many others.

No small part of the success of the motion picture men was due to the appearance of William S. Hart on Friday, October 18. He addressed four different meetings.

The tour closed a day of strenuous Liberty Loan campaigning by Mr. Hart. Following his speech at the workers' luncheon in the Iroquois, he addressed a meeting in Lafayette square and then was entertained at dinner in the Buffalo club by A. B. Wright.

His tour in the evening took only little more than an hour, although the meetings he appeared at were in widely separated sections of the city. The first meeting was in front of the Victoria theatre at the corner of Ferry and Grant streets. From there he made a flying visit to the naval barracks at Chenango street and Massachusetts avenue, thence to the corner of William and Monroe streets in front of the Plaza theatre, and finally to Lafayette square.

At the afternoon rally in Lafayette square, about $17,000 worth of bonds were sold. On the stage with Mr. Hart were the group of Seneca Indians from the Cattaraugus reservation, and boy scouts. Mr. Hart subscribed for $5,000 worth of bonds at this meeting.

At the Buffalo club, after the dinner given by Mr. Wright, the star greeted the hat boys and put them in splendid spirit by buying two $50 bonds from them.

Advertising the Theatre Shown in Dayton

advertising to the stranger within the gates, but to the people that you have to get every day. Which is mighty true. But when the character of your advertising gives the tone, the class you are impressing on your public day after day that you have THE house and you are pretty sure to get the crowds in.

The day has passed when you can go out and use exaggeration and bunk. You may get them to your house one day, but they won't come back the next. But when you put over the real sales argument on the picture and put it over honestly, you sell them that picture on its merits, and though the man who doesn't like the particular production may roast the producers and the author and the star, he won't have a word to say about your theatre—if you have stayed away from the adjective and the superlative.

Keep your theatre dominant. The Dayton theatre shows you how. Look at the displays for a third time and see if you, yourself, from a distance, are not convinced.

Pictures of Stars Bring Big Crowds on Poorest Days

Finding that Thursday and Friday were his poorest days, Manager William P. Fay of the Temple theatre, Elgin, Ill., hit upon an idea of getting the fans to coming on those days by making a special appeal to the "regulars."

He arranged souvenirs of postcard size bearing the picture of a star on one side and the program for the week on the other, but these were distributed only on Thursdays and Fridays. In his announcements he invited the patrons to make a collection of the leading players and in his newspaper advertising he called attention to the initial distribution and on the first Thursday he had one of his biggest crowds. These two days are now piling up business for the Temple.

"A Woman's Fool" (Carey-Universal)—"Big picture to average business."

Editor's Note: The Box Office Report chart includes all pictures released since August 1 on which a sufficient number of exhibitor reports have been received to base a verdict. In the column "Average of Exhibitors' Reports" the term "Extra Big" indicates a picture which far surpassed expectation; "Big" means a picture doing better than the usual business for that day under average conditions; "Average" is the grading given the production on which business held up to normal; "Poor" indicates the picture falling below normal in box office and entertainment value.

The comments given are no indication of the number of reports received, as many exhibitors merely check off the grading without comment.

TITLE, STAR, AND BRAND	AVERAGE OF EXHIBITORS' REPORTS	EXHIBITORS' OWN COMMENTS
ALL MEN (Morey—Vitagraph)....Aug.	Average	"Fair."

FLASHBACKS

Individual Opinions on Earlier Releases Received During the Past Week

"Italian Battlefront" (State Rights)—"Wonderful picture, actual stuff. Picture too long at that, especially first part. Did not draw. Lost money on it. Most realistic war scenes yet."

"Prunella" (Clark-Paramount)—"Pretty nice picture, but did not draw."

"Shark Monroe" (Hart-Artcraft)—"Not liked as well as former releases. Did not draw as usual."

"Good Night Paul" (Constance Talmadge-Select)—"Good light comedy, but not the best she has done. Satisfied. Director did well with a slim plot." "Exceptionally good."

"Firefly of France" (Reid-Paramount)—"Good picture."

"Sandy" (Jack Pickford-Paramount)—"Went very good with 'Good Night Nurse.'"

"The Claw" (C. K. Young-Select)—"Miss Young out of place here."

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" (Clark-Paramount)—"Extra good picture and business."

Fox Exchanges Well Able to Supply Film

A large number of William Fox pictures are available for exhibitors in the so-called "open" towns. "The Prussian Cur," R. A. Walsh's drama of German terrorism in this country; "Why America Will Win," the great photobiography of General Pershing; "Queen of the Sea," Annette Kellerman's $1,000,000 sub-sea phantasy, are pointed out by the William Fox offices as being Big Timely pictures that are available.

"Cleopatra" and "Les Miserables" are cited as two more splendid examples of really big pictures that can be shown during the non-release period. The William Fox Big Six of 1918 furnishes another opportunity for exhibitors to get big pictures. Exhibitors who have not booked these pictures, it is pointed out, will be able to get six of the best pictures Theda Bara and William Farnum ever made. These pictures, "A Fool There Was," "The Clemenceau Case" and "The Two Orphans," featuring Theda Bara, and "The Bondman," "The Plunderer" and "A Soldier's Oath," starring William Farnum, all being re-edited, revised and re-titled.

Anita Stewart Completes First

"Virtuous Wives" is Title of First Stewart Special to Be Released Soon by First National Exhibitors' Circuit

WITH production work completed and the task of assembling and editing well under way, announcement is made this week by Mr. Louis B. Mayer of Boston of the release soon of "Virtuous Wives," first of the special Anita Stewart productions made by him for distribution through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

"Virtuous Wives" is said to be epochal in two ways. It marks the entry into the production field of one of the industry's prominent exhibitors and exchangemen, and provides the vehicle for Miss Stewart's return to the screen after an absence of several months.

The production is an adaptation of the now famous story of "Virtuous Wives," by Owen Johnson. The published version of the story first appeared in Cosmopolitan Magazine, in which it ran serially for ten months. Shortly before the last instalments were printed it was gotten out in book form by Little, Brown & Company of Boston.

Introduced to the American public by a national advertising campaign conducted by the publishers of Cosmoplitan Magazine, in which space was used on forty-two thousand newsstands, thousands of billboards and in hundreds of newspapers and nationally circulated magazines, "Virtuous Wives" made its first appearance to the one and one-half million readers of Cosmopolitan heralded as the greatest American fiction story of the year.

Mr. Mayer, whose initial effort as a producer is along lines based on well defined ideas of his own, is not only prominent nationally as an exhibitor and exchange man, but is probably one of the best known and largest of the theatre and exchange operators in New England.

The firm of Gordon and Mayer of Boston is controlled by Mr. Mayer and Mr. N. H. Gordon. In addition to owning and operating a circuit of twenty-seven of the largest theatres in New England, including houses in Boston, Worcester, Springfield, Rochester, New Haven and Hartford, they also conduct Boston's biggest independent film exchange, under the firm name of the Gordon and Mayer Film Service.

Miss Stewart's leading man in "Virtuous Wives" is Conway Tearle, well known for his work in a score of legitimate stage successes. Hedda Hopper, wife of De Wolf Hopper, portrays the character of Irma Delabarre and the part of Rudolph Delabarre is played by Edwin Arden.

William Boyd has the part of Monte Bracken, while Captain Mortimer plays the part of 'Jap' Laracy.

Prominent on the American stage, and several of them well known to the motion picture public through their work as principals in a number of recent special feature productions, are the following additional members of the "Virtuous Wives" company; Philip Leigh as Teddy Dawson, Harold Gwynn as Tubby Vandergrift, Virginia Nordon as Mrs. Teake, Sr., Katherine Lewis as Mrs. Teake, Jr., Lucille Clayton as Miss Rushin, Gwen Williams as Kitty Lightbody, Master Thomas Carr as Bobby Delabarre.

The direction of the picture was in charge of George Loan Tucker, who is now supervising the assembling, editing and titling. It is expected that he will conclude this work by the first week in November at the latest.

Palmer Installs Manuscript Sales Force

The Palmer Photoplay corporation, of Los Angeles, announced last week that it has installed a manuscript sales department, at the head of which is Nan Blair, formerly head of the Triangle manuscript department. Miss Blair will be manager and studio representative of the Palmer Manuscript Department.

The Palmer corporation announces that it is already in touch with a number of the country's leading photoplaywrights, novelists and short-story writers, and that its new sales department will represent these authors in Los Angeles.

The Palmer corporation was formed three months ago for the purpose of disseminating, through the medium of the Palmer Plan of Photoplay Writing, educational information designed to make plain to the creative brains of the world the essential fundamentals of photoplay plot construction.

"Kaiser's Finish" Shows American Superiority

The marked superiority in clean, wholesome manliness and bearing of American Army officers serving under General Pershing over the commissioned apostles of Kultur in the German ranks is said to be shown with startling clarity in a number of comparative scenes that are a part of the actual military phases of the story of "The Kaiser's Finish," the new eight-part photoplay prophecy specially for the State rights by S. L. Warner.

Florence Reed and Kitty Gordon, queens in United Picture Theatres deck of stars

Many United Pictures in Work

Florence Reed Production Will Be Completed Shortly, While Kitty Gordon and Dustin Farnum Are at Work in Los Angeles

BEYOND the announcement of completion of plans and the commencement of work on the forthcoming feature which is to serve as the first United starring vehicle for Florence Reed more or less secrecy is being preserved by Tribune Productions, Inc., the producers of that screen star's offering for United Pictures Theatres of America, Inc., and by John M. Stahl, its director, as to the actual title and exact progress of the picture.

It is known that a highly talented cast is supporting Miss Reed and evidence of this is furnished in the publication of names of William Desmond, who is playing opposite to the star, Alec Francis and Robert Fraser.

In contradistinction to the activities of two other United stars, Kitty Gordon and Dustin Farnum, who are at work in Los Angeles, the Florence Reed series is being made in New York.

Reports from the Coast bearing on United's stars indicate the approaching completion of Kitty Gordon's first United picture which, under the working title of the Nurse, is based on Adele Bleneau's romance of the Red Cross. The production is under the personal direction of Robert Brunton and direction of Wallace Worsley.

Dustin Farnum's second picture for United, following The Light of Western Stars, is announced as based on Roger Pocock's "A Man in the Open" which also is being produced at the Brunton studio.

The unanimity of opinion laudatory of "The Light of Western Stars" as reflected in press criticisms and in verbal comment following that picture's recent initial showing at the Strand theatre, is reported to be hailed with intense gratification by President Berst and officials of United Picture Theatres of America as well as by its exhibitor-members through the country.

A communication from the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest signed by C. H. Hitchcock of its executive committee in referring to the Dustin Farum picture pays a tribute to President Berst personally.

"Men of your stamp," Mr. Hitchcock is reported as saying, "deserve support, and I have implicit confidence in you and that under your direction United Picture Theatres of America will prove a credit to you and a financial benefit to its every exhibitor-member."

Mutual Announces Many One Reelers

"The Tale of a Hat," a Mutual-Strand comedy for release by Mutual on October 15, in which Elinor Field, the charming comedienne is starred, is a veritable hat show. To carry out the plot of the story Miss Field is required to visit all the smart hat shops and wear a great number of the latest modes.

"Just Home Maid" is the title of the one-reel Strand comedy released by Mutual, October 22, starring Elinor Field. Jim is an ambitious young lawyer, but money hasn't come his way, so he and his pretty wife, Nell, are compelled to live in a small apartment and skimp. Nell, unknown to Jim, applies at an employment agency for a job as housemaid, so as to help out on finances. Then the complications and comedy arises.

"Are Brunettes False" and "For Love or Money" are the two Strand Comedies released by Mutual and starring Elinor Field which will follow "Just Home Maid."

A private showing of the Plunkett and Carroll production, "The Woman the Germans Shot," was held for the star, Julia Arthur, the director and others connected with the picture. The final cutting and titling of the picture was completed only recently, after several months of constant work.

Director John G. Adolfi declared the picture had more than come up to his expectations, and declared himself thoroughly satisfied that it would rank with his best screen productions, among which are many of the most spectacular pictures in history.

As this picture marked the motion picture debut of Julia Arthur, who appears in the leading role of Edith Cavell, the British Red Cross nurse, the noted star was intensely interested in the showing.

In the cast supporting Miss Arthur are Creighton Hale, George LeGuere, William H. Tooker, J. W. Johnston, Paul Panzer, Joyce Fair, George Majeroni, Sarah Alexander and hundreds of others. The scenario is by Anthony Paul Kelly.

No distribution arrangements have yet been announced by the producers; however, rumors are current concerning the meahod of release, but none of these has been confirmed. The producers have announced that they will wait until after the New York run, which is expected to start in a week or so, before making any definite statements.

Vitagraph to Produce Christmas Special

To propagate an idea advanced by his wife, Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company of America, will produce a special Christmas film showing the "Spirit of Liberty," to be exemplified in the picture by the children receiving American-made, instead of German-made toys, etc.

It is said that the film will be shown in a New York theatre on Christmas Day, and simultaneously in other parts of the country. Mr. Smith has received a great many letters approving his suggestion to give Liberty Bonds as Christmas gifts. As a consequence, he stated also, each child showing such a gift will be admitted on Christmas Day to the theatre free of charge.

Marines Go Around the Clock Rough Shod

Those marines, thousands of them, make time spin fast in the latest "Around the Clock" film to be released by the Universal. The subject is a two-reeler entitled "Around the Clock with the Marines."

The film is available immediately, and will be distributed as were its predecessors of the "Around the Clock" series, with the direct aid of the Y. M. C. A. It is the practice of the latter organization to send out instructions and literature to all its secretaries and war workers throughout the country urging them to personally help advertise the film in every district.

United Heralds, a New "Fine" Picture

On receiving in Los Angeles a telegram of felicitation from President Berst of United Picture Theatres of America on the success of the initial showing of "The Light of Western Stars," Dustin Farnum expressed his gratification, and is reported to have added: "It is a great picture, and I want to say that the forthcoming one, 'The Man in the Open,' is going to be an exceptional production. I am enthusiastic over the merits and opportunities of Mr. Pocock's stirring book."

Of "A Man in the Open," President Berst is reported to have said: "This is Roger Pocock's most famous novel and gives Dustin Farnum great opportunity for his virile talent." The continuity for the picture was done by Fred Myton, a screen writer of versatility and experience, while the production, which is being supervised by Robert Brunton, is being directed by Ernest C. Warde.

A telegram received at the United offices from Lee A. Ochs announces the enrollment with President Berst's organization of Messrs. Turner and Dahnken of Oakland, Cal. Following upon Mr. Ochs' recent signing up of the new California theatre in Los Angeles, this acquisition of the Rialto theatre in Oakland, with one of the largest seating capacities in the country, is regarded as indicative of the success of the United organization throughout the West.

Spy Nest Uppermost in New Metro Film

According to announcements this week from the publicity department of Metro Pictures Corporation, the activities of a nest of German spies, watched and checkmated by skilled members of the United States Secret Service, are shown in "The Man Who Stayed at Home," Metro's all-star screen version of the brilliant patriotic drama by Lechmore Worrall and J. E. Harold Terry. Herbert Blache is directing this feature photodrama, in the notable cast of which are included King Baggot, Claire Whitney, Robert Whittier, Alexandre Herbert, Lilie Leslie, Frank Fisher Bennett, Ricca Allen and George Paton Gibbs.

Artcraft Stars Hart in Comedy

William S. Hart is said to have an opportunity to work in a real comedy, with touches of drama, in his newest Artcraft film by C. Gardner Sullivan, "Branding Broadway."

Whatever else may be said of the film, it is asserted that it has novelty and humor. Moreover it takes the vigorous star from the West, except in the beginning, and plants him in the busy marts of trade and the lanes of pleasure, yclept the White Way of Manhattan.

Seena Owen is the leading woman in the story which deals with a puncher, who is shipped out of town in Arizona and sees an ad in the paper which takes him through to the big town.

Best Fox Films After Embargo

Rearrangement of Releases Makes Some of the Best William Fox Pictures Available Immediately After Lifting of Embargo

Gladys Brockwell's latest appearance was in "The Strange Woman," a Fox production

ALTHOUGH the Fox Film Corporation, in common with several other producers, has stopped releasing pictures for one month, as a result of the influenza epidemic, the rearrangement of the schedule of releases makes some of the best productions ever made by William Fox available for exhibitors immediately after the embargo is lifted.

One of these pictures is declared to be "18 to 45," the vital story of the new draft, which R. A. Walsh has staged as the picture of democracy's army.

In the William Fox standard group, Evelyn Nesbit's first picture, "The Woman Who Gave," will be among the early November releases. This picture was written by Izola Forrester and staged by Kenean Buel. Miss Nesbit's work in this picture, it is stated by the Fox offices, will be a revelation to her admirers.

Another of the Standard Picture group set for release early in November is "The She-Devil, a super-production staged by J. Gordon Edwards.

The William Fox Victory Pictures group presents for early November release what Mr. Fox considers the strongest trio of productions so far available in this series. Tom Mix in "Fame and Fortune," Gladys Brockwell in "The Strange Woman" and George Walsh in "I'll Say So!" a rapid-action farce-comedy, are the first three Victory Pictures scheduled for release next month.

"Fame and Fortune" is a picturization of a novel by Charles Alden Seltzer, and is considered even faster and more full of action than "Mr. Logan, U. S. A.," the biggest success Tom Mix has ever achieved. Gladys Brockwell's first release after the embargo will be "The Strange Woman."

"Tell It to the Marines," starring Jane and Katherine Lee, and Virginia Pearson in "Buchanan's Wife," are Excel Pictures set for an early release. It was written and staged by Arvid E. Gillstrom and is said to contain several novel photographic effects.

"Buchanan's Wife" is a dramatization of the well-known novel of Justus Miles Forman. The scenario was written by Adrian Johnson, who wrote the scenario for "Salome," and the picture was staged by Charles J. Brabin, one of the new William Fox directors.

Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs Active

American Defense Society and Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs Help Exploitation of Jewel Production, "The Yellow Dog"

WITH the backing of the American Defense Society and the National Association of Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs, Jewel Productions is making tremendous headway, it reports, in the exploitation of the feature film "The Yellow Dog."

The Defense Society has taken steps to send special advertising material to all its local committees conveying the society's indorsement of the picture. Meantime the Anti-Yellow Dog clubs have created a demand for the film in all districts.

In addition to these outside helps, Jewel Productions has made arrangements with powerful newspapers in many large cities to conduct a special advertising and publicity campaign as a patriotic enterprise in support of "The Yellow Dog."

The picture is now enjoying its prerelease showing at the Broadway theatre, New York. It is reported to have attracted capacity audiences daily.

The film aroused particular interest because of Germany's latest peace proposals. At several showings a veritable demonstration occurred when sub-titles and scenes appeared conveying a message bearing on the practice of rumor spreading.

In harmony with the activities of the Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs, patriotic societies in all cities are waging a campaign against Yellow Dogism.

A notable instance of this warfare was the action of the American Protective League recently in Cleveland. This group had its agents post thousands of placards in Cleveland's stores and other conspicuous places warning munitions and government workers to be careful of their speech, because of the increased activities of German sympathizers. The placards were a precise reflection of the propaganda being conducted by the Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs.

Trade-Mark Standardizes Film

I. W. Keerl of Mission Productions Declares for Trade-Mark to Promote Standardization of Film Productions.

"THE proof of a picture is its pulling power.

"When I saw in Chicago two hundred miles of buildings equipped with a certain steel boiler, I began to realize the value of a trademark, and when I became identified with the motion picture industry, I determined to try out the trademark idea if ever the opportunity came to me. It has come, and if it be possible to make a trademark stand for a definite idea in the production of motion pictures, the bell and the golden poppies that make up the war gonfalon of Mission Productions will certainly be one."

Mr. I. W. Keerl, general manager of Miss Productions, secretary of the Corona Cinema Company and superintendent of production of the last Dustin Farnum features, made this statement at the last Liberty Loan meeting in Los Angeles before the "flu" scare closed the Victory Tank drives. A bunch of picture people were waiting for the stars of the Robert Brunton Studios to appear when the question of trademarks came up. Mr. Keerl continued:

"Of course, some one will say that you can't standardize pictures, and I admit that practice has thrown weight of argument in favor of that opinion; but, after all, it is opinion and not fact. There was a time when everybody believed that the earth was flat, but that belief didn't in the least affect the truth about the earth. It just kept on being round like a ball, as our geographies used to tell us.

"Also, of course, motion picture making cannot be reduced to formula like baking powder and soap, or to plans and specifications like automobiles, for the important reason that so many different elements enter into their making; but, given a star of known capacity; direction skillful and intelligent; stories of a certain quality constructed to fit the star, and photography unexceptionable, what, except pure ignorance and incompetence, is going to stand in the way of a picture approximating to excellence.

"If I make one such picture I haven't proven anything, but if all the pictures I make approximate the standard of excellence established in the first picture, then I have attained to standardization, and my trademark has come to stand for a definite entity in pictures.

"I am one of those who build with faith. I believe in the mission of the motion picture, and realize that it is in evolution, therefore I feel justified in claiming the uttermost for it.

"Have you ever noticed that as soon as the wise guy hollers, 'It can't be done,' the foolish one just 'nacherally goes and does it.' It happens every day. You know they said Germany couldn't be whipped. Well, if all the Allies had been as well prepared as the Robbers of the Rhine, taking an all-day sucker from a sick baby would have been an athletic feat as compared with the ease with which the Allies would have busted into Berlin.

"But that's all aside from trademarks. The proof of a picture is its pulling power. If Bill Smith makes a certain kind of picture that always pulls 'em into the box office, the thing that stands for those pictures, his trademark, has achieved a definite value and a definite meaning in the industry, and soon the fan begins to associate a certain quality with Smith's trademark, with the result that when he sees it he 'turns in at the sign.'

"The day of the trademark is already here, and standardization can be attained if an attempt be not made to operate on too vast a plan, in which case confusion is bound to follow.

"I look for many small independent companies, each creating a definite value in picture production, to be the next development in motion picture evolution, and I feel sure that when that time comes the 'Periclean age' of picture-making will begin."

Lehrman Completes New Sunshine Comedy

"The Fatal Marriage" is the title of the new Henry Lehrman Sunshine Comedy to follow "Mongrels." Billie Ritchie, Hugh Fay and Sylvia Day carry the main parts.

Lockwood Release Named by Metro

"The Great Romance," starring Harold Lockwood, Metro star who died a few days ago, has been designated for release by Metro as a Screen Classics production. The picture was directed by Henry Otto, and was Lockwood's second appearance in a special attraction feature, his first Screen Classic subject having been "Pals First," released by Metro October 7th.

Finis Fox wrote "The Great Romance" especially for Mr. Lockwood. It is an original romantic drama based on the timely theme of democracy versus autocracy, and is characterized by a big motif interesting treated.

The central figure in the story, played by Mr. Lockwood, is that of a democratic young man who, believing himself to be an American, is therefore shocked to learn that he owes allegiance to a foreign crown and that his return to his native land is imperative.

Sherry Service Strong at N. Y. Strand This Week

The Wm. L. Sherry Service predominates for the week of October 21 at the New York Strand theatre. The main feature is one of the first new G. M. Anderson releases, a subject entitled "Shootin' Mad." Also on the Strand program is the fourth of the Burlingham Travel Pictures, "The Return of Our War Heroes to Switzerland."

These Burlingham Travel Pictures have proven most popular at the Strand and other important theatres. There are thirty of these travel subjects, booked solid at the New York Strand through the Wm. L. Sherry Service.

Albert Capellani Goes to Los Angeles

Albert Capellani, the noted director, left Saturday for Los Angeles, where he will at once take up the production of "The Red Lantern," the big Chinese spectacle play, in which Alla Nazimova will be starred.

This is M. Capellani's first visit to the Pacific slope.

"The Romance of Tarzan" Brings Publicity

The first newspaper clippings received by First National Exhibitors' Circuit on the early showings of "The Romance of Tarzan" indicate that the sequel to the famous "Tarzan of the Apes" will receive far more actual space in the daily papers than did its predecessor.

The Lincoln, Neb., State-Journal in its issues of the week beginning October 6 devotes quarter and half-columns to stories announcing that the sequel is to be shown at the Rialto theatre. Comparison of this space in the State-Journal with that given by the same newspaper to "Tarzan of the Apes," shows that the sequel is outbidding it in popularity.

Kokomo, Ind.; Tulsa, Okla.; Rockford, Ill.; Washington, D. C., and many other cities report great increases in publicity also.

These reports on the estimation of newspapers of the public interest in "The Romance of Tarzan" were obtained by First National through its regular clipping service, and not from any of the entries submitted by exhibitors for the advertising and publicity contest being conducted on the production with $1,200 in Liberty Bonds of the fourth issue as prizes to the most efficient advertisers and stunt promotion men among theatre-owners who show "The Romance of Tarzan."

Mutual Closes Two Big Foreign Deals

Two important foreign trade transactions have been concluded by James M. Sheldon, president of the Mutual Film Corporation. The rights to sixteen five-reel features have been sold in the British Isles and South America.

Both deals include the productions of the Empire All Star Corporation, which picturized Charles Frohman's stage successes, together with six features starring Miss Edna Goodrich, which were produced by the Mutual Film Corporation.

The sale of the British rights was consummated through Frank S. Phelps, Mr. Sheldon's London agent, and the sale for South America was made through the Export & Import Film Company, of New York.

And Clara Swore!!!

Clara Kimball Young succeeded in shocking some real "dough" out of the pockets of the Los Angeles people in Central Park in that city during the recent Bond drive. Clara swore! Yes, sir; she swore right out loud in meeting so that everybody could hear her!

This is what she said:

"In a few minutes Ambassador Gerard is going to tell you some of the things that happened in Berlin and that he told us in New York.

"If it doesn't make your flesh creep, and if after he gets through you don't buy bonds—well, I'll be damned if I don't come down and choke the money out of you!"

"And believe me, boy, they bought bonds," says the Los Angeles "tell-tale."

Goldwyn Entirely On West Coast

All Studio Activities of Goldwyn Are Now Located on the West Coast and Many Forthcoming Productions Announced

Tom Moore's Personality is Displayed to Attractive Advantage in Goldwyn's "Thirty a Week"

GOLDWYN has completed the move that transplants its studio activities from Fort Lee to Los Angeles. A trainload of properties and equipment is on its way to Los Angeles and on November 1 the company takes formal possession of the big Goldwyn plant on the outskirts of Los Angeles.

Tom Moore has been at work in the West Coast studio for the last ten days. Under the direction of Harry Beaumont, Mr. Moore and his leading woman, Ora Carewe, enacted several scenes of "Go West, Young Man." Mae Marsh left New York last Saturday. Mabel Normand will follow shortly.

Madge Kennedy has completed "Primrose," written for her by Cosmo Hamilton, at Fort Lee, and will have a vacation of several weeks before she goes to the coast. Her next production has been selected and the script placed in the hands of her director, Clarence G. Badger.

Geraldine Farrar, whose fourth Goldwyn Picture is nearing completion at Fort Lee, will not go West until after the closing of the opera and concert season in April. Reginald Barker, her director, has already left for the West. Pauline Frederick, who is shortly to begin on her Goldwyn starring career, will follow in a fortnight.

Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, does not expect to go himself until about the middle of November.

Hobart Henley and the Rex Beach company, including Frank McIntyre, which has been secretly at work for several weeks on Mr. Beach's unpublished story, "Too Fat to Fight," have finished and Mr. Henley will go to the Coast as soon as he has cut the new production. Rex Beach and Mrs. Beach will leave in late November.

The company's home office organization, quartered at 16 East 42nd Street, will remain intact in the East. Distribution, both domestic and foreign, accounting, advertising and publicity will continue to be handled from New York.

Cromelin Tells Why He Bought Production

IT is very seldom that a purchaser of a film or the rights to a film tells the man to whom he pays his money why he made the purchase. But President Paul H. Cromelin of Inter-Ocean is the precedent breaker and after concluding the purchase of the foreign rights to "Wives of Men" from the Pioneer Film Corporation, controlling the picture, he wrote President Nathan Hirsch of the latter concern.

"You closed the matter of foreign rights to 'Wives of Men' with my company in record time, and I am now going to underscore the reasons. I believe in exporting a film that buyers can advertise well. It is a day of big publicity—advertising is one of the fields in which there has wisely been little war-time conservation. The very title, 'Wives of Men,' lends itself to big publicity, inasmuch as it is a kind of title that will arouse curiosity, and that is a leading object in any advertising campaign. In every foreign country exhibitors are going in for what we Americans call 'Teaser' advertising, that is linking a question to the title of the film; in this case, for instance, 'What Sort of Women Are the Wives of Men?' etc.

"My concluding reason dovetails with my opening one: campaign book, photographs, lobby displays and posters are unique in an advertising respect. This means much to the people I serve. For when one reads of American exhibitor supremacy in the advertising of their programs, one is apt to forget that the foreign exhibitor is quite as enterprising and dresses his 'front' just as effectively. It tickles American vanity to think of the average foreign cinema exhibition as little better than a tent show, but the true fact is that the standard of foreign theatres is high in construction, sanitary arrangements, house management and advertising methods."

While all the foreign rights were disposed of to Inter-Ocean, Mr. Hirsch announces that a number of good American states are still available.

"Largest in Its Field," Declares L-Ko

During the temporary shutdown of production the L-Ko Comedy Company reports a tightening up of efficiency at its studios to support its claim to the title of the largest comedy film enterprise in the world.

This claim was put forward recently when the company issued a review of its personnel and operating history.

Simplex System Proves Popular

Exhibitors Express Satisfaction with Zone System of Distribution—Exchanges Active in Placing the Machines

THE zone system of distribution inaugurated by the Precision Machine Company, Inc., some time ago, whereby the distribution of Simplex projectors throughout the United States is placed in the hands of prominent supply dealers in various sections of the country, has proven highly satisfactory in application, and the manufacturers of the Simplex machine supply the following notes regarding the activities of some of their distributors:

The Exhibitors' Supply Company, 407 Mallers Building, Chicago, Ill., with branches at 157 North Illinois Street, Indianapolis, Ind., and 204 Manhattan Building, Milwaukee, Wis., have been very active recently in the promotion of Simplex sales.

A few of their important installations include the Princess theatre, Kendallville, Ind.; St. Joseph Convent, Milwaukee, Wis.; Capitol theatre, Pekin, Ill.; Washington theatre, Indianapolis, Ind.; Lyric theatre, Vincennes, Ind.; Columbia theatre, Logansport, Ind.; Arcade theatre, Winchester, Ind.; Leidipe theatre, Appleton, Wis.; Butterfly theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.; Majestic theatre, Madison, Wis.; and two machines for the "Hearts of the World" company in Chicago.

In the south-west the Mountain Plains Theatre Supply Company, 1514 Welton Street, Denver, Colo., with branches at 106 South 14th Street, Omaha, Neb., and 136 East Second South Street, Salt Lake City, Utah, have made installations at Butte, Omaha, Salt Lake, Sharon, Colorado Springs and a number of small thriving towns in Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and Montana.

Dwyer Brothers & Company, 26 West Naghten Street, Columbus, Ohio, with a branch at 631 Walnut Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, have placed Simplexes with the following theatres and business institutions:

Murphy theatre, Wilmington, Ohio; Virginia theatre, Wellston, Ohio; Le Max theatre, Wilmington, Ohio; Capitol theatre, Frankfort, Ky.; Lyceum theatre, Cincinnati, Ohio; C. H. Brown, Zanesville, Ohio; M. G. Weisinger, Danville, Ky.; W. J. Romans, Lancaster, Ky.; J. B. Stout, Danville, Ky.; L. M. Luchs, Marietta, Ohio; Bert Fialo, Dayton, Ohio; Longly & Steenrod, Nelsonville, Ohio; Frank Moyer, Georgetown, Ohio; Andy Sankers, Hamilton, Ohio, and Pastime Amusement Company, Columbus, Ohio.

A Simplex Machine has been selected by the West Virginia State Department of Health for use on a railway coach which has been especially fitted up for touring that state. The machine has been fitted up in such a manner that films can be shown either inside or outside of the car.

Three Universal Specials After Shutdown

Universal is reported to be banking heavily on the three special attractions which will be released on its program when the shutdown comes to an end. The productions are "Kiss or Kill," featuring Priscilla Dean, supported by Herbert Rawlinson; "Vanity Pool," featuring Mary McLaren, and "Danger—Go Slow," featuring Mae Murray.

"Kiss or Kill" was adapted from a story by Max Brand in the All Story Magazine. It was produced by Elmer Clifton.

"Vanity Pool" revolves about the adventures of a politician, a forlorn girl who is the daughter of destitute theatrical parents, and a scheming newspaper proprietor.

"Danger—Go Slow" is a picture that gives Mae Murray an opportunity to show her talents at impersonating a boy.

"Victory's Triumph," By Pathe, Is Topical

Pathe announces the release on Oct. 13th of an interesting topical reel entitled "Victory's Triumph," which sings a pæan of praise for President Wilson and his War Cabinet, showing the admirable manner in which the nation's Chief Executive has superintended the prosecution of America's war activities.

United Adds Several New Members

Resultant upon the increased activity of United Pictures Theatres of America through the West and Middle West, where Vice-President Lee A. Ochs and Secretary C. R. Seelye, who are on tour respectively in the interests of that organization, managers have been appointed during the week in additional territory.

Mr. Seelye has engaged Milton Simon, H. J. Bayley and F. E. Gebhardt as managers for United in Cincinnati, Cleveland and Omaha respectively, while Harry C. Arthur and C. Montgomery have been appointed in similar capacities in Portland, Ore., and Seattle by Mr. Ochs.

Ian Aronson, United manager in Pittsburgh, reports that at a meeting of prominent Greek exhibitors of Pittsburgh and district the United plan was subjected to official investigation and endorsed, with the result that several theatres, including the Olympic, McKeesport, and the Star theatre, New Kensington, were immediately enrolled in United membership.

De Mille Again Demonstrates Skill

Cecil B. DeMille has again demonstrated, it is declared, that he is a past master at film production, with "The Squaw Man," a modern version of Edwin Milton Royle's famous play, which the same director first made into a screen offering some four years ago. Now he is said to have done it all over again in perfect style with a cast that is declared to be superlative, with the most modern investiture and all the care and attention to detail, the perfection of technical and the greater understanding of picture possibilities that have been developed in the interim.

At advance studio showings of the film it was declared a masterpiece of western drama. It has been brought up to date, the telling points strengthened and the slightest weakness is eliminated. It is said to be a picture that leaves nothing to be desired, either in dramatic quality, interpretation or staging.

Blanche Sweet Production Nearing Completion

Marshall Neilan, who is directing Blanche Sweet in "The Unpardonable Sin" on the Coast, reports this production rapidly nearing completion. The picture when finished will be in eight reels, and from advance reports will be the best thing both star and director have ever done.

Besides Miss Sweet in the cast, who plays Deminy Parcot and Alice Parcot, are Matt Moore as Noll Winsor, Wallace Beery as Colonel Klemm, and Mary Alden as Mrs. Parcot. The picture will be finished about November 1, and after a private showing to Government officials and the Press will probably be put on for a run in one of the New York theatres.

However, this will be decided by Harry Garson as soon as he returns East with the prints, and it will also then be announced as to how the Blanche Sweet pictures are to be released.

Corinne Griffith, Vitagraph Star, is to be Seen Next in "Miss Ambition"

Farnum Rebookings Gain in Volume

With all film production stopped for a month, the popularity of William Farnum has proved itself as never, says a statement from the Fox Film Corporation. Exhibitors, realizing the drawing power of this star, have been quick to respond to the opportunity that lies in booking for return engagements many of the Farnum Standard Pictures that have scored successes in the past.

The success Farnum has achieved in "Riders of the Purple Sage" and "The Rainbow Trail," Zane Gray novels, has strengthened his position in the front rank of male stars. All over the country, reports to the Fox offices show, these twin pictures have been playing to good houses.

Exhibitors who have shown "Riders of the Purple Sage," but who have failed to show some of the previous Farnum Standard Pictures, are said to be availing themselves of the non-release period to exploit the success of this picture by showing earlier Farnum features on the Standard Pictures program. In other cases, exhibitors have turned to Farnum pictures for repeats, the daily booking reports in the Fox offices show, and in this way are reaping an immediate benefit from Farnum's latest successes.

"Goldwyn Month" in One Los Angeles Theatre

It is "Goldwyn Month" at J. A. Quinn's Rialto theatre, Los Angeles. With "Goldwyn Weeks" being observed regularly throughout the country, Manager Quinn decided to go further and feature Goldwyn Pictures for more than thirty consecutive days.

He booked the following Goldwyn pictures and announced long runs in large display space in the Los Angeles dailies:

September 29 to October 5—"Friend Husband," starring Madge Kennedy.

October 6 to October 12—"The Turn of the Wheel," starring Geraldine Farrar.

October 13 to October 19—"Peck's Bad Girl," starring Mabel Normand.

October 20 to October 26—"The Kingdom of Youth," starring Madge Kennedy.

October 27 to November 2—"Hidden Fires," starring Mae Marsh.

Garrett In Big Foreign Deal

President of J. Frank Brockliss Company Buys First National Subjects for Greater Part of the World

ONE of the largest single transactions ever concluded in this market for the foreign rights of American screen productions was consummated last week by Sidney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss Company, in behalf of Madame Schuepbach, head of the Mundus Film Company of Paris.

The transaction involves the purchase of the productions of the First National Exhibitors' Exchange, excluding the Chaplin pictures, for France, Switzerland, Holland, Italy, Greece, Egypt, the French Colonies and the Balkans.

Mr. Garrett, as the American executive of the Mundus Film Company, made the purchase through David P. Howells, who controls the foreign rights of the First National. In addition to the First National product, Mr. Garrett has purchased for Madame Schuepbach all the Metro Pictures and Screen Classics pictures, of which the J. Frank Brockliss Company controls the world rights; the Lillian Walker pictures, and such well-known specials as the famous Million Dollar Chaplin Comedies, for France and Switzerland, "The Whip," "The Barrier," "The Bar Sinister," "To-day," "The Mad Lover," "Lest We Forget," "The Cold Deck" and others of like calibre.

Recognizing that the greatest returns for American producers were to be obtained through the direct sale of their product abroad, rather than through brokers or agents in New York, Mr. Garrett has established world-wide connections which insure the direct exploitation of pictures in the territories for which they are intended.

The principal branches of this international organization are the J. Frank Brockliss Company, of London, and the Mundus Film Company, of Paris, with offices in Spain, Italy and other countries. As a result of these connections, Mr. Garrett has been able to perfect a system of intercontinental distribution, which covers seventy-five per cent of the world, and which he expects soon will completely girdle the globe.

Two Film Extravaganzas by Fox

William Fox Announces That He Has Produced Two Film Extravaganzas—"Fan Fan" and "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves"

WILLIAM FOX has produced two mammoth film extravaganzas, which for novel treatment, for stupendous scenic effects and for originality of theme are said to surpass anything hitherto attempted on the screen. These extravaganzas are "Fan Fan" and "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves," and they probably will be issued the latter part of November.

Before deciding to put extravaganza on the screen, William Fox made a thorough study of how this type of entertainment could be adapted to the films. It was evident from the beginning that the films, by their greater scope and practically unlimited resources for scenic display, were peculiarly adapted for an even greater development of extravaganza than was possible on the regular stage. Experimentation, however, showed that the camera could give effects that made film extravaganzas something absolutely new.

Because of their nature these extravaganzas are believed to afford splendid attractions for the Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays. They carry the holiday spirit and it is argued should prove big money-makers during the holiday season.

Exceptional publicity and advertising aids have been devised for the two pictures, it is said. A strikingly beautiful art book, done in colors and showing the exquisite settings of the plays, has been printed, and an exceptionally comprehensive press book will be issued to show exhibitors how these two productions can be most profitably exploited.

The scenes of "Fan Fan" are laid in Japan, and the settings are unusually beautiful, great care having been taken to preserve the proper atmosphere for the story.

The other production, "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves," has its locale in Persia, and tells the story known and loved wherever the Arabian Nights are read.

"Belgium Feature Registers Big

"Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief," Which Registered So Heavily in New York and Chicago, Now Ready for Market

VERY few film productions have received the vast amount of advance newspaper publicity and favorable criticisms as did "Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief," which was first shown at the Auditorium in Chicago last April under auspices of the woman's committee, Council of National Defense, and more recently in New York.

This production is now available to state right buyers and portrays the history of Belgium from 1830 up to the present time. One part of the film is said to have been taken at the time of the coronation of King Albert in 1909 and the last part of the picture shows the devastation of Belgium and ends with the arrival of the American troops.

It is said that the costumes for the first part of the production were loaned from the national archives of Belgium or copied from the plates in their possession, and the men and women of the Brussels court posed as the historic characters. The scenes are said to have all been taken at the exact locations where the events occurred.

The film shows that Belgium, as the cradle of democracy, had battled against tyrannical dynasties of her own for the rights and freedom of her citizens centuries before the United States came into being, and had fought neighboring monarchies in support of these principles.

The production demonstrates that for hundreds of years Belgium has been the battleground for opposing countries of Europe. England, France and Austria fought and bled on Belgian soil and she was buffeted around from one power to another until the European monarchs combined and drew up an agreement to hold inviolate the sacredness of Belgium soil and to protect her from ruthless invasion.

That document has since become known as the "scrap of paper." From the exciting events attending her existence came the inspiration to picture her progress. Belgian players were marshalled together to represent historical figures in the reproductions of notable events.

The crowning and death of King Leopold and the coronation of King Albert were some of the incidents that came under the camera's gaze and is brought out so forcefully in this production.

First "Outdoor" Films Made by Rothacker

"Flat-Heads and Blackfeet" is the title of the first series of "Outdoor" pictures produced by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, released on the weekly schedule of Mutual.

This "Outdoor" could well be styled "The Blackfeet Indian Cabaret." The scenes are on the Blackfeet Reservation and show the aboriginal on his native heath in his hours of relaxation, which are many.

"In securing these subjects for our 'Outdoor' program, I feel that Mutual is prepared to fill a long-felt want for the exhibitor," said Assistant General Manager Kirkpatrick.

The second in the series of "Outdoor" releases is called "Bad Men and Good Scenery," and will be released the week following "Flat-Heads and Blackfeet."

"Wives of Men" Offered to Exhibitors

"Now that general releasing and production has been stopped for several weeks, exhibitors will naturally turn to the state rights market," declared an official of the Pioneer Film Corporation of New York. "The wise manager will pick an attraction, wherever possible, that will stand being played for several days. In 'Wives of Men' theatre managers have just such an attraction.

"It was shown on Broadway at one of New York City's largest theatres for two weeks and played to packed houses at every performance. This feature stars Florence Reed in one of her greatest emotional roles. The story is one of deep and general interest, and the paper and advertising helps available all combine to be of great help to exhibitors at the present time."

Gerard Production Is Still Scoring

Recent reports from Canadian exhibitors declare that the early popularity in the Dominion of "My Four Years in Germany" is continuing unabated, and that return engagements in a great many instances have resulted in attendance greater than characterized the initial showings.

The recent peace overtures sent from Berlin to President Wilson have had a certain effect, it is believed, on the public interest in facts set forth in Ambassador Gerard's motion picture version of his celebrated book.

Cinema Doll Comedies Reported Popular

Their worth as a reliable program subject is recorded for the Cinema Doll Comedies, single-reel novelty productions by the Emerald Motion Picture Company of Chicago, through inquiries at General Film exchanges in all the territory where theatres are open during the period of suspended releasing orders.

The three subjects released prior to the period were "The Burglar Man," "The Handy Man" and "The Knockout."

Art Books Show Fox Modernism in Selling

With the march forward of the artistic ideals and methods of the film industry in general, there has also been a steady tendency for the better in the merchandizing methods of several producers. This is evidenced in the development of art books.

Illustrations of this tendency are given in several art books recently issued by the Fox Film Corporation as advertising and publicity aids. One of these is a book published in connection with the William Fox morality play, "Why I Would Not Marry." Printed in two colors on heavy gloss paper, this book affords a striking example of what can be done in an artistic way for the merchandizing of films. The book is profusely illustrated with colored plates of original paints by George Grant, art director of a monthly magazine, and the text, written by Pauline Felix, well known as a New York newspaper writer, gets away from the beaten path of press book matter.

With "The Woman Who Gave," the first picture Evelyn Nesbit has made in the series she is producing for William Fox, there has been published a comprehensive press book, calculated to give exhibitors every sort of assistance in exploiting the picture, and a beautiful art book.

"The Spender" Is Metro's Next Lytell Picture

Bert Lytell's newest Metro production is "The Spender," and Charles Swickard, Lytell's director, had hoped to finish the camera work on the picture within record time, but was disappointed because of weather handicaps.

"The Spender," by Frederick Orin Bartlett, appeared first as a fiction story in The Saturday Evening Post. It was adapted for the screen by George D. Baker, Metro's western manager of production, and A. G. Kenyon, of the scenario staff.

Mary Anderson is Lytell's leading woman. Rosemary Theby has a vampire role, and others prominent in the cast are Thomas Jefferson, son of the late Joseph Jefferson; William V. Mong and Clarence Burton. Lytell's next picture will be "Faith," from the short story by Richard Washburn Child, scenarioized by Messrs. Baker and Kenyon.

Famous Players-Lasky Announces Changes

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces the following changes among the officials of its branch offices:

Harry H. Buxbaum, who for the past several months has been Special Representative to Exchanges, has been appointed manager of the Pittsburgh office, succeeding L. W. Kniskern, resigned.

W. R. Scates has been appointed manager of the Chicago branch, succeeding F. M. Brockwell, resigned. E. T. Gerrish has resigned as manager of the Cleveland office and G. W. Erdman has been promoted from salesman to manager to succeed him.

Tarzan Contest Is Developing

First National Reports That Exhibitors Are Keenly Interested in Advertising and Publicity Contest on "The Romance of Tarzan"

COPIES of page, half-page, quarter and eighth-page newspaper advertisements, specimen house programs, photographs of special lobby displays and interior decorations are beginning to arrive in volume at the general offices of the First National.

The offer of $1,200 in Liberty bonds of the fourth issue as awards for the best exhibitor advertisements of "The Romance of Tarzan" in the four classifications of theatres has awakened a surprising interest in every department of theatre advertising, according to exhibitor-directors of the First National.

While it is still too early to determine approximately how many entries there will be when the contest closes on December 30 of this year, it is apparent, they say, that fully seventy-five per cent of the exhibitors who are First National franchise holders, or owners of blanket contracts for all First National releases, will be among the competitors. That the total number of entries may be even higher in percentage than this is declared to be a strong possibility.

While the influenza epidemic, with the resultant closing of theatres in a number of communities, has enforced a postponement of play dates on "The Romance of Tarzan," thus reducing the number of entries which would have been received during the first ten days of the contest under normal conditions, it is apparent, from the letters written by exhibitors expressing their intentions about the competition, that they are devoting a part of their idle time to working out more details of the proposed local advertising and publicity campaigns in behalf of the production.

The question of the exact purpose and intent of the contest was amplified beyond the brevity of the announcement covering it in recent trade journal advertisements by an exhibitor-director for First National, who said:

"Like other distributors, we are spending considerable money on each production we release to provide exhibitors with material for profitable local advertising and publicity campaigns. It is possible for us to check closely the results obtained by theatres owned and operated by our own franchise holders, and while they, of course, are eligible as entrants in the competition and will take an active part in it, it is more a method of determining the efficiency of the unknown quantity among exhibitors, and to arrive at a basis for studying it intelligently, that the contest was planned and inaugurated."

It was further stated at the offices of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit that there is no restriction in the rules governing the contest against the use, by prospective entrants, of any of the material, specimen ads, publicity cuts, advertising cuts or publicity stories published in the press sheet for "The Romance of Tarzan." It is expected that exhibitors will vary the style and wording of the ready-made campaigns and in many instances elaborate upon them or conceive of entirely new and original ideas from them.

Foreign Rights Sold for Many Goodrich Films

The Export and Import Film Company announces the sale for Australasia and New Zealand of six Edna Goodrich subjects, including "Queen X," "Her Second Husband," "An American Maid," "Who Loved Him Best?" "A Daughter of Maryland" and "Reputation"; also ten Empire all-star subjects, including "The Outcast," "A Beautiful Adventure," "The Imposter," "Please Help Emily," etc.

These pictures were recently sold for Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Brazil.

The Export and Import Film Company also announces that there are several other large deals pending, which will be given publicity within a few days.

Wehlen Story Finished

Emmy Wehlen's forthcoming feature picture from Metro, according to an announcement this week by that organization, has been completed at the Metro studio under the direction of Harry L. Franklin, assisted by Fred Warren.

"Sylvia on a Spree" is said to be one of the most brilliant productions ever undertaken by Miss Wehlen, which is saying much when "The Shell Game," "The Duchess of Doubt," "The Trail of the Shadow," and other of her feature photodramas are called to mind.

Four New Paramount Pictures

Lila Lee, Pauline Frederick, Billie Burke and Vivian Martin in New Productions for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation

"THE SECRET GARDEN," Lila Lee's third Paramount picture, serves to introduce that little star in a role decidedly different from her preceding ones. One of the strongest of Paramount casts is announced in support; Spottiswood Aitken, Dick Rosson, Clarence Geldart, Fay Holderness, James Neill, Paul Willis, Larry Steers, Mlle. Dione, Ann Malone and Lucille Ward.

G. Butler Clonebaugh, who directed the picture, is said to have done highly creditable work and the scenario of Marion Fairfax is excellently handled. Henry Kotani was the photographer and Lou Howland assisted with the direction.

"A Daughter of the Old South," Pauline Frederick's latest Paramount picture, has been scheduled for release at an early date.

Alicia Ramsey and Rudolph de Cordova wrote the story and Margaret Turnbull is responsible for the continuity. Emile Chautard, the famous French producer, directed the picture and the camera work is that of Jacques Bizeul.

Billie Burke's newest Paramount photoplay, "The Make-Believe Wife," has been scheduled for early release by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. A large part of the picture was filmed at Lake Placid, in the Adirondack mountains, noted the world over for its scenic beauty.

Miss Burke is splendidly supported in this production, her leading man being David Powell, who gained a wide reputation with Sir Herbert Beerbohm-Tree, Ellen Terry and Forbes-Robertson long before he turned his talents to the screen.

WILLIAM HOHENZOLLERN & CO.
WHOLESALE BUTCHERS

Vivian Martin entertains in "Mirandy Smiles" (Paramount)

A delightful story of a little scrub girl serves to introduce Vivian Martin in her next Paramount picture, "Mirandy Smiles," which first shows us Mirandy Judkins, the heroine, washing the floor of the Opera House in a middle-western town. Then her romance starts and moves through situations laughable and dramatic to a happy ending.

Douglas MacLean, who recently played opposite Mary Pickford, has the leading role and the direction was by William de Mille. Frank E. Garbutt did the camera work.

Those who have important character roles are Louis Willoughby, Maym Kelso, Gean Gennung, William Freeman, Elinor Hancock, and Frances Beech. Willoughby is a widely known character actor, and Maym Kelso, veteran actress of both stage and screen, will be remembered for her work in recent Paramount and Artcraft Pictures.

Barriscale's Newest Is "Two Gun Betty"

Bessie Barriscale's newest production, now being filmed at the Brunton studios, is entitled "Two-Gun Betty," and will be distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

She appears as a boy on a western ranch on a bet and fondly imagines that her companions do not know it. Five reels of clever comedy is said to be the result after the cowboys stage several hair-raising adventures for her.

Public Screening Room Opened

Fred Rosner, formerly with the World Film Corporation, has opened a projecting room on the third floor of the film building at 130 West 46th Street, New York. Mr. Rosner's books are open to any who wish to run pictures privately.

Maurice Tourneur's Long Quest for an Eve

Maurice Tourneur's forthcoming production, "Woman," calls for an extended reproduction of The Garden of Eden, with Adam and Eve in their original negligee of the days when the coal problem was a thing ages away.

Mr. Tourneur describes his long search for an ideal Eve in an amusing way. "At first thought," he says, "it would seem to be an easy matter to find an Eve in New York, with its many beautiful choristers, art models and so on, but the reverse proved to be true, much to our genuine surprise.

"Finally I found Ethel Hallor of the Century roof show. She looked at the matter from the angle of the model and the painter and, as she measured up to every detail of beauty necessary to an ideal Eve, we gladly secured her services. She is a sister of Edith Hallor, who scored last season in "Leave it to Jane."

Travers Vale to Direct Gail Kane

Gail Kane's next special production, to be made by her own company, Gail Kane Productions, "The Kaiser Bride," for release through Mutual, will be directed by Travers Vale.

A few of the pictures he has directed are "Under Two Flags," "Jane Eyre" and "Beyond the Wall." It is said that the cast which is being completed by Mr. Vale will include some well known players in support of Miss Kane.

The Biograph studios which were used for the other Kane productions will also be used for the making of "The Kaiser Bride." The story of this picture was especially written for Miss Kane by John Colton, and the scenario by Eve Unsell.

Bara in New Orleans to Film "The Light"

Theda Bara left for New Orleans where she is filming exteriors for a new William Fox Standard picture being directed by J. Gordon Edwards. The picture bears the working title of "The Light."

The trip to New Orleans was made necessary by the fact that the story has a French setting and New Orleans was considered the only place in this country where the proper French atmosphere could be properly duplicated.

John Bowers Engaged by Goldwyn

The appearance of a new leading man in Goldwyn pictures is made known with the announcement of the engagement of John Bowers to support Madge Kennedy in "Primrose," written for her by Cosmo Hamilton.

Mr. Bowers has been placed under contract and will be seen frequently in the near future opposite several of the Goldwyn stars.

Harry Rapf Urges More Intensified Booking

Harry Rapf is an independent producer of feature pictures. When interviewed by a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS anent the probable effects of the present embargo of the industry, Mr. Rapf declared that the effects should be excellent all around.

"The closing down of motion picture production will save the industry many thousands of dollars," asserted Mr. Rapf. "It means sixty to seventy less productions on the market, thereby giving productions which should play more than twenty-five per cent of the theatres an opportunity to play a great many more houses.

"I agree with Mr. George Kleine that an average production only plays twenty-five per cent of its actual playing value, and the pictures produced by the independent producer only plays about ten per cent. Why should this be?

"Why the answer is that the independent producer cannot sell one hundred per cent of his merchandise because there are certain territories where it takes from twelve to eighteen months to even get into.

"The result is that the independent producer's pictures never get a proper distribution. Why cannot a good picture stand the run of a long term of playing? Why should a good production be 'dead' almost directly after its release?

"Does a play, if it is good, run out of its value in ten or ninety days? No. Many plays run years, as we all know.

"Does a vaudeville production die at the end of a few months? Why I have had vaudeville acts play over the circuits for three or four years. And yet, no picture can play in the same houses more than three days, and never to return again, except in very rare cases. It's all wrong," declared Mr. Rapf.

"Last spring I released two wonderful productions, "The Struggle Everlasting," starring Florence Reed, and "The Accidental Honeymoon," starring Robert Warwick. I advertised them extensively and only sold about sixty per cent of the territory rights, over the summer.

"These productions have been released by the state rights men early this fall with tremendously big results. They are both worthy enough to play many more big houses in the United States, and I sincerely hope that they will through this opportunity that the embargo offers.

"I trust that they will be shown in a great many houses that they might not have reached if the constant flow of productions had lasted. But, what is most important, I hope that they will bring about a move whereby good pictures will live and be booked and rebooked regardless of whether they were shown in one theatre in certain localities or not.

"Let all theatregoers have an opportunity of seeing good pictures, and not 'here tonight and gone tomorrow,' never to be seen again. The public wants to see all good pictures. So play them. Don't ask for new ones, but get the real value out of each and every production," concluded Mr. Rapf.

Metro Gets Keystone Scenes

Takes Company to Pennsylvania for "Wilson or the Kaiser?"—Annie Russell Has a Chief Role

THE transporting and care of the company and equipment for the exterior scenes of "Wilson or the Kaiser?" the Screen Classics, Inc., super-feature now being completed, has been a big undertaking, requiring the attention of the firm's experts, in management, when making the trip to the Pennsylvania mountains, where scenes representing the sacking of a Belgian village were photographed. The company of several hundred people went by special train to Philadelphia, thence to a smaller Pennsylvania city, and from there by trolley and motor-trucks to the tiny hamlet chosen as the location. The trolley, which was of the "Toonerville" variety, was completely jolted out of its leisurely schedule.

Director Charles Miller, his assistant, Edmund Lawrence, and their co-workers were aided in every way possible by the mayor of the village and by all its citizens. Advantage was taken of the permission given to rope off the entire village against possible intruders, so that the work of players, directors and cameramen should not be interfered with. However, the precaution was scarcely necessary, since Director Miller utilized every available person not actually camera-shy, sending to Philadelphia for costumes when the residents did not happen to own clothing sufficiently old and picturesque. An interesting incident was the reopening of a big box of clothing, ready to send abroad for relief work. As soon as the scenes had been taken, these articles were returned, and the box mailed up again, ready for its journey overseas.

When Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, succeeded in persuading Annie Russell to play the part of Nurse Edith Cavell in the coming Screen Classics super-feature, "Wilson or the Kaiser?" one of the last of the stars of the dramatic stage sucumbed to the lure of the screen. Miss Russell was influenced in her decision to accept the offer by reason of the fact that shs herself is English by birth, and she was anxious to do honor to the martyred nurse. She considers her work in "Wilson or the Kaiser?" a patriotic privilege. Miss Russell's husband, Oswald Yorke, is also English. He has gone overseas to do work in connection with the Y. M. C. A.

Maxwell Karger, author of "Wilson or the Kaiser?" and director-general of the Metro forces, was also anxious that Miss Russell should play Nurse Cavell, believing that the spirituelle quality which has made her adored by the audiences of America and England, as well as her consummate ability in her life-work, make her ideally fitted for the part. Miss Russell expresses in her countenance the nobility of character that made Edith Cavell's life shine as an example throughout stricken Belgium. Moreover, Miss Russell bears an actual likeness to Nurse Cavell.

Another Theatre Added to Fox Chain

William Fox, president of the Fox Film Company, has leased the Empire theatre at Nos. 152-4-6 Ellison street, Paterson, N. J., for a long period of years from the Northern New Jersey Realty Co., through Feist & Feist, Inc., of Newark, N. J.

The theatre is on a plot 75 feet front on Ellison street, with a depth of 120 feet, and was built about seven years ago. It is to be entirely remodeled at a cost of substantially $35,000. The improvements consist of substantial changes to the entrance front, the eliminating and re-construction of the stage, the elimination of the top gallery and in the increasing of the balcony.

The seating capacity of the theatre, when improvements are completed will be the largest in the City of Paterson, having about 1,800 seats. The organ to be installed will be of the most modern type construction, and the largest installed in the State. There will be many new features including the latest type of ventilating system by which fresh air is constantly circulated throughout, and an exhaust to remove all impure air.

The policy of the theatre will be of high standard exclusively for Fox productions, and will show only first-run pictures and will be known as the Fox Empire theatre.

It was formerly used for high-class legitimate productions and is located at the trolley loop around the City Hall, in the centre of the city. This is the eighteenth theatre in the Fox chain, and the fourth in the State of New Jersey.

The Northern New Jersey Realty Co. was represented by J. E. Glasser and Robert H. Cunningham, attorney, and the Fox Company by William Fox, president.

Universal Adds Baker to Reform Publicity

THE Universal Film Company has added Tarkington Baker, formerly in charge of the photoplay department of the Indianapolis Star, to its publicity staff. Mr. Baker's title is head of the Newspaper Publicity Department and his duties will be to improve the type of press matter sent to all newspapers throughout the country and to establish press representatives in the various exchange territories in order to whip the news into shape for local consumption.

Mr. Baker's task is a big one and he has undertaken it at the special request of R. H. Cochrane. During his connection with the Star, Mr. Baker entered into extensive correspondence with Mr. Cochrane as to the type of publicity matter the paper was receiving from the Universal Company and all other producing organizations. Mr. Baker claims that little or any of it is fit for use as it comes into the office. Press agents, he says, have neeglected to keep up with the advance of the picture business, and the publicity matter now issued tends to cheapen the productions. Mr. Baker makes this statement sweepingly and excepts none of the producing companies from it.

As a result of this correspondence Mr. Baker came east and is now established in the New York office. He intends to leave soon on a trip throughout the country to appoint publicity representatives in all territories and to visit newspaper editors.

In an interview with a NEWS representative this week, Mr. Baker stated that a huge parent organization could not determine the relative news value of its various stories when it came to the various localities in the country. "An article may be worth a half column in Indiana when it's only worth a stick in Wisconsin," said Mr. Baker, "and so the Universal will adopt a plan of sending its news to the exchange publicity representative which I will appoint. These representatives are to be newspaper men or women, qualified to determine the relative value of all news matter. They will rewrite it and inject in it the required 'local' touch. It is these touches in stories that photoplay editors seek. For instance, all Indiana is unusually interested when a native star appears in a picture. This is only an instance There are many others of a similar nature.

"The modern day press agent," continued Mr. Baker, "still believes that a load of superlatives carries weight. He seems to take the picture fan as a being of exceedingly low mentality. In reality he is a well educated, refined person, at least throughout the smaller towns of the United States where the major portion of the producer's revenue comes from. He knows that superlatives have been misused so long that they mean little or nothing when carelessly used.

"Again, the producers' press agents seem to forget that the cost of white paper is rising.

Y. M. C. A. Film Will Be Released Soon

The release date of the Y. M. C. A. movie, "The Red Triangle," has necessarily been postponed because of the film companies' decision to hold up all pictures for four weeks. Application has been made to the War Department, however, to get a special release date for this film, in order that it may be exhibited as soon as the influenza closing ban has been lifted.

The Selig Polyscope Company, which has been commissioned to produce the picture, has every confidence the appeal will be granted. The original date for release by the Mutual Film Corporation was September 20th. Announcement of the new date will be made as soon as the War Department's answer is received.

Lois Weber Completes Another Production

Lois Weber has just completed a production made under the temporary title of "Home," with Mildred Harris as star. It is the story of a poor plumber's daughter who attempts to invade the realm of society. Miss Weber was the author of the subject as well as producer.

Al Ray, a cousin of Charles Ray, appears as leading man with Miss Harris. Others in the cast are Frank Elliott, John Cossar, Clarissa Selwyn and Helen Yoder.

Every Line a Bit of News About the Stars

"The Kaiser Bride," on which Gail Kane is now working under the direction of Travers Vale, should make a very thrilling picture. The story, by John Colton, is based on the belief that the Kaiser has many so-called "brides" throughout our country, eagerly waiting to do his Imperial Majesty's bidding, and discloses some of the ramifications of this wonderful spy system.

In "Hit or Miss," in which Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley are now costarring for World, Director Dell Henderson has an unusually attractive banquet scene. Above a huge centerpiece of roses and ferns, an enormous butterfly hovered, and at the specified moment it lazily waved its graceful wings while dozens of real live butterflies fluttered up from their hiding place among the flowers.

There is a gorgeous scene in Elsie Ferguson's forthcoming picture, "The Green Orchard," which it is said Director Chautard copied exactly from a wonderful studio in the Beaux Arts. David Powell is playing opposite Miss Ferguson, and is doing some very fine work.

According to a sixteen-year-old representative of the High School variety, on the football team, the school paper, the musical clubs, who it seems should be very good authority, Norma Talmadge is considered by the High School boys of Cleveland the most popular actress who appears there. This enthusiast gave his verdict as the result of a recent election voted by his "bunch" at the school.

There is even more than the usual Middle West civic pride in Cincinnati. When Marguerite Clark appears in a picture there the whole town fairly turns out to see her, and the newspapers never fail to mention the fact that she was born in Cincinnati.

The Metro Company, with whom Hale Hamilton recently signed a three-year contract, declares that Mr. Hamilton bids fair to be the man of the hour in film circles. Mr. Hamilton's stage success is well known, and his two finished pictures, "The Winning of Beatrice" and "Five Thousand an Hour," are proving popular productions.

Houdini, the star of "The Master Mystery," the super-serial in fifteen episodes, which B. A. Rolfe is producing turned newsboy the eve of the Liberty Loan Drive, and sold copies up and down Broadway, of the news sheet published by the Government announcing our Fourth Drive.

Geraldine Farrar's energy and vitality certainly seem to be endless. Her propaganda pictures for our own Government finished, she is now working at night on one for the Canadian Loan, in spite of the fact that she is booked to appear every evening during the drive to speak for our Liberty Loan, and arrives at Fort Lee each morning at 7.30 to work on her next picture for Goldwyn.

While going through an old safe at the Talmadge Studio the other day, Arthur H. Jacobs found an envelope marked "Red Cross" containing $134 in currency. This amount had been collected last spring from the employes of the Talmadge Film company and, through some oversight, had been left in the safe. Mr. Jacobs sent a check to the Red Cross with the laconic message: "Better late than never."

Mae Marsh's new Goldwyn picture is a racing story, for which she is taking many scenes at the James Butler estate, noted for its wonderful horses and stables.

Madge Kennedy is making exteriors at Marblehead, Mass., and appearing every night at the Warwick theatre there to sell Liberty Bonds.

Even trousers cannot lessen the attractiveness of Viola Dana's petite personality, and in her new Metro picture, "Oh, Annice!" she wears them for the third time in her career. In "Opportunity" she wore them in order to pose as a man and attend a prize fight, while in "Blue Jeans" she was almost lost in a huge pair of overalls.

While in the San Bernadino Mountains recently taking scenes for her forthcoming Metro picture, "Kate of Kentucky," May Allison watched a life-and-death battle between a huge black vulture and an American eagle. The vulture, she declared, seemed typical of the Kaiser, while the eagle, as every one knows, represents Uncle Sam. When the eagle proved the victor, Miss Allison proclaimed it a good omen for our boys at the front.

Annie Russell, noted for her role of Puck in "A Midsummer Night's Dream," has been engaged to play the part of Edith Cavell in the Screen Classics, Inc., production, "Wilson or the Kaiser," written by Maxwell Karger, Direction of Production of Metro studios.

Four of the Liberty Loan pictures which Metro players have completed for the Government are "A Woman of France," written and acted by Nazimova; "Building for Democracy," with Emily Stevens; "Liberty Bond Jimmy," with Harold Lockwood, and "Edith's Victory for Democracy," with Edith Storey.

Baby Ivy Ward, Metro's five-year-old emotional actress, who sold one hundred thousand dollars of the Third Liberty Bonds and collected eleven hundred dollars for the Red Cross, says that she intends to beat her own record in the present drive. Ivy does her patriotic work dressed in the uniform of an officer of the U. S.

Frank Mayo, now co-starring with June Elvidge in "The Love Defender" for World, has asked that in the future all requests for his photographs be accompanied by twenty-five cents. The money thus collected he will turn over to the Red Cross, who should derive quite a little benefit from the plan.

Even the youngest of the screen favorites have amusing stories to relate about their picture experiences. Little Alice Turner, while representing a mermaid in "The Daughter of the Gods," with Annette Kellermann in Kingston, Jamaica, had scales painted on her body in aluminum paint which kept on for several days. When it wore off Alice saw that the sun had burned through the paint, and that she had perfect fish scales all her own—a "natural mermaid" in other words.

The "ostrich walk" is the latest dance to find its way on the screen, and the intricate steps of this latest craze will be seen in "Sylvia on a Spree," in which Emmy Wehlen is star, and where the girls in the ballroom set will initiate those who do not already know the steps of this dance.

In spite of the coldness of the water on the lonely Massachusetts coast, where the scenes for "'Ception Shoals" were being taken, Nazimova, star of the production, insisted on carrying out the directions of the manuscript and swimming out to the wrecked yacht, which is of leading importance to the story. Director Capellani, in fear for the star's health, tried to persuade her to use a substitute, but Nazimova, who is in perfect physical condition, would not hear of this, and made the long swim in the icy waters herself. This picture will be a Nazimova production released through the Metro Exchange.

In accordance with the war-time desire for cheerful and amusing plays, Metro has secured a clever comedy for the popular star, Bert Lytell. He will shortly be seen in the screen version of "The Spender," a story from the pen of Frederick Orin Barlett, which was published in the "Saturday Evening Post." "The Spender" is a wholesome comedy, and its object is to amuse its audiences.

What with working on "A Perfect 36," her newest Goldwyn Picture, and writing letters to her brother, and scores of friends now overseas, Mabel Normand hasn't a moment to choose her fall clothes. That is why she is wearing sables over gingham dresses. The war seems responsible for all sorts of things.

The golfing season is at an end and, as every one knows, Tom Moore is devoted to the game. He has a great consolation, however. It lies in the progress he has made. Even his skeptical caddy gives him grudging praise, and tells Tom Moore he will be able to play a "middlin'" good game in about a year.

Geraldine Farrar never carries a watch. She does not own one. The jeweled timepiece without which some cinema stars do not consider themselves dressed, has no place among the belongings of the Goldwyn luminary. She owns gorgeous gems, and the intentional lack of a watch is her only idiosyncrasy. But her maid, Sylvia, carries an infallible chronometer.

Whimsical Mae Marsh, while crossing the Fort Lee ferry to the Goldwyn Studio the other day, was recognized by scores of soldiers from Camp Merritt. They crowded around her car, and gave her three rousing cheers, while the star blushed and tried to make herself inconspicuous in the corner of her limousine. Now she says she thinks of wearing a heavy veil on her trips to the studio.

Tom Moore, in the garb of a chauffeur and with the pose of the typical driver for a matron of society, created a stir in the Fifth Avenue, New York, shopping district while he was being photographed in a scene for his newest Goldwyn Picture, "Thirty a Week," from the play by Thompson Buchanan. So many passers-by stopped to watch that the traffic policemen were at their wits ends, and three pretty Thrift Stamp sales girls, with the assistance of the star and his leading lady, Tallulah Bankhead, did more business than they usually do in a week.

Why are picture requirements always so contrary? Ignoring all the balmy days we have had lately, Mr. Harry S. Franklin had to choose the bleakest morning of the season for the scene in the forthcoming Metro picture, "Sylvia on a Spree," when Walter Percival has to fall into a little lake at Bayside, L. I. The time of the picture is summer, and Mr. Percival was supposed to look warm.

One of the big scenes in "The Woman Who Gave" shows an oculist performing a delicate operation on the eyes of a blind man. Appreciating that if the slightest technical error were made by the player performing this operation in the play, the scene would be marred for professional people, Kenean Buel, director of the production, made arrangements to have a well known Fifth avenue oculist take the role of the doctor. A duplicate of the oculist's own operating room was made and his diplomas were borrowed and hung in the studio set at Fort Lee during the taking of the scene.

Mae Marsh has a new fad. Deprived of the pets she will not confine to her Riverside Drive apartment, the whimsical Goldwyn star has acquired—what? a ladybug! It lives among the geraniums in the window box and flies on her finger when she calls. Its name is Cecelia, and you can believe the story or not, just as you choose.

Burton Holmes, just back from Europe, will start his season of Travelogues in Washington on Sunday, November 3. The other cities included in his first circuit are Pittsburgh, beginning November 5, and Philadelphia, beginning November 8.

"A Jungle Joy Ride," the next Outing-Chester release through Mutual, was filmed on a twenty-mile trip on the rapids of Potaro River in British Guiana. The trip starts from the beautiful falls of Kaieteur, which were recently pictured in detail in an Outing-Chester subject and extends to Georgetown.

"Neighbors" is the title of the newest completed Eddie Lyons-Lee Moran screen scream. As the name suggests, it pictures the troubles of getting too intimate with those who live about you.

Some of the most remarkable night photography ever seen in motion pictures is said to be offered in "Private Peat," the Paramount-Artcraft Special Production, which is to be released October 13, and in which Private Harold R. Peat, the Canadian soldier, lecturer and author himself appears in the leading role.

Norma Talmadge, with her own company and producing for Select pictures, began work week before last at the Lasky studios. Her picture is still unnamed. She will finish the production before taking a month's vacation.

Cecil B. De Mille has begun work on a new subject, which has not as yet been named. The cast is still in doubt. A few scenes on location with extra people were shot this week. It is to be a super-production, it is understood.

Milton E. Hoffman, general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky studios, announced last week that as each company finishes the production on which it is now working that it will take a four weeks' rest. This action is taken by the studios, Mr. Hoffman said, in order to prevent an over-production during the closing of so many theatres throughout the United States on account of the influenza epidemic.

Wallace Reid is in the middle of a production, and the same is true of Lila Lee and Ethel Clayton.

Charles Ray made excellent progress week before last on his new Paramount vehicle, temporarily called "Greased Lightning." He tried out his new improvised, rather antiquated automobile, from which the title of the play gets its inspiration. No casualties were reported.

Here and There

The Tom Moore company of the Goldwyn forces continues its production work at the Triangle studios. Just whether the other Goldwyn forces will arrive on the Pacific Coast on November 1, according to original schedule, is not known by local Goldwyn leaders, due to the uncertainty of production as a result of the influenza epidemic.

The Olive Thomas and Taylor Holmes companies continued their work at the Triangle studios. Each company expected to complete its production by the first of the "closing" week.

The Maccauley company, headed by the New York cartoonist C. F. Maccauley, began production work at the Brunton studios the latter part of week before last, it is announced. The nature of Mr. Maccauley's production, other than that it will be a patriotic effort, has not been announced.

Frank Keenan, who has been in the East, is expected to return soon to Los Angeles, when he will begin the production of a new picture at the Brunton studios.

Hampton del Ruth, formerly production manager at Sennett studio, where he served for four years, has been engaged for Sunshine Comedies, according to announcement this week by Henry Lehrman, vice-president and general producer, and will serve as Mr. Lehrman's assistant.

The Metro studios closed their producing activities for one month, beginning Saturday, October 12.

Bert Lytell before closing was in the midst of his production, "Faith." By speeding up he expected to finish the picture by Saturday. After that he was to take a vacation. Later in the fall he expects to enter the service, and he will be stationed at a Texas camp.

Ralph Robinson, publicity director for Metro, announced that he would soon enter the service. He expects to be called in the new draft.

May Allison week before last finished her picture, "Thirty Days," which is a light comedy, with scenes laid in a rural community. Miss Allison, being found of automobiles, but residing in a village where speed is detested, finds herself in the toils when with her new car she races through the village in defiance of all known speed laws of the community. Hence, "Thirty Days."

Fox Studio Doings

Gladys Brockwell finished her latest picture, "Quicksands," week before last. With the Fox closing order for four weeks coming on the same day, she is planning for a vacation of one month. She said the four weeks' interval would give her some time in which to do some war work and to catch up with her correspondence.

Tom Mix week before last had reached the middle of his production, "The Coming of the Law." During the week the picture was delayed because Mix was unable to do a few stunts called for owing to an injured hip, received some time ago when he leaped from a horse at the rodeo given under his direction on California Day. Physicians this week, it was announced, discovered a bullet that had lodged in his hip sixteen years ago from a gun fired by a friend. As soon as his present production is completed Mix will go to a hospital to have the piece of lead removed, it is said.

THE MYSTERY SOLVED

That strange phenomenon since the birth of the flickering pastel on the silver screen, or since before the industry was in its infancy is to be explained to the world at large, so that every one may know why the wheels turn backward while the film goes forward.

Hookum this week, in compliance with its promise to its readers, called upon a number of the well read and experienced people of the industry and boldly put the question to them.

Many refused to be quoted. So many conflicting answers were given that fear was instilled in the Underwood beating finger of the reporter. Finally a man was found who had the courage to speak up. Arthur Rossen, affiliated with Doug. Fairbanks, and an associate of B. Ziedman, Ltd., gave us the needed information.

"All of the scenes showing a wheel turning backwards," Mr. Rossen said, "are secured in a manner known only to cameramen. It is an imposition to ask a director to answer questions, but now that I have been asked, I'll advise that such scenes are secured by trick photography."

HOOKUM is not perfectly satisfied with this answer, and so others are to receive inquiries shortly. Bert Lennon, Tom Geraghty, Ham Beal, K. McGaffey, Dave Morrissey, Bill Keefe and Spike Robinson please write.

Steady, Flickerless Light

One of the features of the WESTINGHOUSE MAZDA LAMP for motion picture projection, which will appeal to all progressive exhibitors and operators, is its simplicity of operation. When it is once properly focused, it requires practically no further attention or adjustment. The light source remains absolutely steady and uniform in intensity.

Three-wing shutters may be used with machines operated on alternating current circuits, and a perfectly steady picture obtained.

The WESTINGHOUSE MAZDA LAMP is more reliable than the arc light, radiates less heat, and does not give off carbon gas or dust. (The latter is exceedingly injurious to the lungs of operators.)

We have prepared a booklet describing the use of the WESTINGHOUSE MAZDA LAMP and its many advantages in motion picture projection, and will be glad to send a copy to any one interested.

Facts for the Operator

THESE facts have been taken up separately before in these pages but have never before been put together. The only section on which we wish to comment is the Fourth. In this we would suggest that the greatest care be used in the selection of a cleaner, as there is nothing worse than the pad type, which collects grease, dirt and grit, and after having a reel or two run through becomes about as useful for cleaning film as a piece of emery paper would be. Therefore the type of cleaner selected must be chosen with the greatest care and watched continually.

Suggestions for the Conservation of Film and Moving Picture Machines

It is a fact not generally known that valuable film is injured and its life much shortened by improper methods of operation in handling and projecting the film after it has been delivered by the producer and film distributor to the exhibitor, and the following points are worthy of your consideration:

First—When a film is new and has not been specially treated, such as the ordinary positives are when delivered to the exhibitor in the majority of cases, the stock is what we call "green." In explanation of this, it may be stated that the emulsion on a new film, while being dry, is still in a semi-plastic state.

Due to this fact, when such film is run through a projector or moving picture machine, the emulsion retards the film movement, and particles of the emulsion are deposited upon the sprockets and upon the film tension shoes, as well as upon the aperture runners.

This deposit welds itself in spots upon the above mentioned parts, causing an enormous increase in friction, which must be overcome by increasing the power applied for driving the machine so as to maintain proper projection speed.

The increase in power applied puts additional strain upon all parts of the moving picture machine, and at the same time necessarily puts additional strain upon the sprocket holes, which are being engaged by the teeth upon the sprockets of the projector. This strain, in some instances, elongates the sprocket holes, which, on subsequent runs of the film, impairs the steadiness of the projection and has a serious effect upon the life of the film.

To overcome this condition, processes are available for hardening or treating the "green" film surface, which in a great measure relieve the friction.

Another method which may be recommended to overcome the friction incident to the use of "green" film is to apply a set of small wicks feeding special lubrication to the edges of the film which come in contact with the sprocket teeth and the guides in the projector while the film is being projected. This method has been applied with much success in some of the film censorship exhibition rooms, but when this method of lubrication is used, it is, of course, necessary, or at least advisable, to run the film through a film cleaner before it is put back on the reel and returned to the exchange, so as to remove any lubricant remaining upon the emulsion.

It is safe to estimate that 20 per cent. of the wear on the film, and upon the machine, takes place during the first few runs with "green" film.

Second—The greatest abuse to, and wear upon, films, whether new or old, and to moving picture machines, takes place when over-speeding the machine. This practice is the cause of more film and machine trouble, and introduces more waste, than any other fault in the projection of films.

The normal speed of a thousand feet of film is from twelve to fifteen minutes, but we know of theatres projecting the same length of film in from six to ten minutes, so as to enable a greater number of exhibitions within a specified time.

The strain upon the mechanism of the projector is more than doubled by such increase of speed, and the strain upon the sprocket holes and the film splices is comparatively enormous, and it is a wonder that the projector and the film will last as long as they do.

It is safe to estimate that more injury is done to a film operating above normal speed ten times through a projector, than when the same film is operated through the same projector one hundred times at normal speed, and this also applies to the wear upon the projector.

Another serious consequence of excessive speed follows the opening of a splice, or the breaking of the film, because, at high speed, the machine cannot be stopped instantly and, therefore, large lengths of film may be chewed up and destroyed before the projector can be stopped.

Third—The general use of a small film splicing device costing from five to fifteen dollars will enable every operator of a projector to make perfect film splices, which is absolutely necessary to the proper operation and conservation of film.

Fourth—Every theatre should be equipped with an approved type of film cleaning device. Such devices are very simple and cost less than ten dollars to install, and the cost is less than one penny for each thousand feet of film cleaned. It is not necessary to clean the film each time it goes through the machine, but the film should be cleaned at least once while it is in possession of a theatre, and preferably just before the last run, so that there will be a minimum amount of dust and carbon deposited upon the film when it is returned.

Fifth—The writer has observed a lack of unity in the length of film titles and announcements of reading matter. A good many feet of film can be conserved by standardizing the length of the titles upon a uniform basis, depending upon the number of letters or words exhibited.

This brings us back to over-speeding, and it is well to remember that, if a film title is prepared for proper projection speed, the same title must be twice as long when over-speeded 100 per cent.

Sixth—Much film damage is done by improperly designed and constructed machines, and also by standard machines of recognized high quality, when not kept in proper adjustment and repair.

Under this heading the following points should be considered:

(A) If the take-up which winds the used film upon the receiving reel is not properly designed or adjusted and if the tension should be too tight, or if reels with too small hubs are used, it is possible for the take-up tension to strain the film so that the lower sprocket will almost cut through the stock between the perforations; even a slightly excessive take-up tension will elongate the perforations and injure the film. Operators should be warned on this point.

(B) A machine with a worn intermittent sprocket may destroy a perfect film by running it through only once.

(C) Worn aperture plates and excessive tension on the film guides, or shoes, will seriously increase the friction, with consequent damage to the film.

(D) Worn idlers, rough stripper plates, and too long or too short loops may ruin a perfectly good film operating through the machine only once.

Simplex Exhibits Efficient Projection Devices Intended to Promote Fuel Conservation

THE Simplex Company demonstrated, by its exhibition of fuel-saving devices at the Motion Picture Exposition held in Madison Square Garden from October 5th to 13th, that it has promptly complied with the requests of the United States Government to the motion picture industry that all its branches take means to inaugurate conservation plans which shall help win the war.

These improvements consisted of the Simplex magnetic ninety-degree arc lamp for direct current, which saves 40 per cent more current than the old style lamps; the Simplex system of nitrogen filled incandescent lamp equipment used for alternating current, which saves 80 per cent of the current; the Simplex "Extra-lite" shutter, designed to save 20 per cent of the light, and consequently, so much power; the Simplex double automatic arc control, which has for its purpose the saving of 10 per cent of the current.

Another conservation feature brought out by the Simplex Company was the new Liberty model pedestal, having a number of new features, and which saves seventy-five pounds of iron and steel.

These improvements for saving fuel, power and metal were the direct outcome of the pledges made by the Simplex Company at a meeting of projection machine manufacturers held before the Conservation Board of the War Industries Board in Washington, D. C., some time ago.

The exhibit of the Simplex Company was another evidence of the progressiveness shown by the manufacturers of this well-known projector. It met the demand for a practical demonstration of machine products, as well as the desirability of showing them amid beautiful and attractive surroundings.

This claim was evidenced in the commendation of R. G. Halliman, manager of the Motion Picture Exhibit in Madison Square Garden, and also the manager of the Grand Central Palace, the home of a previous Simplex exhibit of note in New York City. Mr. Halliman declared to Edwin S. Porter, vice-president of the Precision Machine Company, Inc., that the Simplex booth in Madison Square Garden this year was the most striking and effective of any exhibit there this season.

The high praise of such an authority recalls the fact that the Simplex booth in Chicago last year was the predominating exhibit at the Coliseum.

The decorative arrangement of the Simplex exhibit was so novel in effect and marked such a departure in the display of projection machinery that the general public was attracted to the Simplex booth, as well as the members of the industry to whom the exhibit was designed to make an appeal primarily.

Exhibit of Simplex Projectors at Madison Square Garden

It was remarked on every hand that the Simplex exhibit had been made distinctive by the plan of showing the machines in an artistic setting, unusual in the scope of its design and most elaborate in its color effects. Managers and operators were ceaseless in their comments on the simultaneous exhibition of so many separate and distinct mechanical improvements which had no counterpart in any other machinery exhibit at the exposition. A corps of Simplex technical experts were present every day of the exposition to demonstrate the improvements in these mechanisms. The ingenuity of the devices even attracted the attention of the mechanically inclined among the visitors who were not especially interested in projection machinery.

The display was erected under the supervision of E. M. Porter, general manager of the Simplex Company, who was unable to attend the exposition and see the results of his planning as he was stricken with Spanish influenza just before the Garden opened and had to remain at home during the period of the exposition.

His brother, Edwin S. Porter, exercised general supervision over the activities of the numerous assistants and technical experts who were on hand to demonstrate the running qualities of the machines, and to explain the advantages of the improved devices on exhibition. Among those in attendance to represent the Simplex Company in its booth were R. C. Kneuer, in charge of the order department; J. E. Soons, chief electrician; Sam Kaplan, in charge of one of the principal mechanical departments of the factory, and B. F. Porter, 729 Seventh avenue, New York, N. Y., who acts as the exclusive distributor for the Simplex products in New York City, Long Island and Northern New Jersey.

Long Throw

Mr. R. G. Craerin, Mgr., Liberty Theatre, Camp Lee, Va., requests assistance on the following:

"Can you help us on the following matter? We have a throw of 131 feet. This cannot be changed in any way—it is a fixed throw.

"We are now using a Bausch & Lomb lens giving us a picture about 13 feet wide, which is not large enough for our theatre. We want a picture about 18 feet wide instead. Bausch & Lomb cannot furnish the lenses we require, as they state the War Industries Board has forbidden the manufacture of this particular size. Have just received from the Nicholas Power Company two Gundlach 7-inch lenses which we tried out last night. These show a picture about 16 feet, but the picture is not satisfactory—the quality of the lenses does not seem to be as good as the Bausch & Lomb. It may possibly be due to light, or some other condition which a further test will remedy, but the size not being just what we want inclines us to look a bit further, and we thought you might be able to guide us in the right direction.

"In addition to taking this up with Bausch & Lomb Co., Rochester, N. Y., and the Nicholas Power Company, New York, we have also written the United Theatre Equipment Company, Chicago, Lewis M. Swaab of Philadelphia and Charles Beseler Co., of New York, but none of these have what we want.

"Can you suggest or put us in touch with anyone who could supply us with two Bausch & Lomb lenses that would give us this 18-ft. wide picture at 131 ft. throw. If impossible to get this make of lense can you suggest another just as satisfactory?"

In reply: Both the Bausch and Lomb and the Gundlach projection objectives are of recognized quality and either make is capable of producing a satisfactory picture upon the screen, according to present standards of screen definition.

We therefore doubt that the difference in performance between the two makes of objective observed by the correspondent is due to any superiority of one objective over the other, but it is probable that in trying out the Gundlach objective the condensers were not properly focussed to permit of the objective exhibiting its best performance. When projection objectives of comparatively long focal length are employed, it is very necessary to see to it that the condenser system is of suitable focal length, and that the true spot, or sharply delineated image of the arc crater, is sufficiently advanced towards the diaphragm-plane of the objective, otherwise severe loss of light past the mounting of the objective will occur.

An objective of 7-inch E. F., such as is being used by the correspondent, or indeed, any projection objective of 6 inches or more E. F., should be of the variety known commercially as "half-size"; that is, it should have an effective aperture considerably in excess of the apertures of the usual series of projection objectives whose foci are under 6 inches. This question of aperture, again, has a bearing on the quality, or definition, of the screen results, for it is well known that the degree of correction possible in objectives of moderate aperture cannot be maintained in the case of very large apertures, so, if the correspondent has been comparing the performance of one make of objective of large aperture against the performance of another make objective of lesser aperture, the results, as regards screen definition, would, in most any case, appear favorable to the objective of smallest aperture. It may be said, however, in justice to the makers of projection objectives, that the screen definition afforded by even their lenses of greatest aperture, is of sufficiently satisfactory quality, all things considered.

Coming now to the correspondent's statement that none of the objectives which have been supplied will give him an 18 foot picture at the throw of 131 feet, it appears that the measurements which he has supplied to the concerns who furnished the objectives (and which are given in the letter reproduced above) must be in error in some respect, for the 7-inch objectives submitted are just about what would be indicated by the formula for obtaining the E. F. of the objective needed for any given throw and size of picture desired.

This formula is:

where, o is the width of the machine aperture, in inches, t is the length of the throw, also expressed in inches, and i is the width of the screen picture, in inches.

Introducing the numerical values of these quantities, as found for the correspondent's case, into the formula, we have:

the focus, in inches, of the objective required to project an 18-foot picture at 131 feet. The 7-inch objective already obtained by the correspondent should, therefore, under the conditions stated, produce an even larger picture than 18 feet wide on the 131 foot throw, and it would appear that the actual distance from the lens to the screen must be considerably less than the correspondents estimate.

Regardless of whether the throw is shorter or not, a larger picture can be secured by the use of an objective of shorter E. F., and while cine projection objectives are not too plentiful at present, the correspondent could doubtless secure one which will give a satisfactory picture. We therefore advise him to go carefully over the measurements of his actual projecting conditions again, being sure to take the throw as being the distance from the projection lens to the center of the screen. From this he can compute the E. F. of the objective required for any desired width of picture by the simple formula given above, and if he then has any trouble in securing the proper objective, we will be pleased to advise further.

(E) The use of damaged reels with sharp edges, and which do not run true, should not be permitted, as they are the means of much film destruction.

(F) The lubrication of moving picture machines should be moderate, so that a minimum amount of oil will deposit upon the film. In fact, a machine properly lubricated and cleaned will not deposit oil or dust upon the film.

(G) In many machines in service the fire trap rollers on the magazines are either worn out, rough, or stuck, due to lack of attention, allowing the delicate emulsion of the film to drag along this surface at a high rate of speed, injuring the film.

The Ives Dichroic Reflector

WHERE the simultaneous recording of two images by one lens is involved, it has hitherto been proposed to employ an ordinary plate of glass, white or colored, and arranged diagonally, so that a beam of light directed upon it is partly transmitted and the balance reflected, thus giving a separation of the beam into two components, which may be directed to different sensitive films for producing the simultaneous images; the reverse principles permitting the light from two images to be blended. A comparatively small percentage of the light is reflected—the bulk is transmitted—but this disproportion can be equalized by an extremely thin silver or platinum deposit, which decreases the transmission and increases the reflection, although absorbing a fraction of the light-energy.

The action of the transparent reflector is, at its first reflecting surface, to divide the white light into two parts, and it thereby divides each of the component colors—red, green, blue, etc., into two portions; so that eventually when the red portion of the light beam, for example, reaches its destination, it has been reduced by the transparent reflector to a half or less of its original quantity, in addition to any other losses necessarily occurring in the apparatus. The immediate action of the transparent reflector is thus to throw away an exceedingly large percentage of the available light.

A principal object of the invention now under consideration is to prevent such losses of light by employing, in both camera and projector, a dichroic optical instrument, or what may be more specifically defined as a color selective transparent reflector, which would be substituted for the transparent reflectors hitherto used. The dichroic reflector is adapted to split the light-beam and reflect an excess of one kind of light and transmit an excess of another kind, this action occurring at the surface of the instrument, and being independent of the subsequent interposition in the light-beam of color screens, or filters.

This dichroic reflector is found to be much more effective than the plain glass reflector, and also more efficient than such substitutes as thin or parti-silvered or platinized glass, none of which effects a resolution of white light into complementary components, but all of which throw away a large proportion of the available light.

In the drawings the thickness of the glass, and any refraction thereby, are ignored as negligible, the first glass surface being the reflecting one in each case. Also the incident light in each case is assumed to be white, as covering all possible circumstances, and the beam of white light is treated as composed simply of two complementary colors—red and green—or three—red, green and blue.

The nature and operation of the dichroic optical instrument may be first best explained by reference to Figs. 1 to 4. In Figs. 1 and 3, 10 is a glass reflector silvered or platinized equally to reflect and transmit, while in Figs. 2 and 4, 11 is the dichroic or color selective transparent reflector. The beam of light 12 strikes the reflector diagonally in each case. Considering the beam as one of white light, it is made up of all of the constituents of the spectrum, but for convenience these may be grouped into two complementary components—12^a and 12^b, which, added together, constitute white light.

In Fig. 1 the beam on striking the reflector 10 is partly reflected as to all its constituents, giving a weakened or half-strength beam 12^c, composed of a portion of the rays 12^a and a portion of the rays 12^b. The transmitted portion 12^d similarly comprises a part of 12^a and a part of 12^b. Therefore there is no color selection, but merely a division of the entire light into two similar portions, one reflected and the other transmitted.

In Fig. 2 the transparent reflector 11 is provided with a dichroic surface. If this were theoretically perfect the action would be as shown, the component 12^a being reflected in toto and the rays 12^b transmitted in toto, thus giving an effective color separation. For example, the green 12^a of the spectrum may be reflected and the reds 12^b transmitted.

In Figs. 3 and 4 colored screens or transparent colored glasses 13, 14 are shown interposed in the reflected and transmitted rays. Assuming 13 in Fig. 3 to be a green screen, then the reflected portion of the green rays 12^a will pass through the screen 13, while the red rays 12^b will be cut off by it and wasted. Conversely as to the transmitted rays 12^d, the red component 12^b thereof will pass through the screen 14, as seen at 12^{bd}, while the green component 12^a will be cut off thereby. As a result, approximately speaking, the finally reflected rays 12^{ac} will consist of merely half the original green component 12^a of the white light, while the finally transmitted rays 12^{bd} consist of but half of the original red portion 12^b of the white light. Losses will reduce the eventual rays to still less than 50 per cent.

In Fig. 4, however, the interposition of the green and the red screens 13 and 14, respectively, effects no substantial cutting off of light, but only a rectification in case of a slight difference between the color qualities of the dichroic instrument 11 and the screens respectively. Theoretically, therefore, all of the green rays 12^a are reflected from the instrument 11 and are transmitted through the screen 13, while the balance of the light is transmitted through the instrument 11 and screen 14, so that the finally emerging rays constitute, without waste, the entire make-up of the original white light.

These principles are applicable to the art of color photography in specific ways, or in an indefinite variety of ways which will be readily suggested to those skilled in the art.

A dichroic optical instrument or color-selective transparent reflector realizing the theoretical operations and results above mentioned may be produced in various ways, of which those described are to be regarded merely as convenient examples.

One such mode of production is by the use of certain coal-tar dyes, preferably the alkaline or basic coal-tar dyes. A dichroic reflector made with a suitable coal-tar dye gives greater efficiency than one made, as mentioned below, from metallic gold. The coal-tar dye is preferably used in alcoholic solution, and in that condition applied to the first or front surface of a perfectly clean glass plate of suitable quality. The dye that is preferred is eosine, although fuchsine and other coal-tar dyes would be available, and good results have been obtained from di-bromfluores-cinate of sodium mixed with eosine. Dyes of different colors would give different kinds of separation, but it has been found that, in any case, the sum of the reflected rays is in color, substantially the complement of the sum of the transmitted rays. After flowing the plate with the solution it should be allowed to drain, and to dry in upright position, standing upon an absorbent material, such as blotting paper.

As a specific example, a solution may be employed containing about 20 grs. eosine to 8 ozs. alcohol. After flooding and draining as described, the drying may be allowed to proceed slowly in a calcium choride box.

Dichroic coatings thus produced are found to be satisfactorily uniform, except the lowermost margin of the plate, which may be discarded. They are fairly hard and durable, especially in dry air, if protected from continuous exposure to strong light; if injured they are easily and cheaply replaced.

A coating so produced, by the use of eosine, will so act upon white light as to reflect a preponderance of green, giving an appearance like a hard, polished green metal, while, likewise, a preponderance of red is transmitted. This increases the speed efficiency of the camera, especially since red is the least actinic color, and the recording of the red is the time-consuming operation.

Theoretical comparison may be made between the relative action of clear glass, half-silvered glass, and the eosine dichroic reflector, as regards the transmitted and the reflected portion of the light by the following table, which approximates the actual results:

	Transmitted.	Reflected.
Clear Glass	90 R*	10 R
	90 G	10 G*
	90 B	10 B
Half-Silvered Glass	50 R*	50 R
	50 G	50 G*
	50 B	50 B
Eosine Dichroic Reflector	80 R*	20 R
	80 B	20 B

Assuming that the transmitted red and the reflected green light is to be utilized, the above table indicates that clear glass will give 90 per cent of the red and 10 per cent of the green light; half-silvered glass 50 per cent of the red and 50 per cent of the green light; eosine dichroic reflector 80 per cent of the red and 50 per cent of the green light. In each case losses will reduce the figures given, but the dichroic reflector clearly affords an increased proportion of the respective colors.

Another dichroic coating, less delicate and more durable, although not so efficient as the coal-tar dye reflector, is one on which, at the first or front surface of the glass plate, is deposited a thin film of pure gold. A properly-made dichroic reflector of this kind will reflect more than half of the orange-red light, and transmit more than half of the green light. The gold film should be exceedingly thin, and may be electrically deposited in vacuum.

When a thin gold deposit is used as a dichroic reflector it may be employed in making up a compound prism, as has previously been proposed, the ruddy reflecting surface being used for sending light through a red screen, while the greener transmitted light is passd through a green screen.

when the film splices are poorly made, or when the machine is not properly adjusted and in proper repair, as above referred to, the hazard from fire, with consequent destruction of part or the whole of the film, is likely to follow. A film fire not only ruins a part or the whole of the film, but it also destroys a considerable part of the projector.

Therefore, it is reasonable to assume that great conservation in both films and machines can be effected by the very ordinary means suggested above.

Seventh—An observer in the operating or rewinding room of a theatre will in many instances find that the method of rewinding a film can do much injury to the emulsion.

A continuous steady speed with uniform tension packs the film gently and nicely upon the reel, whereas jerky action and over-speeding in rewinding is likely to do much damage.

In the ordinary theatres rewinding is done by hand, and can be done well and properly with little care, but in the more modern theatres rewinding is now done within fireproof enclosures automatically, under uniform tension and speed, by electric motor drive, which method should be recommended wherever possible, as it not only saves the film, but it also conserves man power, as in many instances extra labor is employed in rewinding.

The better informed operator understands and realizes the importance of the foregoing, which is also well known to the maker and distributor of the film.

Eighth—The conservation of carbon electrodes, as used in projector lamps with the electric arc, can be effected by using what is known as "Carbon Savers," which permit the burning of the carbon with a waste of only about one inch for each 12-inch length. The use of the carbon saver will conserve about 10 per cent. of the carbon consumption. Carbon savers cost about one dollar each and two are required for each machine, and the life of a carbon saver, when properly used, is from three to twelve months, depending upon the amount of current used and the care with which the arc is handled.

The above compilation of facts was done by J. H. Hallberg, at one time editor of the Projection Department.

Pseudo Manager's Conception of Proper Music for Films

THE editor of these columns happened to be in a music store one day when the proprietor was just opening a package of music which had been returned with the following note accompanying it: "Am returning music you sent me, as my manager will not permit me to play any dramatic, pathetic or tragic music of any kind. He will only allow me to perform pleasing intermezzos or waltzes as a musical accompaniment to the pictures."

Of course the editor was highly amused and more than greatly astounded at such a ridiculous statement. He immediately wondered whether this enterprising and progressive (?) manager also eliminated the tragic, pathetic, dramatic scenes or moments of suspense and tension from his pictures? Most assuredly he does not, and if not, what authority has he for ordering a sensuous waltz to be played in a scenes where perhaps the heroine is dying.

I presume in a situation where the hero was being convicted of a crime of which he was innocent this would-be manager would suggest playing, "I May Be Gone for a Long, Long Time," or in a death-bed scene where the patient is vainly endeavoring to reach the restorative, he expires to the inspiring strains of "Keep the Home Fires Burning." We all know that we are going to Hades, but the manager doesn't have to impress us with the fact that it's hot down there.

We assume that during a scene in which an embezzler is about to loot the bank's funds, this progressive manager would probably have the orchestra perform, "Everybody's Doing It Now."

Another brilliant idea which may occur to this inspired manager would be to have the orchestra render "There'll Be a Hot Time in the Old Town Tonight" during an intensely dramatic scene between the heroine and the heavy.

Perhaps in a scene where a soldier hero in sadly thinking of his sweetheart at home (whose face appears in a fade-in) our music-loving manager would instruct his musicians to play, "I Wonder Who Is Kissing Her Now."

In a situation where the long-sought-for bigamist is being arraigned before the judge, no doubt his orchestra would proudly and instantly blare forth with "Oh, the Wild, Wild Women."

In a agitated scene, where a grandfather is vainly attempting to save his little grandson from falling off a fire-escape, and in so doing meets his own fate by falling out of the window, our intelligent manager would doubtlessly insist upon the orchestra putting on the following record, "The Older They Get, the Harder They Fall."

From the ridiculous to the sublime: For the edification of manager of this calibre, the editor wishers to impress them with the importance of realizing that appropriate music plays upon the emotions of the audience and enhances the value of the picture. In fact, it either makes or breaks a picture.

The managers of theatres who "get away with it" for a while are those who have no competitors, but just as soon as a regular exhibitor comes into the town and presents pictures with the proper musical setting, then these managers who are not earnest adherents of the best and most appropriate music for the film are financially ruined, so, gentlemen, take an example from this, and give some real worthy consideration to this vital part of your entertainment.

Advance Reviews

[In addition to Advance Reviews—covering pictures shown too early to be included in The Complete Plan Book—readers will also find under this heading each week the reviews of short features and serial episodes.]

"Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief"

(Ten reels—Offered by Helen Fulton)

THIS is an attraction that played in Chicago during the third Liberty Loan campaign and which was responsible for raising a considerable sum of money. For the most part, it is a history of the war, centering around Belgium, compiled from scenes that have from time to time appeared in the topical weeklies and the war reviews.

It opens with a few scenes taken under the auspices of the City of Brussels and shows in pageant form the history of Belgium since the time it broke away from a cruel Dutch king in 1830 and became a free nation. A few details prior to the coronation ceremonies of King Albert in 1909 are given and then comes the war.

This compilation of views of marching troops, ruins, war activities, etc., is vastly interesting even though much of it has been seen before. But here it is presented in chronological order. Pictures of the Germans entering Belgium have been obtained and of particular interest are those scenes showing the Germans entering Brussels. The inhabitants of this city who agreed not to resist the German hordes lest the place meet the fate of other cities of Belgium, lined up on either side of the Kaiser's soldiers and watched them pass by in utter silence. A few close-up glimpses of the Kaiser and the Crown Prince are also shown. After the glimpse given of the latter the observer is convinced that the cartoons haven't burlesqued him so much after all.

Facts regarding the war that are now history, such as the entrance of the French and English into the conflict, are given and the troops of these Allies are shown. In fact, the war is carried right up to the time of America's entrance and there are few facts that are not set down and pictured in interesting style.

"Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief," is a living proof of Caesar's classic statement: "Among all the Gauls, the bravest are the Belgians."—Peter Milne.

"Once a Mason, Always a Mason," with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew

(V. B. K. Comedy, in two reels. Release plans to be announced later)

APPARENTLY this is the first comedy produced with the Drews since they left the Metro program. Although it could not be called a knockout, still it runs along the same lines as their past contributions. It will give fine satisfaction, as it is clean and wholesome.

The story has been constructed so intelligently that it has no trouble in holding the attention through the two reels.

Henry and Polly move to the country. They are received by the Four Hundred in splendid style. Henry, however, complains that there is one thing they failed to do, and that is to ask him to become a Mason.

Several evenings later he comes home and tells his wife the joyful news of his initiation into Masonry, which is to take place that evening.

Upon his return home that night, Polly insists on knowing all the secrets of Masonry. She is so persistent that he is obliged, to get rid of her, to tell her something. So he starts telling her a story that is really laughable. After that he has no trouble in getting away from the house for a drink or two, giving the lodge meeting as his excuse.

Masons, who are in a position to know the absurdity of the revelations, will enjoy this picture immensely.

This attraction offers a splendid opportunity of tickling the curiosity of Masons, as well as of others, by advertising it as "The Mysteries of Masonry Revealed."—P. S. Harrison.

"Three X Gordon," with Warren Kerrigan

(Hampton-Hodkinson—Directed by Ernest Warde)

THIS picture will please your patrons inasmuch as it offers entertainment of the light type, the kind that appeals to the popular taste right now. It is something different than the overworked war drama.

The hero is introduced as a much spoiled young man with plenty of money to spend. The father gets tired of his son's sporting spirit, cuts him off without a cent and bids him go and make his own living. He takes his friend with him and they travel westward. They obtain a job on a farm. Eventually they become real men. They then decide to make use of their own experience in reforming other dissolute young men, for a certain sum of money. They form the "Pep Syndicate," which proves a great success.

To square matters with his sweetheart, they abduct her brother whom her father thought the hero had spoiled, and make a man out of him.

When war is declared they join the Army, become officers and return home much to the joy of the parents, especially to that of the heroine, who had never lost faith in the hero.

The process used by the principal of the "Pep Syndicate" and his assistant, in reforming the different students, dissolute sons of wealthy parents, is quite comical. It will get many laughs.

The picture is clean and should have universal appeal. Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

"THE ROMANCE OF TARZAN"—FIRST NATIONAL

Fitting Sequel to "Tarzan of the Apes"

THIS picture was reviewed extensively in last week's issue. It is a fitting sequel to the previous Tarzan picture and dwells on Tarzan's romance and his battle against the conspirators who seek to separate him from the girl he loves.

It has loads of action, good thrills and a plentiful supply of comedy, this latter being furnished by Tarzan's efforts to accustom himself to the ways of "polite" society.

While the action is a little jumpy at times, this fault can be overlooked for the tale is of an engrossing character and minor faults will hardly interfere with the spectator's interest in the action itself.

Elmo Lincoln's tremendous physique fits him remarkably well for the leading role, while he is supported well by a cast headed by Enid Markey and Cleo Madison, long a star in her own right. The direction of Wilfred Lucas is commendable, although probably the continuity of his work has been ruffled at times by the film editor.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Scenario by Bess Meredyth.
Directed by Wilfred Lucas.
Supervision of Isadore Bernstein.

SUGGESTIONS

Those of you who played "Tarzan of the Apes" know the advertising value of this picture well in advance. It is a continuation of the previous picture, though in no sense does one have to be acquainted with the content of the former to get the story of "The Romance of Tarzan." If you play this for an extended run get some of the atmosphere of the picture into your lobby and don't be afraid to spread yourself on newspaper advertising. The suggested advertisements in the press sheet are good and are gotten up on a style to demonstrate the unusual character of the production.

Try to get this atmosphere into your lobby as well. Make a liberal use of stills. With these your artist will be able to fix up some catching drawings. Bring out in these the fact that Tarzan is a jungle man, cast in society of a sudden. To do this tell your artist to let his imagination work. You might give a picture of Tarzan in his primitive garb standing in a ball room surrounded by shocked and horrified people in evening clothes.

AD TALK

Patrons of the ———— theatre who thrilled at the adventures of the titular character in "Tarzan of the Apes" will have an opportunity of witnessing his further career in "The Romance of Tarzan," which will be shown at the ———— theatre beginning on ———— of ———— week for a period of ———— days. This picture is even more entertaining than its predecessor, if such a thing is possible, for in it Tarzan is brought back to civilized lands where he has a difficult time accustoming himself to the ways of folk who sleep in houses, wear dress clothes and eat meals with a knife and fork.

His romance with Jane Porter, the first woman he laid eyes on, makes a thrilling tale, inasmuch as it is often menaced by the plotting of Clayton, the man who seeks to rob Tarzan of the estates which are rightfully his. Part of his plot is the employment of La Belle Odine to lure Tarzan away from Jane. But the woman is unsuccessful in this, as Tarzan remains true to his love despite all La Belle's amarous advances.

The conspirators do, however, succeed in causing Jane to look with suspicion upon Tarzan and because of this he goes back to his jungle home. La Belle, however, clears the whole thing up because she has found that she loves Tarzan. She goes to Jane and tells her the truth with the result that soon afterwards Tarzan is joined in his jungle home by the woman he has always loved.

THE STORY

Tarzan, the son of Lord and Lady Greystoke, who has been brought up in the jungle with only the wild animals as companions, is finally discovered by the searching party in which are Jane Porter and the false heir to the Greystoke millions, Clayton. It is proven through finger prints, that Tarzan is the real son of the Greystokes and the party prepares to sail for England. It is attacked by the native blacks, however, and it is all that Tarzan can do to rescue his new-found friends. He succeeds in getting them all to the boat safely and then they sail away without him because of the perfidy of Clayton, who claims that he saw Tarzan killed.

But Tarzan is not to be so cheated of the woman he loves. He swims to sea and boards a tramp schooner and finally, after many voyages, lands in San Francisco. Jane and her father have returned to their ranch in southern California and are visited by Clayton, who, now that he believes he has proven Tarzan dead, already calls the Greystoke millions his own. Tarzan beats his way south and at last arrives in the vicinity of Porter ranch. He rescues Jane from bandits who kidnap her with the idea of securing a ransom and thereafter Clayton's life is miserable again.

Back in San Francisco Tarzan has a hard time getting along in society. Clayton hires the bandits and La Belle Odine, a woman of the dance halls, to lure Tarzan away from Jane. They succeed in compromising him and when Jane turns him down the man returns to his jungle home. La Belle, who really loved Tarzan, goes to Jane and tells her the truth and as a consequence Jane once more goes in search of the man she loved from the time she first saw him. She finds him and at last their happiness is unmolested.

CATCH LINES

Tarzan, reared in the jungle, is suddenly transported to the social life of San Francisco in "The Romance of Tarzan." See him struggle with dress clothes, forks and the thousand and one conventions of modern day "civilization" that would loom formidable before a man of his type—see him crush those who conspire against him as you would crush a fly.

"HER GREAT CHANCE"—SELECT

Human Characters Put This Over for a Hit

THE element of heart appeal forms the basis of this entertainment. It is contained almost in every situation. The hero as well as the heroine are given human parts, the kind that never fail to attract sympathy.

The former is presented as the son of a millionaire and a regular good fellow. He is shown as ever ready to assist friends. He drinks a little and quarrels with the governor, but it is because the old man doesn't understand him. He could have made a fine boy out of him had he known how to go about it.

The latter is introduced as a shop girl, loved by the hero, but refusing to consent to marrying him as she doesn't want it said that she married him for his money.

The drunken scenes in the garden will hardly prove offensive even to the overcritical, as they are not overdone. It is a clean attraction and the kind that will have a universal appeal.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Lola Gray.....Alice Brady
Charles Cox.....David Powell
Mrs. Gray.....Nellie Parker-Spaulding
Ida Bell Gray.....Gloria Goodwin
Genevieve.....Gertrude Barry
Cox, Sr.....Hardy Kirkland
Kitty.....Ormi Hawley
Lawyer.....C. A. de Lima
Boniface (Hotel Proprietor)..Jefferson de Angelis

From Fannie Hurst's "Golden Fleece."
Scenario by Charles Maigne.
Directed by Mr. Maigne.
Photographed by Leo Rossi.

SUGGESTIONS

Try to get into your advertisements and any display you may make in your lobby, the realistic and thoroughly human character of this picture. It is one that will appeal because of these elements, so see whether you can make them work for you in any advertising you do.

Miss Brady is considerably popular already, but you might make her name carry greater weight if you mention the fact that she is starring in New York at present in a spoken play, "For Ever After."

Charles Maigne who prepared the continuity and direction is also well known because of his work on many Paramount and Artcraft scenarios, while David Powell, the leading man, is one of the most popular actors of the screen.

AD TALK

The management of the ———— theatre will offer a different type of photoplay on ———— of ———— week when the Select picture, "Her Great Chance," is shown. Alice Brady is the star of this production, and it was written and directed by Charles Maigne, who based his scenario on a story by Fannie Hurst, entitled "Golden Fleece." That this production varies from the usual type of photoplay is significant immediately from its story which tells of the romance of a rich man's son and a shop girl. The latter refuses to marry him while he continues to waste his fortune on Broadway, but as soon as she discovers that he is penniless accepts his proposal. And so as man and wife they begin life anew.

This little romance is simplicity itself, but from first to last the picture is most interesting. Miss Brady gives a well-sustained performance as the girl, and receives sterling support from David Powell in the opposite role. However, the treatment accorded the picture by the adaptor and director, Mr. Maigne, goes a long way toward establishing its entertaining value. Mr. Maigne, who has had a long experience as a scenario writer makes his bow as a director with "Her Great Chance." It is a particularly auspicious beginning that Mr. Maigne has made, for he has treated the story originally in every respect. Above all has he made sure that the characters are always human. You will not find either Lola Gray or Charlie Cox doing anything that the ordinary human being would consider extraordinary. These are true people. Again Mr. Maigne has discarded the majority of the stereotyped conventions of the picture director, and has turned out a straightforward, progressive narrative that constantly centers itself on the activities of the two principals, leaving minor incidents of the plot that others would have devoted considerable space to, to the mere mention which is all they deserve.

The production throughout is realistic and lavish when the occasion demands, while the supporting cast includes such well-known and capable players as Jefferson de Angelis, Hardy Kirkland, Nellie Parker-Spaulding, Ormi Hawley and Gloria Goodwin.

Lola Gray, a sales girl, loves Charlie Cox, a millionaire, well known on Broadway and other fast places for the easy manner in which he spends his dollars. One night she accompanies him and a party to a road-house, where Charlie and his friends get very much in wine. Lola, however, partakes in moderation that closely resembles total abstinence. When Charlie leads her away from the throng out beside a brook and proposes she refuses. As a consequence Charlie seeks to drown his sorrows in the road-house fountain. The evening ends in a wild orgy. Charlie and his friends splash about in the pool, and insist that the frantic proprietor join them.

On the next day, Cox, Sr., sends for his lawyer and changes his will. The lawyer's confidential secretary is Ida Bell, Lola's sister, and it is she who first learns that Charlie has been cut off with but a single dollar. At home that evening, Ida Bell makes spiteful remarks regarding Charlie and then, believing the time for her triumph come, tells Lola about the new will. Lola had that afternoon again refused Charlie's proposal, but now she calls him up and accepts. So that evening they are married.

Morning brings news of the elder Cox's death to Charlie. Aside from feeling a slight sorrow for his bereavement, Charlie is rather enthusiastic when he dwells on his inheritance. It is then that Lola tells him he has been practically cut out of the will. And at first Charlie is in despair, but Lola eventually convinces him that this was one of the reasons for her marrying him. Wealth had stood as a barrier between them, she tells him, and now that it is gone, they can start life anew together. And they start it anew out on a farm in the Middle West.

"THE WOMAN WHO GAVE"—FOX

A Mellow "Meller" for Evelyn Nesbit's Fox Debut

HERE is the wildest of wild melodrama. It has the old 10-20-30 beat a mile. The producers have placed their faith in the name of the star—Evelyn Nesbit—to draw the crowds, and have then provided the sort of vehicle they believe will be wanted by crowds drawn by that name.

A Prince of an imaginary Balkan republic, gets stuck on the heroine, who is an artist's model. He tricks her into his apartment, locks the door and attempts to assault her. By the way, some highly dramatic closeups are shown. The hero's face, for instance, with lustful expression, accentuated by the use of drops of perspiration to denote vicious mental struggle. Also the heroine's, expressing horror.

She threatens to kill herself unless she is released. The Prince states that if marriage is what she wants, she shall have it. Thereupon he calls the Consul General to perform the marriage ceremony.

In response to a telegram the Prince leaves for his kingdom, taking his chattel along, but in time they again return to America. The husband now treats the wife shamefully.

Why she stood it all and didn't call a policeman or any other American to knock his block off, is beyond comprehension. Of course we wouldn't have a story then. But sympathy for the heroine takes wings. The producers, in all probability, have placed their faith on the star.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

Featuring Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw.

A story of an artist's model, whose beauty was her greatest curse.

Evelyn Nesbit in a tragic chapter of life wherein an artist's model is forced to become the wife of a Bulgarian Prince.

Evelyn Nesbit, long known as the most beautiful woman in America, in a startling drama of an artists' model and a wealthy roue.

Written by Isola Forrester, one of the best known writers of the present age.

The thrilling story of an artist's model who grew to hate her own beauty.

AD TALK

The story of an artist's model enacted by the best known artist's model in the world will be the featured attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week when "The Woman Who Gave," a Fox production is shown. The leading figure in this picture is Evelyn Nesbit, while her son, Russell Thaw, appears in a prominent role. Since Miss Nesbit has risen to such prominence in another world—that of the stage—many people have forgotten that she once posed for such well-known artists as Jessie Wilcox Smith, Harrington Mann and Charles Dana Gibson. Her likeness has adorned the covers of magazines time and again, while many a portrait gallery has contained her picture. And so Miss Nesbit is peculiarly fitted to assume the role of Colette, the artist's model in "The Woman Who Gave."

The story of Colette is one of the most dramatic that has been presented on the films in some time. Written by Isola Forrester, one of the leading authors of the day, it tells of a young woman whose beauty caused her a great tragedy. Prince Vacarra, of Bulgaria, is attracted to Colette through one of her pictures and, as a result, he lays a trap for her in his apartment. She is forced to marry him. The manner in which she is eventually saved from his foul brutality makes a tale of a most thrilling nature excellently enacted by Miss Nesbit and her supporting players. Irving Cummings, Robert Walker, Eugene Ormonde and Dorothy Walters constitute this supporting cast.

The production was staged by Kenean Buel, a director, well fitted to handle a subject of this nature. It is lavishly presented in every respect and not the least of its lavishness is its star.

THE STORY

Colette, an artists' model, poses for two brothers, Andrien Walcott, a hunchback, and his brother, Don. They treat her with the greatest consideration, and it is a relief to her to be in their company, so contrasting to that of a number of vulgarians, masking as artists, for whom she has posed. When Andrien's picture near completion, a Bulgarian prince, Vacarra, sees it and falls in love with the model. He soon secures an introduction, but as all his overtures toward her are futile he plots to trap her in his apartment. This he succeeds in doing, and then gives her the choice of marrying him or becoming his mistress. Colette chooses the lesser of the evils.

When war breaks out Vacarra takes her to Bulgaria, and leaves her while he joins his regiment. After a year a son, Rudolph, is born to Colette. When Vacarra returns home he refuses to treat the boy kindly as he resents his presence. Shortly afterward the family returns to America. Here Vacarra shamefully persecutes Colette, beating her when she refuses to attend his banquets, which are no better than wild orgies. On one of these occasions Colette meets Don again, and is thoroughly ashamed to be seen as the hostess of such company. Vacarra eventually takes Colette to his mountain lodge, which is near the Walcott's bungalow. Vacarra's brutality is now aimed at the boy, and to protect him, Colette, one night fells her husband with a heavy missile. She takes her son and flees to the Walcotts.

Andrien is going blind, and Colette pawns her jewels to get money for an operation. Through them Vacarra again finds her. He steals the boy, and taking him to a high cliff is about to dash him on the rocks when Andrien hearing the cries rips the bandage from his healing eyes and grapples with him. They both fall and are killed. And later Colette pledges her love to Don.

"BORROWED CLOTHES"—JEWEL

Lois Weber Scores Again with Production Starring Mildred Harris

THIS picture was reviewed extensively in the advance reviews of the issue of Sept. 28, on page 2079, under the temporary title, "Orange Blossoms." It is a classy production. One really couldn't expect anything less from Director Lois Weber, with such players as Mildred Harris and Lewis Cody for principals.

One of the situations borders somewhat on the risque, but it has been handled in such a refined way that I doubt whether it would give offense to anybody. There are no vulgar scenes of any description shown in it.

This attraction has been produced elaborately, the interior of a real home of some wealthy person in Los Angeles, Cal., having been used as a background in some of the scenes. The photography and the artistic effects are also splendid.—Released Oct.—Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Mary Kirk.....Mildred Harris
George Weston.....Edward J. Peel
Louise Kirk.....Hellen Rosson
Stuart Furth.....Lewis J. Cody
Rita Morris.....Fantine La Rue
Mary's father.....George Nicholas
Mrs. Kirk.....Edythe Chapman
Story by Marion Orth.
Scenario and direction by Lois Weber.

SUGGESTIONS

As was the case with "The Price of a Good Time" and "For Husbands Only," the Jewel Company has again provided a title that is excellent from the advertising viewpoint. Its possibilities are varied and offer opportunities for every exhibitor no matter what his location or the type of his clientele. If you use special drawings, you might get your artist to paint a picture of Miss Harris clad in particularly flashy clothes. In the background have another picture of her, perhaps just the head this time, in modest attire. This can be made striking, providing the first figure is done in brilliant colors, the one in the background in more subdued tones or just in lines. Underneath this have whatever catch line containing a play on the title that you think suitable. One that might be suitable appears under "Catch Lines."

Remember that Mildred Harris has attained a wide popularity because of these previous pictures and feature her prominently. She has ability, beauty and personality. Also mention these other pictures in newspaper and general advertising as well as Lois Weber's name. Miss Weber is the only woman director to attain prominence. Her name would have a special appeal to women and if you are in the habit of circularizing your patrons bring out Miss Weber's name and her work prominently in all letters or cards addressed to the feminine portion of your clientele.

AD TALK

Mildred Harris, star of such popular pictures as "The Price of a Good Time" and "For Husbands Only," will be the star at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest Jewel production, "Borrowed Clothes." This is the story of a pretty salesgirl whose character, while perfectly innocent, is blackened by a series of unexpected incidents. She is cast out even by her own family, that is in a moral sense, and is only saved from being forced into a loveless marriage by a father only too eager to marry her off to the first man that presents himself, by the eleventh hour appearance of the man she has always really loved and who was in a partial sense, responsible for the various misfortunes that befell her.

Miss Harris, one of the youngest, and at the same time one of the most appealing and prettiest actresses on the screen today, appears to striking advantage in the featured role of "Borrowed Clothes." It is one which is particularly adapted to her talents, or rather, it is one to which Miss Harris particularly well adapts herself for versatility is not the least of her many accomplishments. Her support again includes Lewis J. Cody, who appeared with her in the two pictures named above, while others are Edward J. Peel, Hellen Rosson and Fantine La Rue.

The picture has been dramatically presented under the direction of Lois Weber, one of the most famous directors of the screen. She worked on an original story by Marion Orth and the results are certainly all that could be desired. Miss Weber knows pictorial values and has the happy knack of bringing out the best in all players that come under her direction.

Mary Kirk, salesgirl, agrees to marry George Weston, a member of the firm by which she is employed. While she does not love him she gives her consent to his proposal due to the urging of her sister, Louise, who is anxious for money and social position. Mary is really in love with Stuart Furth, a handsome, wealthy young man, really of decent character but entangled in the meshes of Rita Morris, a lady of the world. Stuart has developed a sincere admiration for Mary and awaits the opportunity to ripen their acquaintance.

One day while Mary and Weston are at the beach for a swim, a fire breaks out in the bath houses and their clothes are destroyed. Stuart happens along in his machine and volunteers to take Mary home. He takes her to Rita's place and borrows some of her clothes for Mary. As she is about to leave Rita comes in and objects. Stuart tells her to leave in no uncertain terms and in revenge she has the place raided by police. Mary escapes and after a long while reaches home. Her father, seeing her in the borrowed finery, believes the worst and severely beats her. Her wedding with Weston is called off. Louise, not wanting to see the man escape the family, thereupon begins a game that eventually results in Weston proposing to her.

One day Louise visits the family of the married Weston brother and discovers that the firm is nearly bankrupt. So on the day set for her wedding she takes a train for other parts. Poor Mary is once again nominated for marriage to Weston by her father, thankful that anyone wants her for a wife. So she is thrust into Louise's wedding gown. But Stuart, who has heretofore been repulsed by Mary, finally asserts himself and arrives in time to claim Mary as his own bride.

"SHOULDER ARMS"—CHAPLIN—FIRST NATIONAL

Chaplin Plus a Timely Subject—What More Can You Ask?

PERHAPS "Shoulder Arms" will not cause as many laughs as "A Dog's Life," but I believe it will please equally as well, because it is timely and contains many features never before introduced in a Chaplin comedy.

The story introduces the star as a private in the U. S. Army.

There are several unusually good comedy situations in it, the most laughable one being where the hero, while behind the German lines, dons a device painted to look like the trunk of a tree. By its aid, he succeeds in killing several Germans, also in liberating his captured pal. One stroke, at one time, fails to kill a Boche, because he is of too large dimensions. A chase then follows, which is thrilling as well as comical. The hero, at the crucial moment, eludes his pursuer by simply standing still, making himself appear like a tree without any branches.

There are several other exciting situations. The near-capture of the hero in the ruins of an old building, for instance, where he meets the heroine. Also while in the Kaiser's headquarters, in disguise. But in each case he is able to get out of a tight fix, much to the relief of the spectator. He will get many a round of applause from the audiences, as their sympathy will travel with him all the while.

THE CAST

The Soldier.....Charlie Chaplin
His Companion-in-Arms.....Syd Chaplin
The French Girl.....Edna Purviance
Written and Produced by Mr. Chaplin.

SUGGESTIONS

First be sure to drive home the fact that "Shoulder Arms" is a new picture. Advertise it as the only one that Chaplin has produced since "A Dog's Life." Any manner by which you can draw a line between it and the Chaplin reissues will be acceptable. First National publicity suggests that you use a Chaplin signature cut in your advertising, and this is apparently one of the best plans evolved to signify the picture's authenticity and recent production.

First National also gives two good suggestions for lobby display. The stock posters carry large figures of Chaplin as a soldier. This figure can be cut out, mounted on cardboard and hung with all the kitchen utensils that the comedian takes to the trenches. This will be a most effective display. The other is more expensive, and suggests that you dress your lobby as the trench scene taken from the picture, the entrance to your house being the entrance to the dugout in the original.

It is our opinion that the cutout idea is the better of the two. You can use more than one cutout and have the figures placed in various parts of the lobby.

AD TALK

Next week the management of the ———— theatre will offer its patrons something novel—a war picture!

But wait! We should add to make our point quite clear that it is a war comedy. That's a little better, eh?

But wait again! Charlie Chaplin is the star! That makes us friends again, doesn't it?

And if you want even further urging, Charlie Chaplin's comedy, war picture is a new picture. It is none of this old stuff made over, boiled down and cut up. "Shoulder Arms," this is its title. is the second of his pictures made exclusively for distribution through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Mark that well. When you see the name First National on a Chaplin picture you will also see Charlie's signature, and when you see that, you know that it's authentic, his latest and best.

In "Shoulder Arms" Charlie takes a stab at the Hun, and succeeds in bringing Kaiser, Crown Prince, and von Hindy, into the American lines, captives all. Of course, after he has done this, Charlie has to go and wake up and spoil it all.

The management of the ———— theatre refuses to take it upon itself to enumerate the laughs in "Shoulder Arms." The cashier tried and, though he is an expert accountant, he soon lost track of the number, and gave it up. But what we will say is that "Shoulder Arms" is a comedy on the life of the soldier that is just packed with laughs. There is a lot that is humorous in the doughboy's life despite the serious work that is his. And we for one offer a hearty vote of thanks to Chaplin for bringing this humor out on the screen.

Telling the story of a Charlie Chaplin picture is similar to making an effort, and a futile effort, at painting the lily with the comparatively material pigments of the artist. When we have said that Chaplin goes to war in "Shoulder Arms," we have given a foundation upon which any one's imagination can play and on which he can build his own story. But for the benefit of those who want all the details of the plot, hearken.

Chaplin is the "awkwardest" member of the awkward squad at camp, and after a hard day's work attempting to master the manual of arms and to toe instead of out, he throws himself on his cot for a few minutes' stay in the justly celebrated arms of Morpheus. Then enter Chaplin of the trenches with various paraphernalia, such as a washtub, a grater, a mouse trap, a dripping pan (probably to catch the rain), and sundry others things not mentioned in the complete outfit of the soldier.

There comes the time when Chaplin goes over the top, and successfully, and then there comes the time when he camouflages himself as a tree, and goes on a spying expedition within the German lines. One soldier wants to cut him down for fire wood, but he manages to escape. And then he rescues a pretty French girl. He lets her know that he is an American by hitting himself on the head with a brick, and then pointing out the Stars and Stripes he sees as a result of the blow. And then, yes, yes, he gets into a German officer's uniform, no matter how or where, and puts the French girl in another and takes the wheel of the Kaiser's car, driving his nibs, the war lord, his son, the Clown, and none other than Hindy or Ludy, or one of those generals back into the American lines. And then, sorrow of sorrows, he awakes on his cot in the rookie camp.

"THE KING OF DIAMONDS"—VITAGRAPH

Harry Morey Stars in Feature of Great Dramatic Intensity

THIS is one of the strongest pictures that Vitagraph has issued in some time. Its story is handled quite superlatively from the dramatic standpoint and while the outline of its essentials may suggest a distasteful theme, the treatment accorded it banishes anything that might offend and at the same time raises the story's intensity to an unusually high degree.

Mr. Morey's characterization of the man whose wife and home are taken from him by an unscrupulous physician who makes it appear that his patient is the victim of leprosy, is deft and strong. It is a role that fits this sterling actor very well indeed. Strength of character and strength of physique were required that the full force of the part might be realized—and these attributes, all too scarce among the majority of actors, Mr. Morey possesses in abundance.

The support which includes Betty Blythe, Jean Paige and George Majeroni renders adequate assistance, Miss Paige in particular scoring a decisive success with her delightful naturalness and attractive appearance.—Released Oct. 14.—Length, 5 reels.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Oliver Bennett.....Harry T. Morey
Lucille Bennett.....Betty Blythe
Jewel.....Jean Paige
Dr. Emilio Toranno.....George Majeroni
Author: Edward S. Ballou.
Director: Paul Scardon.

CATCH LINES

Harry Morey in the strongest feature he has ever appeared in for the Vitagraph Company.

A splendid supporting cast headed by Betty Blythe, Jean Paige and George Majeroni.

A supposed leper returns a Diamond King, to wreck vengeance on his faithless wife and the man who stole her from him.

How an unscrupulous physician wrecked another man's life to win his wife for himself.

Supposedly a leper, Oliver Bennett jumped into the ocean to end it all. But he found life too sweet to give it up and later he discovered that the disease had never harrassed him. He later returned to avenge himself on the man who caused his suffering.

Harry Morey, an ace in the deck of actors, in a dramatic photoplay, "The King of Diamonds."

Harry Morey is an actor who demands and must have a strong, virile role. He does not depend for effect on curled or polished hair, nor on the latest cut clothes. Mr. Morey can impress in overalls or a dress suit. His latest picture, "The King of Diamonds," gives him a role that gives a wide play to his versatility.

AD TALK

Harry Morey, that virile actor whose appearance in Vitagraph pictures is always a much-looked-for event in film circles comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest feature, entitled "The King of Diamonds." This picture, the management feels quite safe in saying, is one of the most extraordinary and at the same time one of the most intensely dramatic that it has ever presented on the screen of the ——— theatre. It was written expressly for the star by Edward S. Ballou and directed by Paul Scardon, a man fully able to handle the production and the star by his long dealing with dramatic subjects featuring Mr. Morey.

The central characters are the Bennetts and a certain Dr. Toranno. The doctor loves Mrs. Bennett and she returns his love with equal ardor. Mr. Bennett (Harry Morey) realizes that his wife's love for him has grown cold but fails to discover the identity of the man to which she has changed her affections. The doctor, to get rid of Bennett, injects mineral poison in him on some pretext or another. This produces a soreness of the skin closely resembling leprosy. In a wild fear, Bennett throws himself into the sea. Mrs. Bennett and the doctor, believing him dead, then marry.

The climax of this story can not be well told in cold type. But it may be said that with the return of Bennett after he has discovered the truth of the whole situation there is a denouement that for sheer dramatic force and sustained interest has seldom, if ever, been equaled on either screen or stage. Betty Blythe, George Majeroni and Jean Paige appear in Mr. Morey's support in "The King of Diamonds."

Oliver Bennett realizes that his wife, Lucille, is drifting away from him, although he is not aware of the identity of the man who has alienated her affections. This man is Dr. Toranno. He and Lucille are madly in love with one another. Toranno knows full well that Bennett is a man that would fight to the last ditch and that he would never give up his wife. Consequently he administers to Bennett a mineral poison which brings out sores on the skin closely resembling leprosy. Bennett, crazed with fear, jumps into a row boat and puts out to sea. When far from the shore he jumps overboard. Lucille and the doctor watch him from the shore. Later they become man and wife.

Months later Bennett appears at an African diamond mine. Life was sweet and after he had struggled in the water he had been picked up by a passing tramp schooner. The owner of the mine, Dr. Sanderson, proves to Bennett that his skin trouble is slight and on learning the cause of it he realizes Dr. Toranno's treachery. He determines upon revenge. The chance comes when Sanderson dies, leaving him half his fortune with instructions to seek out his daughter and give her the other half. With Sanderson's ward, Jewel, whom he loves, he sets out again for the United States.

Taking a house next to Toranno he soon becomes acquainted with them. His beard is a staunch disguise. He gains the doctor's confidence and sees him invest his fortune in a worthless stock with glee. Bennett plans further revenge but Jewel then tells him that Lucille is Sanderson's daughter. His sense of duty to the dead man conquers his desire for revenge and then Fate takes a hand. He turns over the money to Lucille and departs with Jewel as his wife.

SUGGESTIONS

The title of this feature lends itself readily to original advertising. For a special display for the lobby you might have a frame dressed up as the border of a playing card, the king of diamonds, while in the center one of Morey's pictures with an announcement regarding the feature. If you use throw-aways have these made up in the size and form of playing cards. On one side have the usual card the king of diamonds, while on the other the announcement regarding your feature.

Unless you cater to a transient public it would be best to stay away from the leprosy angle of the picture. Such a topic is not usually discussed in the best regulated families and is rather distasteful.

"WANTED A BROTHER"—GENERAL

Best of Series in Which Little Gloria Joy Is Starred

YOU will find an extensive review of this feature on page 2591, in issue of October 19. It is the best of the series in which Little Gloria Joy is starred, because it is based chiefly on the element of heart appeal.

In the construction of the story, the diminutive star's age has been fully taken into consideration by the author. At no time is she given a part that might be considered beyond her strength or maturity of her brains.

There are several touching scenes in the picture, the most affecting one being the meeting of father and son after the estrangement. Your patrons will hardly be able to keep a tear out of their eyes.

This attraction should give universal satisfaction.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Bab Fanning.....Gloria Joy
Mrs. Fanning.....Mignon LeBrun
Mr. Fanning.....H. E. Archer
Daniel Wellsley.....Daniel Gilfether
Tom Wellsley.....Julian Dillon
Officer Mulcahy.....Edward Jobson
Mrs. Barton.....Ruth Lackaye
James McPherson.....William Reed
Directed by Robert Ensminger.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have been running this series of productions featuring Gloria Joy, and providing the people have received the previous numbers well, your work on "Wanted a Brother" merely consists of seeing to the fact that the people know this is another picture with the same star.

Children's matinees might be in order, as suggested on a former number of this series, providing your house is located in a residential district of the better class. Children don't like children's matinees as a rule but after looking "Wanted a Brother" over yourself you can form your own opinion on how the youngsters of the neighborhood will receive it. It is a chance for extra publicity that is worth while taking.

If you want to get the full benefit out of this series and the personality of the star, bring out the fact that she is by no means the stereotyped child actress but a natural, easy-going, little girl who is apparently oblivious of the camera in every scene.

AD TALK

On ——— of ——— week, the management of the ——— theatre will offer something new to its patrons in a production made by the Oakdale Film Company, entitled "Wanted a Brother." This picture features a child star by the screen name of Gloria Joy. The little actress is, in passing, both a glory and a joy to look upon and this high compliment is paid to her only after the most serious consideration, for there are many child stars in the film world. But as our readers are doubtless well aware, the average child star is usually so sophisticated that she is not a real child. As soon as the juvenile performer has spent a few weeks or months before the camera, he, or it is usually she, becomes so well versed in all its tricks that naturalness is lost—at least this is the fate of many of the younger professionals of today. To retain their naturalness and unsophistication is a thing exceedingly difficult. When many actors and actresses of mature age fail to succeed in so doing, the difficulty that confronts a child star can readily be imagined. With the case of little Gloria Joy, however, there is another story to tell.

To begin with, this child player has only been before the camera for a few months, so any chance of her becoming unduly sophisticated is reduced to a minimum. She is exceedingly natural, never conscious of the fact that she is a "star," and far from being stilted in gestures or expression. As a result her pictures are realistic, human and appealing, particularly as the authors have taken pains to avoid the usual type of child story. They have made a happy effort to get away from the "little child shall lead them" idea, and as a result the pictures show a certain refreshing originality that is highly commendable.

"Wanted a Brother" tells the story of a little girl, whose playmate, a rich little boy who has run away from his home, is arrested and sent to the House of Correction on a charge trumped up by the boys of the neighborhood who dislike him. How the girl finally manages to find him and bring him back to his father forms a tale full of bright and happy spots, which, at the same time, contains dramatic material sufficient to make it interesting at all times.

Daniel Gilfether, a sterling old character actor, Julian Dillon as the boy and a capable supporting cast surround the little star.

THE STORY

Bab Fanning, daughter of a shoemaker, makes the acquaintance of Tom Wellsley, a boy, who has run away from his comfortable home in search of adventure. When adventure begins to pall on him he is afraid to return home on account of his rather severe father. So he becomes a "newsie." But the other newsboys of the neighborhood resent Tom's appearance in their midst, and promptly hatch a plan to get rid of him. They steal some fruit from the corner stand, and plant it on Tom with the result that the boy is arrested on the complaint of the fruit dealer and sent to the House of Correction.

Bab takes his place as "newsie," hoping to get enough money to free her friend. But because of her girl's clothes the boys chase her away. Later she reappears clad in the conventional clothes of the "newsboy." The money she makes she offers to the policeman that arrested Tom, but the officer refuses to be bribed, and Bab is unable to procure Tom's release from the boys' jail.

Tom gets in bad company at the House of Correction, and with a certain tough gang makes a break for liberty. It is successful, but Tom refuses to be a party to the gang when they plan to rob a house, particularly as the house selected in his father's. Bab, learning that he has escaped, makes endeavors to find her playmate once again. She visits the Wellsley home at the same time that the gang arrives and is induced to help them enter the house.

However, when she secures an entrance she discovers Mr. Wellsley brooding in the library and she forgets all about her wicked mission when he speaks kindly to her. The two become fast friends in a short time and when Bab fails to reappear the gang gives up the job of robbing the house and disperses. Tom finds employment on a farm, but a few days later when Bab is enjoying a ride in the Wellsley car she comes upon him and induces him to return home. Thus does she effect a reconciliation between father and son and wins a big brother for herself.

"THE GYPSY TRAIL"—PARAMOUNT

It Will Please—But the Star Is Somewhat Lost

SPEEDY action of plot, including constant activity on the part of the characters, and good construction of story, from the point of view of keeping one guessing as to what will happen next, constitute the entertaining elements in this photoplay.

A young girl's love for romance forms the basic idea of the story.

The only fault one can find with the scenario is the fact that it bestows the sympathy on the wrong man, instead of the hero. The latter is given rather a "boobish" part. He is seen crying once or twice. That kills all sympathy for him.

The picture is clean, and will offer satisfactory entertainment, since Casson Ferguson, the player that gets all the sympathy, is a pleasing personality.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

Directed by Walter Edwards.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture was adapted from a real stage success of the same title and affords the star an ideal role which is worthy to be ranked with his "Skinner" characterizations. In advertising Mr. Washburn be sure to bring out the fact that he appeared in the Skinner pictures. These were extensively read when they appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and were exceptionally well received when shown on the screen. They added to Washburn's popularity considerably. His most recent picture, "Till I Come Back to You," an Artcraft, was also very well received and might be mentioned in advertising. The original play could also be mentioned as many of your patrons will probably recognize the title.

If lobby decorations are desired, of course, the title suggests gypsy paraphernalia, but gypsies have nothing to do with the telling of the story, so unless you think this style of decoration unusually attractive don't use it. A better plan would call for a more dignified display. Doubtless, Paramount is able to supply you with the poem upon which the picture's title is based. You could display this prominently and to advantage, for it is a lilting bit of verse that will appeal to everyone reading it.

AD TALK

There is an old adage that reads: "Faint Heart Ne'er Won Fair Lady," which is partially true, but Edward Andrews, the hero of "The Gypsy Trail," was possessed of a faint heart and still he won out, thereby proving that there are exceptions to any and all rules. To give Edward the benefit of the doubt, however, his heart was not exactly faint. It was ignorant, undecided and always got mixed up with the brain. In other words, Edward was matter-of-fact. The fact that the girl was quite the contrary, romantic to the extreme, sort of balanced things up and made it easier for Edward. But even after he won her he didn't know how he did it. He could never do it again. And, of course, if he and she were to live happily ever afterward, there would be no cause for doing it again.

However, notwithstanding and be that as it may, "The Gypsy Trail," which is the featured attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week is a joyful romance that you will never forget and one that you will never want to forget. As a play it achieved great success only a year ago and as a picture it makes an entertainment of the sort everyone is sure to like these days. It is a play of youth, of love, there is no villain ever dancing around and menacing the happiness and virtue of others. The story is so pretty that no villain is needed to carry on the action.

Bryant Washburn, hero of the well remembered "Skinner" pictures, plays the role of the thoroughly human Edward and Wanda Hawley is seen as the young lady in question. Casson Ferguson is the rover, the fellow who elects to remain on the Gypsy Trail for life, and others who appear are C. H. Geldart, Edythe Chapman and Georgie Stone.

THE STORY

Edward Andrews, a young man of exceedingly retiring disposition, too matter-of-fact, and quite devoid of any romantic nature is in love with Frances Raymond, a girl, romantic but conventional to a certain degree. Edward doesn't know how he can please Frances but eventually gains the idea that she wants some one to elope with her. This dawns on him after her young brother has read him passages of "Lochinvar." However, Edward is still in a quandry. An elopement without a chaperone would be altogether improper, according to his way of thinking. So he enlists Grandma as the third party and tells her to be at a certain house at a certain time.

Now the process of kidnapping Frances is also distasteful to Edward, so when Michael Rudder, reporter, jack-of-all-trades, follower of the "Gypsy Trail," comes along, he hires him to do the eloping. Frances, however, spoils his plans, for when Michael finally sets her down in Grandma's presence, she turns to him as the man she loves. Michael, though he is fascinated by the beautiful Frances, doesn't like to contemplate marriage for it will mean giving up the life of the gypsy trail—the life of freedom to which he has become accustomed. So Michael decamps and leaves Frances in a bad frame of mind, not at all ready to receive Edward's protestations of love.

However, when things have resumed their normal course again and Frances still pines for Michael, Edward, in the goodness of his heart, goes in search of him. He lays the case before the rover, who at last comes back to Frances—and proposes. But then the girl wakes up and discovers the man she really loves is Edward, after all. Edward doesn't understand the situation at all—but married life gives promise of opening his eyes.

CATCH LINES

If you, Mister Young Man, desired to elope with the lady of your heart you wouldn't hire a proxy to do the eloping for you, would you? The hero of "The Gypsy Trail" gets cold feet and hires an "eloper." The trouble this causes him is delightfully pictured in this week's feature at the ———.

Based on the play of the same name that set all New York talking.

Edward Andrews' romantic bump wasn't cultivated at all until he found himself desperately in love with a young lady who demanded to be eloped with. Edward insisted that a chaperone should accompany them. See the humorous predicament in which the young man found himself in "The Gypsy Trail," now showing at the ——— theatre.

"ALL NIGHT"—BLUEBIRD

An Out of the Ordinary Comedy Drama That Satisfies

THIS picture has been reviewed in issue of October 12, on page 2443, under the temporary title, "One Bright Idea." It is a comedy drama, and the kind that will get many hearty laughs.

Picture in your mind a rough-looking, illiterate, ill-mannered man, of large dimensions, paying a visit to refined people. His table manners, his general behavior and almost everything he does are contrary to ethics. The most laughable situation, however, is where he tries to impose his will upon the host and the hostess, whom he supposes as being husband and wife, while they are merely friends, by making them go to bed. He runs around the house with his suspenders hanging from his back.

There are no vulgar situations shown at any time in the picture. It has been directed very cleverly and in a refined manner.

It is a good offering and should have universal appeal.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

Carmel Myers, the pretty young Bluebird star, in a comedy-drama of rapid happenings all in one night.

It was all right when Elizabeth Lane, young, pretty and unmarried, agreed to play hostess with Richard Thayer as host, but their guest insisted on the "early-to-bed" idea and forcibly disrobed Richard. When he caught the embarrassed young man stealing out of Elizabeth's room he accused him of deserting his wife. And this was only the beginning of a night that anyone would term wild.

Written by that popular author of fiction, Edgar Franklin.

We can only show "All Night" half the night, but from the way the crowds are coming we could run it until morning with a profit.

It would be rather embarrassing, wouldn't it, if a dominating gentleman from the West saw you with the girl you loved and immediately insisted that you weren't a respectable married couple because you didn't have any children? Rather embarrassing! See how Elizabeth Lane and Richard Thayer felt about it in "All Night."

AD TALK

Carmel Myers, the vivacious and attractive young Bluebird star, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest photoplay, a spirited comedy-drama entitled "All Night." This is one of the those delightfully intimate little comedies that takes one right out of the realm of the present—out of the theatre—and transports him into the land of romance and of perpetual fun. Nothing in real life could ever go off quite as smoothly as it does in "All Night," and nothing so ridiculously funny could ever happen and yet nothing could ever amuse one quite so heartily.

The story, written by Edgar Franklin, tells of Richard Thayer, who would woo Elizabeth Lane, a much courted young woman. To make his road easy, he prevails upon his friends, the Harcourts, to invite her to dinner that he may happen in just by "accident," as it were, and have the pleasure of her company for the evening. All would have gone well, or perhaps all would never have gone well, had not Bradford from the West, Harcourt's business backer, who has never seen him, had not Bradford, we repeat, dropped in on the party. Bradford was a bug on efficiency and as the Harcourts had dismissed their servants for the evening it remained for them to take their places and introduce Dick and Elizabeth as host and hostess.

A pretty situation! Particularly as old Bradford was a stickler on the "early-to-bed" stuff and insisted on taking Dick in and undressing him. However do not hide your eyes. "All Night" is just pure fun. Miss Myers receives likable support from M. Rudolpho De Valentina, a long name belonging to a fellow long on acting, from Charles Dorian, Mary Warren, William Dyer and Wadsworth Harris.

Richard Thayer, who is very much in love with Elizabeth Lane, asks his friends, the Harcourts, to invite her to dinner on a certain night that he may drop in "accidentally" and bask in her smiles. She is such a profusely courted young lady that otherwise Dick can't even get a look in. Harcourt is in need of a large sum of money to float a big copper deal and a business correspondent, whom he has never met, promises to advance the sum providing his ways are sufficiently efficient to meet with his approval. Harcourt awaits the coming of the millionaire, Bradford by name, with nervous expectancy.

The night of Elizabeth's arrival for dinner the Harcourts dismiss their servants for the evening. Dick arrives and then—a message comes that Bradford will be with them that evening. So Dick and Elizabeth are prevailed upon to act as the Harcourts, inasmuch as the real Harcourts know the house better and can assume the roles of the servants. Bradford arrives and proves to be quite dominating and pompous. He tells Dick and Elizabeth that they should have children and bundles them off to bed after dinner. He catches Dick sneaking out of the room and drags him back and undresses him. The situation is embarrassing to say the least.

Then Colonel Lane shows up in a high rage demanding his daughter. Harcourt informs Bradford that the man is insane and as a consequence the outraged parent is locked in a closet. Finally, however, matters reach a stage where to camouflage further is out of the question and so Harcourt makes a clean breast of the whole affair. Bradford realizes that Harcourt is well able to cope with any emergency and backs him financially, while Dick and Elizabeth have come to know each other so well that there is nothing else to do but to get married. And so the night of horror (?) ends.

PAPER—There are two one-sheets, one of which is a good portrait of Miss Myers; two three-sheets and two six-sheets on this production. All paper is printed in the usual attractive style of Bluebird subjects. The colors are good, the lettering striking and the selected scenes suitable for poster reproduction.

LOBBY DISPLAY—There are a selection of scene and star stills in the usual standard sizes on this production. With the title card provided with each set, they make an attractive lobby display.

CUTS—Scene cuts are provided on this production in one- and two-column sizes. There are also the stock star cuts of Miss Myers procurable, these latter being particularly well suited to either text or advertising columns of your newspaper.

A slide, music cue sheet, window card and press sheet are among the other accessories furnished on this subject at all Bluebird exchanges.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is another good title for you and one that offers you a good line of advertising. It is a light subject, so treat it so in your newspaper announcements and lobby decorations. Do you remember the advertising done on the legitimate production "Twin Beds"? Try to dope out something on that order. Have a pair of twin beds drawn by your artist. In one have a figure of a man, in the other a woman. Get looks of shocked surprise into each face as they try to avoid each other. You might also have an old man in a nightgown lecturing to them from the ends of the beds. If you can get your artist to dress such a drawing up in the style of the covers of "Vanity Fair" or "Vogue" you will have a most attractive display. Other situations in the picture suggest scenes of a similarly humorous nature. A picture of the old man chasing the young fellow down the hall, both clad in night attire, would be appropriate. Neither of these is offensive and they will attract. But let an artist see the picture anyway and he can probably get some more ideas.

CATCH LINES

"SHOULDER ARMS"

Chaplin's advice to soldiers—take a nutmeg grater for relief from cooties, a mouse trap to catch the rates and a dripping pan for the rain. Trench life will rival that of the home if this plan is followed to the letter.

Every country, with the exception of the United States, has discovered that there is a lighter side to war. It has shown itself in their literature and their drama. Charlie Chaplin discovers this lighter side in "Shoulder Arms," his latest comedy.

Cold type cannot suggest the humorous character of this latest of Chaplin's pictures. The comedian's art of deriving humor from the drab and commonplace was never more in evidence than in "Shoulder Arms." If you want to enjoy the season's best laugh come to the ——— theatre and see it.

"THE RECKONING DAY"—TRIANGLE

Snappy Action to This Tale of Those Familiar German Spies

SPEEDY plot action, constant activity on the part of the characters, suspense due to intelligent construction of the story which keeps you guessing as to what will happen next, constitute the elements upon which this production has been based. You can add to this, fine direction and good acting on the part of the principal as well as the secondary characters. The result is a picture that will be a sure hit as an entertainment.

The basic idea of the story is the murder of a young girl and the fastening of the crime upon an innocent person. It is caused by some German spies, because the girl, an unwilling instrument of theirs, was about to disclose some of their secrets.

The heroine unravels the mystery, led by certain cancelled checks, representing donations to the Red Cross, which found their way to the pockets of the spy leader.

Based on a murder as it is, the picture is not gruesome except at one point, where it shows the stiff body carried out of the room on the arms of a person. That part is repulsive, but it could be eliminated without injuring the story in the least. There are also too many close-ups of the body shown, while it is lying on the couch. You could have your exchange eliminate the above objectionable scenes.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

The heroism and wit of a young American woman pitted against the most subtle of all German trickery forms the basis of "The Reckoning Day," a Triangle play, to be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This features the fascinating Belle Bennett as a prominent member in the office of the district attorney. She is commissioned to run down a gang of German workers who operate a system of collecting money for their country under the guise of a charity organization. How she brings these enemies to justice and saves the man she loves from a false accusation of murder makes a picture full of absorbing incident and thrilling situations.

It is a well-known fact that a number of supposedly reputable organizations have been investigated with results similar to those found against the bogus charity workers in "The Reckoning Day." One prominent New York organization which went so far as to announce that its funds were collected toward war relief work was dissolved, and its members brought before the court when the investigators got busy. So "The Reckoning Day" has the added attraction of presenting some real facts as well as a fascinating story of a girl's heroism and love of country.

Miss Bennett is one of the shining Triangle lights. Her work in other features has already placed her in high esteem with local picture devotees, and it is not exaggerating to predict that her performance in "The Reckoning Day" adds new laurels to her name. J. Barney Sherry, a sterling character actor, is co-starred with Miss Bennett, while others who add to the general worth of the production, are Jack Richardson, Tom Buckingham and Lenore Fair. The story was written by Bob Hill, while Harry Pollard was in charge of the direction.

Jane Whiting, an employee of the district attorney's office, exceedingly clever in matters of law and thoroughly conversant with the ways of the underworld life of the city, is assigned by the chief to the task of bringing to justice a collection of Germans who operate a supposed charity organization for relief among the poor. The funds they thus secure are turned over to the Kaiser's government. While the attorney's office is well aware of all this, final proof is needed before the arrest and conviction of the traitors takes place.

Jane is engaged to Frank Wheeler, son of a Senator, a great admirer of Jane's. Frank, however, is something of a weakling, and he disregards his promise to Jane when he meets Lola Schram. Lois captivates Frank, and he, unaware of her connection with the German organization, is often seen in her company. Frederick Kube, the head of the fake charity organization, who also loves Lola, resents Frank's innocent interference in his affair. However, he continues his activities in collecting sums of money from the rich supposedly for charity work. These are duly remitted to the German Intelligence Department.

Lola at last confesses her connection with the crooked society to Frank. As a result she is shot and killed by another member in the very presence of the young man. Through the maneuvering of the Germans, Frank is arrested and charged with the crime. It is then, however, that Jane comes to the rescue. The trap she has set is sprung, the gang is captured, and Frank's name is cleared.

The young man then realizes his foolishness in allowing Lola to wind him around her finger, and he is only to glad that Jane is willing to forgive and forget his part in the affair.

CATCH LINES

The heroism and pluck of an American girl pitted against German trickery.

A band of Germans masking as a charity organization brought to justice through the untiring efforts of an American girl.

Funds contributed to a charitable institution turned into German coffers—a startling expose made by a young American woman!

Belle Bennett, Triangle's beautiful young star, appears as a member of the district attorney's office, and "gets the goods" on a German ring.

German spies seek to convict innocent American of murder—foiled by untiring efforts of young woman.

Here is a spy play with an original twist and with a girl filling the hero's shoes!

It is not every woman that has the opportunity to serve her country in the manner that came to Jane—but every woman in the country would rise to the opportunity if it did come.

A spy play in which the author has based the framework of his drama on actual facts uncovered by the courts of a great city.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a spy play that offers you a different angle to plug in that the usual hero is relegated to the background to give way to the heroine. This fact should offer you the chance to get in some original advertising using pictures of Miss Bennett from any tense scenes you may find in the stills surrounded by lettering dwelling on the fact that the young woman pictured unearthed a group of Hun spies.

The author, too, has supplied a new angle. The German spies mask their activities underneath the mantle of a respectable charitable organization. It will not do to arouse undue suspicion toward such organizations in your advertising, but you can easily hint that the story was based on partial fact. Such scandals have occurred since our entrance into the war as is pictured in "The Reckoning Day."

" The Man Who Wouldn't Shoot," with Harry Carey

(Universal Special. Directed by Jack Ford)

THIS picture can undoubtedly be classed among the best Western offerings ever produced. Here are the reasons. First, it treats of a subject whose basic idea is a son's unbounded love for his mother and little orphaned brother. It is one of the noblest principles that can ever be embodied in a picture. Nothing can surpass it, except it be parental love for their offspring. If this prove impotent to reach the human emotions, nothing else can; Secondly, it is, if I be not mistaken, the first time in the history of feature picture production, in which the hero, a cowboy, and owner of a ranch, is introduced without the usual gun, beats his adversaries, and still it is done most convincingly.

The hero's father, a town marshal, is shot and killed by some Mexican cattle rustlers. The hero takes his mother and little brother away from that town. They buy a ranch and settle down. The mother begs her son to swear on the Bible never to use a gun as long as he lives. Although against his grain, he swears to it.

Some Mexican rustlers trick him into a room with the intent to kill him, but one of their gang is killed instead. The hero is accused of the crime and convicted to hang. A day before the execution he induces the sheriff to take him to his mother to bid her his last good-by, but with the understanding that they are not to tell her that he is to hang.

While returning after the visit, he finds his brother near the road twisting in agony, having been branded with a hot iron on the breast by the cattle rustlers whom he tried to prevent from stealing their cattle. He knocks the sheriff off his horse, grabs his rifle and runs after the thieves. He finds them in the saloon of the little village anl kills them. Then he returns to the jail to the great surprise of the sheriff. He is acquitted, however, the fact having become known that he is innocent of the crime he is accused. He returns home with a bride.

The scene showing the hero in the saloon seeking the two cattle rustlers, is as dramatic as I have ever seen. It will take your breath away, almost stop the beating of heart and hold you spellbound until the issue is decided. As your sympathies are with the hero, you are actually afraid lest he is worsted. It offers you a great relief to see him get the best of them.

The shooting of the villains is not productive of repulsiveness, and as the picture is full of human element, I wouldn't be afraid to recommend it for the best of audiences. Length, six reels.—P. S. Harrison.

" The Vow "

(A Cinema-Song-Recital in Two Reels—Present by Hopp Hadley)

HOPP HADLEY, long prominent in the motion picture business, came to the front recently with an innovation which he calls a cinema-song-recital. He took for his basis the story told by the song cycle entitled " Eliland," which is well known both in the worlds of music and literature. His scenario, based on this, tells the story of a monk who loved a nun. Their love was pure and devout and they ended their days wedded only to the church. The songs which the monk sang to the lady of his heart are supposed to have been found in a casket, buried neath a tree, giving the only record of this story of love.

It is Mr. Hadley's idea to present these pictures in synchronization with the songs. At the trade showing Raymond Ellis sang them and the effect was quite beautiful. If the exhibitor is in a position to secure a good soloist to accompany the picture then " The Vow " is at least well worth experimenting with. The picture is beautifully produced and presents the love story in a manner that will offend none.—Peter Milne.

" Women's Weapons," with Ethel Clayton

(Paramount. Directed by Robert Vignola)

ALTHOUGH there are no new situations treated in this picture, intelligent handling by the director and the different human touches that have been incorporated into it, make it a wholesome and pleasing entertainment. The clever introduction of two little children, a boy and a girl not over four years old, in particular, furnish half of the entertainment. The story depends a great deal on them.

The plot deals with the heroine's efforts to win back the affections of her husband. She has been alienated of them by another woman. The method used is good cooking and the re-kindling of love for his children. She is successful in the end.

The action of plot is constant. The physical movement of the characters, steady. The photography, good. The story also contains in abundance the element of heart appeal.

Elgin Blames Loan for Big Slump

ON the psychological theory that people can only give attention to one thing at a time, Elgin theatre managers are blaming the Liberty Loan for the considerable slump in attendance the week of October 6.

While it is acknowledged that the Spanish influenza epidemic had its effect on patronage, it is believed that the decrease was due in the main to the Fourth Loan drive rather than to the "flu."

Elgin, to the end of that week, was far more fortunate than other towns and cities in her vicinity and the number of cases of the dread disease were so small as to be less than half of one per cent figured on population basis. However, reports of the ravages of the epidemic at Camp Grant and the bringing home of men and women in service for burial following their death from the influenza, bore upon the minds and brought a general depression of spirits.

Local newspapers made much of the epidemic situation and instilled fear of getting into crowds into the public.

This fear was offset in some degree, however, by the precautions taken by managers who heated their houses before performance time, then opened doors and circulated fresh air by fans, keeping doors open during the shows. Patrons were asked to wear heavier wraps that they might be comfortable in the lowered temperature. Managers report their belief that fear kept the victims of colds at home and made every public gathering safe on that account.

It is believed, however, that the difficulty attending subscription of the Fourth Loan hit the picture business more forcibly this time than at the time of any previous loan, as every other local business reported to have been hit.

This is concluded in part from the impetus lent patronage with the peace letter of Sunday, October 13. Patronage increased 50 per cent that afternoon and evening over the week's average and that of the previous Sunday, the manager of one playhouse reporting a $150 increase over his expected receipts from the day.

Local managers carry the idea that while the "flu" idea possessed people in the earlier week, the bond issue possessed them more completely all the week, and that when the peace talk came along, their "one idea" took its form and made them forget fears of the "flu" and financial worries.

Lyric Film Gets Rights for Indiana

THE LYRIC FILM AND SUPPLY COMPANY of Terre Haute, Ind., of which Maurice Less is president and general manager, has secured the Indiana state rights to "Wives of Men," and will exploit the feature extensively in that territory, it is announced.

Gloom Pervades Springfield in Grip Scare

THE so-called Spanish influenza epidemic had struck Springfield, Ill., by October 14, but to the middle of that week it had not yet closed the theatres. However, business had fallen away considerably, according to all reports. Influenza speakers had supplemented Liberty Loan talkers and community singing leaders, and everything was being done to stamp out the scourge and its attendant gloom.

The local Board of Health has ordered all theatres to follow out orders in regards to ventilation and crowding, and notices have appeared in the papers daily asking and cautioning people with colds and coughs to stay away from the playhouses. Sunday, October 13, a beautiful day, and one which under ordinary circumstances would have resulted in full houses at every place, was one of the poorest Sundays of the year. Most of the managers figure that it would be best to stay open as long as possible, even though they just break even, rather than submit to closing with the uncertainty of opening up again. The leaders, owners of the downtown houses, have a certain element to combat here, a few women who have taken it upon themselves to look after the morals and health of the city. These women are anxious to have the theatres closed, but do not want the schools, churches, stores or factories closed. The theatre owners state that if conditions demand the closing down of theatres, they will readily agree to do so, but think it is only right and proper that schools, churches, dance-halls and stores should be included in the order.

Monday night at 9 o'clock, October 14, Springfield theatres were notified that they would be compelled to close on the following day and remain closed indefinitely, owing to the prevalence of influenza. Springfield was one of the last cities in the state to be closed down, and as the order is state-wide, all theatre owners and managers do not feel so badly about the command. It is felt by the motion picture people that a shut-down for a week or so will stimulate business when the reopening takes place, and that eventually no money loss will be suffered by the closing. Just what disposition is to made in regard to employees' salaries has not been decided, each theatre taking care of its own affairs individually. But if the close-down should last more than a week or two, it is safe to assume that there will be vacancies in the ranks of theatre employees. Some of the theatres have been hard pressed for help in the past few months.

While the shut-down is on, all theatres here will do more or less repair and decorating work, and get the houses in shape for the grand opening. Some of the managers and owners would like to take a run somewhere for a few days, but there is no place to go, as St. Louis and nearby Missouri cities are closed as well as the houses in Illinois.

Michigan Closing Emanates from Lansing

"BECAUSE of the rapid spread of the Spanish influenza epidemic throughout Michigan, Gov. Albert E. Sleeper issued a proclamation Saturday morning, October 19, closing all public places and meetings in the state, effective at once. The places closed include motion picture shows, theatres, churches, poolrooms, billiard rooms, lodge rooms and dance halls.

This action followed a conference of half a hundred mayors, health officers and other officials of cities in the Lower Peninsula, held in Lansing Friday night. The only opposition offered came from Detroit, represented by Dr. Andrew P. Biddle, member of the state board of health, and who spoke as president of the board of education of Detroit. Detroit claimed that a city of its size could not be treated the same as the country. Dr. Biddle said:

"The board of health is unanimous that closing is unwise, with the exception of one member. What are non-essentials. The move is, you say. But the picture show men proved to us this afternoon that the government considers them the greatest educational force in the country. If you close the movie you have got to close everything. If you close the movie you must close the theatre. If you close the theatre you must close the churches. If you close the churches you must close the schools. You have got to stop the street cars, and you can't do that in a great city like Detroit. They are the greatest source of infection. If you close anything you must close at once and close everything tight. What are essentials? Is the five and ten-cent store essential? Yet every day thousands or more people are in these stores than in the moving picture houses."

However, Dr. Biddle found himself alone in his sentiments and the plan to close was adopted. According to the developments Saturday Detroit may fight the order and in that case the state authorities may quarantine the City of Detroit, making it illegal for any person to enter or leave the city.

The motion picture houses, theatres and churches of Lansing, Mich., were closed Thursday, October 17, by order of Dr. H. L. Wright, the city health director. As a result the doors to all theatres were locked, the billboards and announcements were removed and "closed" signs made their appearance. The biggest film affected by the order in Lansing was Theda Bara in "Salome," which was booked for a four-day engagement at the large Gladmer theatre during the last part of the week. A number of other good attractions had been announced for the different theatres, but no open opposition was offered to the order.

As a result of these orders the people of Michigan and of Lansing will be given an opportunity to become acquainted with their families and their homes, but will again be ready to go forth to view the motion pictures when the ban has been lifted.

Eugene S. Brewer, president and general manager of the Owosso Theatre Company, operating the Strand theatre in Owosso, Mich., has begun suit in the circuit court to dissolve the corporation. The defendants are Frank S. Rayen, Leon F. Miner, and Mrs. Eugene S. Brewer. The suit is friendly in nature, made necessary to comply with legal requirements to transfer the ownership and management of the theatre from a corporation to an individual. Mr. Brewer owns all of the stock with the exception of one share each held by each of the defendants. When the theatre company was formed by Dr. G. N. Finch and Mr. Brewer they owned practically all of the stock. Dr. Finch retired some months ago. Now Mr. Brewer has decided to call in all stock and become sole proprietor. The suit will not be contested.

Influenza Follows Paralysis in Dubuque

DUBUQUE exhibitors are certainly having their share of bad luck. Just as they were recovering from the effects of the infantile paralysis epidemic, and were arranging for the showing of some of the best motion pictures ever shown here, the Dubuque Board of Health ordered all churches, theatres, schools and public meeting places to be closed on Saturday, October 12, until the Spanish influenza epidemic had abated.

The quarantine came at a very unfortunate time, for the Princess, Grand and Dreamland had just commenced their fall campaigns, and the Family and Majestic were planning theirs.

J. E. Boyle of the Dreamland, had recently contracted for all of the Fox Victory releases, and had scheduled plays starring George Walsh, Tom Mix and Gladys Brockwell. He had also a good assortment of Triangle and American productions.

The Princess had lined up some excellent Artcraft, Paramount, Goldwyn and Select pictures, including "Eve's Daughter," "The White Man's Law," and "Rich Man, Poor Man," while the Grand had scheduled first run Metro and Paralta pictures, along with a number of special productions.

On Wednesday, October 16, the number of influenza cases had decreased to an average of about forty cases daily, so there is hope that the quarantine will be lifted within the next few weeks.

They Say in Chicago That—

ALL the executives of the Chicago Universal Film Exchange and the entire selling staff decided to kill a part of their time, while on their forced vacation, by taking a three-days' fishing trip. Fox Lake was the place decided upon, and on Thursday morning all those who went assembled at the home of I. L. Leserman, where six machines awaited them, to take them to their destination. Among those who went on the trip were I. L. Leserman, general sales manager of the Universal Film Exchange, Inc., S. J. Goldman, Morris Hellman, Irving Mack, publicity manager, and the entire staff of salesmen. There were eighteen in the party, and for a bunch that weren't working they were the jolliest crew that ever held a fish pole.

THE ROTHACKER COMPANY and its employees have purchased over $10,000 worth of the Fourth Liberty Loan bonds.

I. L. LESERMAN, manager of the Universal, has suspended all operations, retaining only heads of departments and such of the clerical force as to insure the proper handling of their business when the theatres open.

M. C. HUGHES, formerly district manager for the Metro Film Service of Canada, has been appointed manager of the Metro program department, Chicago office.

MISS STELLA FLOETER, for a number of years biller for Metro, Chicago office, has just resigned to enter another field.

JOE RODERICK, manager of the Universal Exchange, Milwaukee, Wis., won the prize for the best showing among the exchanges of the Universal short subjects.

F. J. McCONNELL, formerly a Chicago newspaper man, has spent several days in conference with S. J. Goldman, manager of the Chicago Jewel office. Mr. McConnell is making a tour of all the Jewel Exchanges, mainly to boost and exploit "The Yellow Dog," the much advertised Jewel, which will be released soon.

AL TUCHMAN was in Chicago last week on his first lap of a tour of the Universal Exchanges, the purpose of which is to inaugurate efficiency measures to carry out the government desire for conservation of supplies.

THE METRO Chicago office force has been kept intact.

SALESMAN SPENCER of Metro, is on a flying trip through Indiana, as the houses in that state expect to open up Monday.

I. MAYNARD SCHWARTZ, salesman of the Universal Chicago office, was the director of vaudeville sketches before he started selling films, so when the Elks lodge wanted him to produce a pageant for them, he did it just to remind himself of old times. The frolic will be held at the Morrison hotel, Saturday, November 16, and proceeds will all be donated to the Red Cross.

MRS. V. T. LYNCH, wife of the owner of the Tiffen theatre, was buried October 16, a victim of the "flu."

ARTHUR C. THOMPSON, for the last three years a salesman in the employ of the World Film Corporation, was buried October 14, due to a combination of the flu and pneumonia. Thompson started in the business as an operator and had charge of the theatres for Mr. Weiss, not only in Menominee, Mich., but at Marinette, Wis., Superior, Wis., Duluth, Minn., and Dubuque, Iowa. In 1914 Thompson married Eleanor Grills, who was known theatrically as Ethel North, who at that time was singing at the theatre that Thompson worked. In 1915 Thompson started to work for the World Film Corporation and only recently was appointed as their sole representative in their Wisconsin territory. Burial was at Calvary cemetery.

ALTHOUGH Illinois has been closed in its entirety by the State Board of Health, the citizens of Newton, Ill., and Chicago Heights, Ill., have been inoculated and the theatres in these two cities are running by permission of the Board of Health. In the State of Indiana the town of Garrett has taken the same precautionary methods. Evansville, Ind., the third largest city in the state, expects to open up within the next few days under the same method.

HAROLD M. O'BRIEN, owner of the Illinois theatre, La Grange, Ill., has received orders to sail for France. He has been stationed at the Raritan Arsenal, New Jersey. Before leaving for France he will make a short visit to Chicago to say good-bye.

MILT KUSSELL, formerly of the Celebrated Players Film Co. and the Goldwyn Chicago offices, was seen among the exchanges this week all dolled up in a sailor's uniform. Milt has been in the service for nearly a year and is stationed at the Great Lakes.

JOE OREDNICK, formerly assistant auditor of the Central Film Company also hailed his old-time friends in a sailor outfit. He has been in the service about six months at the Great Lakes.

EUGENIE GETNER has been appointed booking manager of the new theatre that will open in December in Collinsville, Ill.

THE city officials at Blue Island, Ill., despite the orders of the State Board of Health have ordered all churches, schools and places of public gatherings fumigated thoroughly and will allow admission to those places of people who can prove that they have taken the vaccine treatment to combat influenza.

T. S. HENDERSON of the Henderson Educational Films, is a victim of the flu. His condition is reported bettering itself slowly.

RALPH T. KETTERING, publicity manager of Jones, Linik & Schaefer is now confined to his bed as a result of the "flu."

M. H. LIVINGSTON, president of the Nu-Movie-Lite Company, Peoria, Ill., has been in Chicago for a few days to close up this section for the handling of their lite. Mr. Livingston has just closed a contract with the Theatre Supply Mfg. Corporation of Milwaukee to handle the State of Wisconsin, and received an initial order from them for over $14,000 worth of their lites. The recent installations made by the Nu-Movie-Lite Company are as follows: Two, Apollo theatre, Princeton, Ill., 101 ft. throw, Mrs. W. O. Stephens, manager; one, Glen theatre, Gridley, Ill., Henry Wiser, manager, 86 ft. throw; two, Royal theatre, Minok, Ill., H. E. Hinricks, manager, 101 ft. throw; one, Cozy theatre, Eureka, Ill., Burt Norton, manager, 78 ft. throw; two, Paris theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., Frank Steiner, manager, 94 ft. throw; two, Dreamland, Mt. Palaski, Ill., Mrs. Zah, manager, 100 ft. throw; two, Eagle theatre, Princeton, Ill., W. O. Stephens, manager, 108 ft. throw.

News and Gossip of Springfield Theatres

"HEARTS OF THE WORLD," which was scheduled to repeat at the Chatterton in Springfield the latter part of October, has canceled its engagement owing to the prevalence of Spanish influenza in these parts. W. D. Cave says the big picture will be brought here just as soon as the disease has been placed under control, and when the public is over its timidity about attending theatres.

THE PRINCESS THEATRE in Springfield, Ill., has canceled World and Pathe Pictures, and is now practically on the open market. The management states that several exceptional photoplays have been booked for early showing, and states that World and Pathe plays were not sufficiently strong enough drawing pictures to warrant further continuance.

THE LYRIC has canceled Metro service, and has booked Vitagraph features on the days left open, which are Tuesday and Wednesday of every week. Metros have not done well at the Lyric for some time.

BOOKINGS at the Savoy for the week of October 13-19 include the following pictures: Sunday, first chapter of "A Fight for Millions," a Helen Gibson picture, and an L-Ko comedy; Monday, "Sunlight's Last Raid," with Mary Anderson and Alfred Whitman; Tuesday, a special feature; Wednesday, Chapter 8 of "The Brass Bullet" and other films; Thursday, "The City of Tears," with Carmel Meyers; Friday, another special picture, and Saturday, "The Burglar's Bride" and other offerings. Manager Kerasotes announces that business on the first episode of "A Fight for Millions" was most gratifying, and that he is strong for serials on Sunday.

THE ROYAL was the first theatre to feel the effects of the influenza scare. The Board of Health notified Manager Kerasotes that the theatre would have to be closed during the supper hour, from 6 to 7, and that no performance could be given at that time. As the Royal had taken every precaution in the way of ventilation and fumigation, the order seemed hardly necessary. But the management acceded to the order readily, wishing to co-operate in every way to stamp out the epidemic. In the meantime the following program has been scheduled for the week of October 13-19 at the Royal: Sunday and Monday, William Farnum in "When a Man Sees Red" and "A Tight Squeeze," the last a Fox Sunshine comedy; Tuesday, "The Primitive Woman"; Wednesday, "The Oldest Law"; Thursday, "Tangled Lives"; Friday, "The Firebrand"; Saturday, "A Game With Fate."

THE CAPITOL has "The Geezer of Berlin," booked for two days the week of October 13-19. Mae Marsh in "Fields of Honor," and Roy Stewart in "The Fly God" will be seen during the same period.

AFTER falling down badly on "The Goat," Fred Stone's first picture, the Gaiety did well with Tom Moore and Madge Kennedy in "The Kingdom of Youth," finishing the week in good shape. "The Goat" was scheduled for four days, but Manager Thornton took it off after the third day's showing. Stone would not draw Springfield folks.

THE theatres of this city have been notified by the three newspapers that as a war measure the amount of free publicity published by them would be reduced one half. Local motion picture houses have always been most liberal in their advertising, and the Princess, Gaiety, Vaudette and Lyric theatres have run daily ads for years in all three papers. The management of the different houses figure that they should not have been treated in this manner by the papers, inasmuch as they spend thousands of dollars annually, and immediately cut down on the amount of space they are using. The big houses are now spending about half the money in newspaper publicity they formerly did.

THE PRINCESS announces "The Inn of the Blue Moon," with Doris Kenyon, on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, October 13, 14 and 15; "Playthings," with Fritzi Brunette, and Lew Cody on the 16th and 17th, and "Behind the Lines in Italy" on the 18th and 19th. For the 20th, 21st and 22nd, Catherine Calvert will be seen in "Marriage," a Keeney production.

THE GAIETY and Vaudette theatres have been notified by Paramount-Artcraft that they will receive no more new pictures after the release of "The Border Wireless," with W. S. Hart, and "A Woman of Impulse," with Lina Cavalieri, photoplays booked for the four days starting Sunday, October 13. The Gaiety has already secured Dorothy Phillips in "The Talk of the Town" for the four days starting October 20, and the Vaudette has Mae Murray in "Modern Love" for October 17, 18 and 19. The cancellation order is understood to apply for four weeks, so the management of the Gaiety and Vaudette will have to fill in with outside bookings.

THE PALACE cleaned up with "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," which played its fourth engagement in this city last week.

THE ROYAL has secured "Pershing's Crusaders" for a run, starting Sunday, October 20.

ED MAISEL, manager of the Capitol, pulled a novel stunt on the showing of "To Hell with the Kaiser" last week. He had the Metro picture on October 11 and 12. Ed hired a rough box from a local undertaker, placed it out in front of the theatre with proper embellishments in the way of vegetable flowers, and had signs asking the reader to take a kick at the mad dog of Europe. The trick got the business on two of the worst days this year.

THE neighborhood houses, which include the Empress, Pekin, Palace and North End Circle theatres, also report a falling off in business due to the influenza scare. Heretofore business had been most excellent at all the outlying theatres, and it is expected that normal attendance will result as soon as the epidemic has been checked.

THE CAPITOL has booked several fine attractions for the next few days. Nazimova is coming in "Toys of Fate," Constance Talmadge in "Scandal," Frank Keenan in "Ruler of the Road" and the Goldwyn special, "For the Freedom of the World," is a near future feature.

W. S. HART opened a four days' run at the Gaiety Sunday, October 13, with "The Border Wireless," and it was like old times to see the crowds flocking in to see the big favorite. "Scars and Bars," a two-reel L-Ko comedy, was on the same bill with "Bill." Will Rogers, the Ziegfeld Follies comedian, comes to the Gaiety on Thursday, October 17, for three days in "Laughing Bill Hyde." Rogers has been seen in the city on the stage once or twice, but to most fans he is a blank stranger. Whether he will draw or not remains to be seen.

THE VAUDETTE has canceled Mutual Screen Telegram, owing to the booking of the Burton Holmes travelogues, Bray cartoons and James Montgomery Flagg comedies.

MOST of the cities in this territory are closed up tight as far as theatres by the influenza scare. Springfield is the only town in a radius of 50 miles that is wide open.

THE closing down of the film producing plants, and the stopping of releasing pictures for four weeks, will not have much effect locally. There are many pictures on the market that simply could not be booked because there was no room for them, and they will now get a showing where under other conditions they would be on the shelf in some exchange.

THE MAJESTIC reports that "A Fight for Millions" is holding the crowds better than any serial it has ever booked. In addition to the Vitagraph picture, Gaumont Weekly and Official Allied War Review are also used at the Majestic.

FOR the first time "Motion Picture News" correspondent found Ben Rovin in a temper. Ben was all excited because he had "A Fight for Millions" booked, and the film company went and let a competitor have it ahead of him. So Ben canceled all his bookings from the office in question, and said "he was all done with serials, that he would not play one or book one if they gave it to him free." But perhaps Ben will change his mind later. In the meantime the Amuse-U will show the Fox Standard pictures, and the Big Six reissues issued by the Fox Company. Also "The Law of the Golden West," Tom Mix in "Cupid's Round-Up"" and Clara Williams in "Carmen of the Klondike." Ben says that considering everything—which includes influenza, Liberty Loans, inclement weather, etc.—business is all that he can ask.

THE VAUDETTE had a disastrous three days with Lila Lee in "Such a Little Pirate." The receipts for all three days were just about the usual amount taken in on one. Charles Ray had four good days ahead of Miss Lee with "The Law of the North," but the house finished the week a loser. Lina Cavalieri, always a poor star from a box-office standpoint, followed for four days in "A Woman of Impulse," and played to slim attendance.

THE LYRIC had a fair week October 6-12, with Gladys Brockwell in "Kultur" on Sunday and Monday, Viola Dana in "Flower of the Dusk" on Tuesday and Wednesday, and Clara Kimball Young in "The Savage Woman" on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. The Lee children followed on Sunday, October 13 and 14, in "Swat the Spy"; the bookings for the remainder of the week include Bert Lytell in "Boston Blackie's Little Pal" and Norma Talmadge in "Her Only Way."

THE ROYAL had three fine days with "The Unbeliever" on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, October 6, 7 and 8.

LOUIE KERASOTES cleaned up with "Chase Me, Charlie," a five-reel British version of the Essanay-Chaplin comedies. The kids just "ate it up."

THE PRINCESS states that the week of October 6-12 was a fair one in spite of all obstacles. Mae Murray in "Her Body in Bond" was the feature for three days; Colleen Moore in "A Hoosier Romance" for two, and Bessie Barriscale in "The White Lie" for two. The Barriscale picture made a big hit with patrons.

Indiana and Indianapolis News

THE Colonial theatre, one of the largest downtown houses in Indianapolis, under the management of Bingham & Cohen, during the lull offered by the "flu" ban, is undergoing extensive remodeling. .Two new machines are being installed in a new booth. It is expected the house will present a fine appearance when it reopens.

THE Anti-Yellow Dog Club of Indianapolis, 3,500 strong, is paving the way for Jewel's new production, "The Yellow Dog." In one of the best conducted publicity campaigns of the season, Jewel is reaching out to more than thirty-five hundred homes in Indianapolis with its human interest story.

THE Huntington Motion Picture Company of Huntington, filed preliminary certificate of dissolution this last week with the Secretary of State at Indianapolis.

THE American theatre at Terre Haute, under the management of S. P. Katzenbach, which reopened October 4, after being closed for a month, and which was caught, along with the other Terre Haute houses under the "flu" ban, is now considered one of the handsomest theatres in Southern Indiana. During the month it was closed the house was completely overhauled and its seating capacity increased to 1,000. It reopened with Universal's "Talk of the Town" and played to capacity houses for the full week prior to the "flu" closing order.

ENGLISH'S theatre in Indianapolis, which was under the management of Barton & Olson for the summer season, played to its biggest house of the year the first Sunday "Crashing Through to Berlin" was screened. More than 8,000 seats were sold on that day. The average seat sale was 25 cents. This feature closed the summer season at English's. Barton & Olson also control the Lyric, Isis and Alhambra, three of the best paying downtown houses in Indianapolis.

A. TUCKMAN of New York City, manager of the advertising department of the Universal Film Exchange, Inc., visited Indianapolis this last week, the guest of J. I. Schnitzer, Central States manager for Universal.

HAWKINS & RICE, well-known Indianapolis motion picture theatre men, have taken over the Peter Pan theatre which opened the first week in October with two Jewel productions, "Come Thru" and "A Soul for Sale."

F. J. MACK of Indianapolis, who formerly directed the interests of the Oriental theatre, has taken over the Alcazar theatre from Fritz Weiffenbach. Mr. Mack will overhaul and remodel the Alcazar, placing it on a par with other Indianapolis suburban houses.

J. W. TUCKER, manager of the Idle Hour theatre, one of the Indianapolis suburban houses, has taken advantage of the respite offered by the state-wide "flu" ban, to repaint and redecorate both the interior and exterior of his theatre.

Dubuque News and Views

THE Princess presented "The Blindness of Divorce" with Charles Clarey, for two days, Wednesday and Thursday, October 9 and 10. Manager Billos declared that on Wednesday he had one of the biggest houses of the month, while on Thursday more than an average crowd attended.

"DIAMONDS AND PEARLS," with Kitty Gordon, was the program shown at the Liberty theatre Wednesday, October 9. World pictures always draw well at the Liberty.

EDNA GOODRICH played at the Dreamland Wednesday and Thursday of that week in "Her Husband's Honor." Miss Goodrich was as beautiful as ever, and wore some really startling gowns.

THE Family presented its second Goldwyn production, "Baby Mine," with Madge Kennedy, Thursday and Friday, October 10 and 11. This feature proved to be as successful as the first, if not more so, for Madge Kennedy is one of the few human feminine comediennes on the screen, and her pictures take well wherever they are shown.

"A FOOL THERE WAS," with Theda Bara, played at the Majestic theatre for two days, Thursday and Friday, October 10 and 11. Though a 1914 picture, it was extremely interesting, for it showed Theda Bara at her best—in fact, "A Fool There Was," can truly be called Miss Bara's greatest picture.

FANNIE WARD is getting an enviable reputation for versatility. Her latest Pathe offering, "A Japanese Nightingale," shown at the Dreamland Friday, October 11, was one of the most charming Oriental stories ever pictured on the screen.

BESSIE BARRISCALE was featured in "Blindfolded" at the Grand for two days, October 9 and 10. As this was a super feature, Manager Lorenz raised the price of admission slightly, but even at this he had two days of very good business. Miss Barriscale is well liked in Dubuque, so managers have no trouble in putting her plays over.

THE Princess scheduled "Eve's Daughter," with Billie Burke, for Friday and Saturday, October 11 and 12. The people who saw the picture on Friday were indeed fortunate, for late Friday evening all Dubuque's theatres were ordered to close until all danger of the influenza epidemic had passed.

MAY ALLISON'S second starring vehicle, "A Successful Adventure," was presented at the Grand Friday, October 11.

THE Cozy theatre at Dyersville was closed by the order of the Dyersville Board of Health, along with all schools, churches and other public meeting places, until all danger of the spreading of influenza had passed. As the Cozy is the leading motion picture house in Dyersville, its closing caused a great deal of disappointment among its patrons, for the fall campaign had just commenced, and the management was showing extra good pictures.

THE Crystal theatre at Anamosa, Iowa, put on "Blue Jeans," with Viola Dana, for the Monday, October 14 program. The price of admission was raised to 15 and 20 cents, but this did not keep the crowds away—in fact, there was a splendid attendance.

"WITH NEATNESS AND DISPATCH," with Frances Bushman and Beverly Bayne, was presented at the Grand theatre at Lancaster, Wis., Wednesday, October 9. This clever comedy team is well liked here—especially in plays of this kind. On Friday, October 11, "On Trial," the Famous Essanay photoplay starring Sidney Ainsworth, Barbara Castleton and little Mary McAllister. The Saturday program was "The Raggedy Queen," with Violet Mercereau. On Tuesday, October 15, Geraldine Farrar was presented in "The Turn of the Wheel."

Will you send a package of home cheer to a lonely American boy in France?

HE doesn't want to come back home till his job is done—he doesn't mind the hardships and the danger—all he asks is that once in a while a "bit of cheer" be sent to him to ease his lonely vigils on the rim of "No Man's Land."

Tens of thousands of American Lads are today fighting our battles in France. Soon there will be millions. They will want letters from home—they will want "smokes" from home. Tobacco eases the shell strain. It comforts the wounded. It is a "first aid" to the surgeons and Red Cross nurses.

If you knew what comfort and pleasure and satisfaction the tobacco bought with your dollar or your five dollars (go as high as you like) gives to American boys in the trenches, you'd forget the money, or the little sacrifice, or anything else.

25c buys 45c worth of "smokes."

$1.00 buys a month's supply of tobacco

$5.00 buys enough to keep 5 men in tobacco for a month.

And remember: Every package of tobacco sent to our boys in France contains a return postcard, addressed to you, which he'll mail to you if he can possibly do so. That's a war souvenir worth having. Dig down—deep and quick!

"I wish you all possible success in your admirable effort to get our boys in France tobacco."

Elgin Items of Interest

WILLIAM RUSSELL in "Hobbs in a Hurry" led the bill at the Star the week of October 13. Other offerings were Elizabeth Risdon in "Mother," Corinne Griffith in "Love Watches," Geraldine Farrar in "Ties That Bind," Jewel Carmen in "Lawless Love," "The Fight for Millions," Gladys Brockwell in "The Bird of Prey," and Harry Morey in "Tangled Lives." Comedies were: "Ladies First," "A Tight Squeeze," Mutt and Jeff in "Meeting Theda Bara," and other showings were Charlie Chaplin in "The Bond," and William Farnum in a Liberty Bond appeal.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS, Bessie Barriscale, Fritzie Brunette, William S. Hart and Claire Anderson were stars and lesser satellites moving in the entertainment orbit at the Temple the week of Octob 13. The bill included: Douglas Fairbanks in "The Matrimaniac," Bessie Barriscale in "Maid of the Storm," Fritzie Brunette in "The Velvet Hand," Claire Anderson in "The Gray Parasol," William S. Hart in "Hell Hound of Alaska," and Winifred Allen in "Two to Six." The Monday afternoon and evening, "Kwantity, Kwality Kombination," especially for juvenile patrons, included Fatty Arbuckle in "Fatty's Joy Ride," the Judge Brown story, "Sisters of the Golden Circle," Eddie Polo in Episode 11 of "The Bull's Eye" and the Animated Weekly.

WHEN Miss Helen McBride, prominent Elgin girl was married at San Antonio, Texas, in late spring to Lieut. Fred Morgan, now in France, as her bridal party left the church they were annoyed by the omnipresent cameraman in the military city. They forgot the incident, however, until early October. One recent evening the bride went with her parents to a local theatre and when the news weekly was flashed onto the screen she had the opportunity to see herself as others saw her on her wedding day, for the showing of her bridal party as they left the church was a part of the picture program.

MANAGER R. W. CROCKER of the Star, is advertising two special features for late October: Florence Reed, Irving Cummings and Milton Sills in "The Struggle Everlasting," and Captain Robert Warwick in his last picture before enlistment, "An Accidental Honeymoon." Star fans were enthusiastic about Miss Reed in "Today" and about Mr. Warwick in "The Mad Lover," and success of the succeeding pictures is assured.

ARTHUR SEYMOUR, operator at the Crystal theatre, Dundee, has entered the S. A. T. C. at the University of Illinois. "Arch" was a popular man about the house and is being considerably missed.

'Frisco Universal Tries Woman Booker

THE UNIVERSAL FILM EXCHANGE, INC., of San Francisco, has installed Miss Davis, formerly of Los Angeles and experienced in several of the local houses, as booking clerk. It is believed that this is the first time that a young woman has been appointed to this important position in any of the local film exchanges, and the step was made necessary on account of the scarcity of skilled help. Miss Davis's experience in the film business has been obtained almost exclusively in the various offices in which she has worked and the Universal is confident that its experiment will turn out successfully.

What Exchanges and Theatres Are Doing

DAVID BERSHON, who went to San Francisco recently in company with Joe Brandt, general treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, was back in the manager's chair at the Universal Exchange this week with optimism beaming all over his features. He said that if Spanish influenza had not hit the town at this particular time, Universal was well on the road to a record in the matter of business, both as to collections and the total number of new and old contracts.

THE Universal Exchange has made arrangements to readjust its program and rearrange bookings to meet the new conditions following instructions from the New York offices that all releases should be advanced four weeks.

LEWIS HYMAN, manager of the All Star Features Exchange, said that he had made arrangements to close the exchange during the period that the theatres are closed in Los Angeles and other Southern California exchanges.

H. D. NAUGLE, Western division manager of Vitagraph, announced this week that he will return soon to Chicago after a visit of several weeks on the Pacific Coast. He said that aside from the "void" created by the appearance of Spanish influenza in this territory, the Pacific Coast exchanges of Vitagraph are doing top-notch business. He believes the influenza epidemic will be of short duration, and that when the theatres are reopened the public will rush to see their favorite pictures with greater enthusiasm than ever before.

"THE FAR FLUNG BATTLE LINE," consisting of a series of twelve pictures, will be released soon in Los Angeles, according to announcement this week by Branch Manager Tate of Pathe. He added that the "War Review," now being released by Pathe, has been booked in 75 per cent of the theatres in America, and that the company is working for a 100 per cent business. He said that Pathe is co-operating in every way possible with the Bureau of Public Information to get the "War Review" over to the largest possible number of American people.

THEATRES that were open early this week and which were still exhibiting pictures were those in Pomona, Riverside, Redlands, San Bernardino, Corona, Arrowhead Springs, Ontario, Oxnard, San Luis Obispo and Santa Barbara. A majority of the exchanges as late as Monday shipped pictures to theatres in this territory.

M. J. COHEN, branch manager of the San Francisco exchange, was in Los Angeles last week. He came South in Connection with the forthcoming release in this territory of "Behind the Lines in Italy."

A SPECIAL meeting of members of the Italian colony of Los Angeles and Pasadena was held last week, when Guy S. Gunderson, branch manager of the Kleine System, addressed the former citizens of Italy on the subject of the war in general and "Behind the Lines in Italy" in particular. Leading members of the various Italian War Relief societies promised to assist in every way possible in advertising the picture when it is released in Los Angeles. They are planning to make a special exhibit of literature on the picture in the Italian booth at the Southern California Liberty Fair, which will be held in Los Angeles beginning October 27.

BERT ROSENBERG, branch manager of Metro's Salt Lake office, prepared a circular last week in which he asked the patrons of all theatres in Salt Lake to co-operate with the theatres and the Government in stamping out Spanish influenza. He said the sooner the malady was defeated and routed the sooner would the theatres be reopened. He included in his circular a number of popular remedies that he said had been recommended as a "sure cure" for the disease.

THE WEST COAST

Ince Film Added to Coast Programs

IN response to requests from relatives and sweethearts of soldiers for an opportunity to see the war film, in the making of which they took part at Golden Gate Park on September 29, Thomas H. Ince has arranged to have this picture shown at the California and Imperial theatres in the week beginning October 20. Arrangements for the display in these theatres were made by Mr. Ince with Sol I. Lesser, who is chairman of the film committee of the State Council of Defense. "The Relatives and Sweethearts" film will be run in the theatres in addition to the regular program.

Seattle Items of Interest

THE Seattle correspondent of "The Motion Picture News" owes an apology to Ralf Allan, manager of the General Film Company, for the Northwest. It was said last week that some one else was handling "Her Moment," the "Guilty Wife" and the "Hodkinson" service, when the General handles them.

C. H. CODE, formerly connected with the Goldwyn office, has resigned to act as traveling representative of the General Film Company, Seattle.

P. G. LYNCH is now connected with the General Film Company, Seattle, as special representative for the Hodkinson service.

JAMES CHENAUR of The Dream, Pt. Angeles, Wash., was in Seattle recently.

B. RUBIN, popular assistant to W. A. Mead of the Universal Film Company, was away from the office a few days thinking he was going to have the Spanish flu. He had a bad cold instead.

SPEAKING of the "flu" the following shows how the boys feel on Seattle's film row:

THE SPANISH FLU

By Grace Marbury Sanderson

Oh, there's a sadness and gloom, down on Film Row,
And believe me, business is mighty slow.
The boys stand around—nothing to do,
And all on account of the Spanish Flu.

"The Hearts of the World" have now ceased to beat.
And "The Prussian Cur" beat a hasty retreat,
"Raffles" is sore; he can't rob the miser,
And was heard to say, "To Hell with the Kaiser."

Constance was told "A Pair of Silk Stockings" to wear
To avoid the Flu—now she's "Up in the Air."
Norma. down "A Safety Curtain" did haul,
As she calmly said "Good Night, Paul."

"Tarzan of the Apes" asked the Reason Why";
He's an "Unbeliever" and thought it a lie.
"Up the Road with Sallies" went Billy West,
Saying "The Public Be Damned," we'll now get a rest.

"The Million Dollar Dollies," poor "Toys of Fate,"
Tried their best "The Belgian" to date.
But alas! they soon felt "The Claws of the Hun"
And left this "Nine O'Clock Town" on a run.

"Cleopatra" said this is "A Dog's Life,"
I want "The Great Love" or give me "The Knife";
"For Husbands Only" want "Old Wives for New."
That's "Triple Trouble," said Cleo, "I'm Through."

"Laughing Bill Hyde" said to "The Queen of the Sea,"
Now quit your "Bulling the Bolsheviki,"
Remember, dear, that we're "Pals First,"
And "My Four Years in Germany" gave me a thirst.

Now . . . this is the end of my story so sad,
If I don't finish soon, I'll sure be "In Bad,"
This Flu on the row, has made a great dent,
And to get things going we're all "Hell Bent."

Portland and the Vicinity

ON a flying trip to every Universal Exchange in the United States and Canada, Joe Brandt, assistant treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and chief of the entire film organization, visited in Portland Friday.

WHILE Manager Baum was making a clean up for his corps in the Liberty Loan drive, the Universal Exchange was doing its bit and more than that in the drive, being first among the film exchanges of the city to go over the top. Practically all of the employees doubled their subscriptions, making the total for the exchange away more than was required for their quota. Booker Clark, who is a member of the Multnomah Guard, helped the cause along still more, by going out with the rest of the members of the Guard and painting "Hit the Trail" signs all over the down town streets. Universal employees in every loan have been early to subscribe and have always gone better than 100 per cent.

FRANK TALBERT, auditor in the Northwest district, was in Seattle Friday, assisting Mrs. Myrtle Poe, new bookkeeper for the Seattle Universal Exchange.

A. BETTINGER of the Empress theatre, The Dalles, was in Portland a few days ago looking over the feature prospects for the coming season. Mr. Bettinger has been playing Jewels consistently and has enjoyed unusual success.

MANAGER HENKLE of the Isis, Independence, Oregon, came to this city the other day in order to book "Crashing Through to Berlin." He is arranging a publicity campaign which will outrank any which has been staged in his part of the country since the showing of "The Kaiser."

S. DANZ, manager of the Star, in Astoria, drove to Portland in his new Paige recently and visited Manager Baum of the Universal Exchange. He reports that business is humming in Astoria, and he is lining up his bookings for the winter, with the expectations of seeing one of the best winters yet.

JOHN HARMICK of the Rex theatre of Seattle, invaded Portland recently with the big special feature, "The Fall of Barbary Coast," which played at the Star theatre. He displayed a lot of new features in advertising, and did a record business at the theatre during the entire run of the picture, which showed here for two weeks. Hamrick states that he fell in love with Portland next to his own city. He has been making clean ups in the Rex on special attractions for some time.

WALTER W. KOFELDT began tuning up the publicity for "Crashing Through to Berlin" early in the game, and had back of him one of the most thorough advertising campaigns ever put over in this city. Then the Spanish influenza ban put the kibosh on showing the picture, but it has been announced that it will be shown as soon as the ban is lifted.

MANAGER FERGUSON of the Baker, Newburg, Oregon, was a visitor in this city during the week.

San Francisco News Condensed

C. F. UNGER, manager of the Opera House at Selma, Cal., was in San Francisco this week. He announces that while Selma closed its theatres on account of the influenza scare the order had been rescinded and that he was going to reopen immediately.

THE STRAND THEATRE in running "The Romance of Tarzan" this week is putting on an unusual show that is exerting favorable comment. In order to create atmosphere there is an opening tableau of a woman with a lion which caused the audience to gasp for breath.

DAVE BERSHON, manager of the Universal Exchange at Los Angeles, was in San Francisco for several days this week, accompanied by Joe Brandt, the general manager of the company, for a sales conference with M. L. Markowitz, manager of the San Francisco office and Northern California sales force. After leaving San Francisco Mr. Brandt will visit the Portland and Seattle offices and will then return to the East by way of Calgary and Minneapolis.

F. M. SMITH, manager of the Lyric theatre at Marysville, Cal., was a visitor on Film Row this week. Mr. Smith reported that the Spanish influenza scare had not closed the Marysville theatres and that he believed that no such drastic action would be taken in his home city.

"DYNAMITE" SCHMIDT, manager of the Marquise theatre at Palo Alto, is making his headquarters at the Metro Pictures Corporation while his theatre is temporary closed. Mr. Schmidt is emphatic in the statement that the ban will be lifted in Palo Alto before the end of the present week and he is making his arrangements for films on that basis.

A PREVIEW of "The One Woman," the first of the six big Select pictures being released, was had this week at the American Photo Player hall. An audience of producers and managers witnessed the preview and expressed themselves as much pleased. Many of them pronounced it as one of the best of the big pictures they had seen. The Select Company is now negotiating for first runs of the picture and anticipate an immense success with it.

J. S. WOODY, field manager for Select Picture Corporation, arrived in San Francisco this week and will remain several days. He got here in time for the preview of "The One Woman" and predicts a big run for the film throughout the country. Mr. Woody goes from here to Denver.

THE SELECT PICTURE CORPORATION just received Norma Talmadge's second Select Star picture, "The Forbidden City," which is to be shown at the California theatre the week beginning November 3. During the same week Constance Talmadge will say farewell to her followers at the Portola in "A Pair of Silk Stockings." This is the last of the first Second Star Series, and she will immediately make her bow in the first of the new series in "Sauce for the Goose." The corporation has also received the prints of "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots," by Augustus Thomas, which is the second release in this service. The print of "The Better Half," the first of the second Select Star Service in which Alice Brady appears, has also been received.

N. L. WATTEN of the Colonial theatre, Stockton, L. Freitas, manager of the Stockton, also of Stockton, and C. W. Goddard of the Goddard theatre, Sacramento, were visiting the film exchanges this week.

JOHN DALY of Chico runs four theatres in that section of California and has been exceedingly active for the Fourth Liberty Loan. He had charge of the parade in Chico on Discovery Day and made it the most striking event in the history of the city's spectacles. Then to cap the climax he arranged for the Duhem Motion Picture Mfg. Co. to take pictures of the parade. About 600 feet were run off, and Daly will run the picture in all four of his picture houses, as well as in the theatres of neighboring towns. The taking of these pictures and their display is one of the biggest things that was done for the Liberty Loan in that section of the State, and it is said that they have already attracted a number of subscriptions.

M. S. MOLLER is taking a set of war garden pictures for the State Council of Defense. The pictures will be circulated through the department of visual instruction of the Extension Division of the University of California, which plans to put them in every school in California. The films will be arranged in a series of five lessons, each of from 300 to 500 feet in length. They will show every step in making a war garden, from preparing the soil to planting, cultivating, harvesting and marketing. The lessons will be preceded by a prologue film of about 1,000 feet, which shows what has been done in other schools and is intended to excite the interest of the children. Many of the films will be partly devoted to pictures of microscopic insect life, showing the destruction wrought by the insects and how to eradicate them.

THE WORLD FILM CORPORATION has accomplished a booking in Reno which many of the exchanges have declared was not practicable. "America's Answer" has been booked to run simultaneously at the Grand, the Rialto and the Majestic theatres at Reno. The three theatres will join in advertising the play, and it is believed that by this means everybody in the city will see the play. It is said that this is what the Government has desired, but most film men said it could not be done. The price is made so that the theatres will not have to raise their price for the show. No date for this run has as yet been assigned, as Reno theatres are at present closed on account of the influenza scare. Just as soon as that passes, however, the spectacle of every first class theatre in a town running the same show will be witnessed.

C. C. KAUFMAN of Colusa has sold out the Gem theatre in that town to L. Holt, who has rechristened it the Peoples theatre. Mr. Kaufman is building a new theatre in Colusa, which will be called the Gem, and it is expected to be ready for its opening early in November.

IT IS REPORTED that Louis Lurie, one of the owners of the Rialto theatre in this city has sold his interest and will retire from the motion picture business. It is also said that District Manager Mann of the Fox Film Exchange has bought a third interest in the theatre and that he will thus become a resident of San Francisco. It is understood that Mr. Mann will not sever his connection with the Fox.

H. H. KORPER, one of the veteran salesmen of this Coast, who represents the Fox Exchange in the field, is just back from a successful trip through the San Joaquin Valley.

ALL OF THE thirty-seven war films were shown on a screen before the San Francisco "Chronicle" on the night of Discovery Day. The weather was perfect and the numbers in the shifting crowds cannot be estimated. The pictures took three hours to run. Arrangements were made for the display through the courtesy of Herman Wobber, district manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

THE United States Marine Advertising Publicity Bureau is co-operating with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation all over the nation towards exploiting the latest James Montgomery Flagg Paramount comedy, "Tell That to the Marines." The now famous posters of the big red-headed Yank taking off his coat and throwing his hat on the ground is being distributed by the Marine Advertising Publicity Bureau gratis to all Paramount Exchanges, who in turn are allowing their exhibitors full use of these posters. They will be posted on every marine bulletin board in the country. The first theatre in San Francisco to show this film will be the Imperial, about November 1.

What the Studios Were Doing

(Note.—All reference to "This Week" in the following items concerns the week of October 7 to 14. "Next week" is October 14 to 21.)

THOMAS H. INCE has completed his patriotic offering, "The Message of Love to the Boys Over There," and the films will be rushed to the front as soon as possible, it is announced. The subject will contain the faces of thousands of friends and relatives at home, and is designed to put heart into the fighters over there when they view the picture. A number of scenes were filmed at San Diego and San Francisco. The production will reach the fight line through the United States Department of Films.

DOROTHY DALTON was on location this week in her new film play, "Hard Boiled." The story was written by John Lynch and is being directed by Victor Schertzinger.

ENID BENNETT has begun work on a new picture written by Lois and Arthur Zellner. Miss Benett gets into a number of predicaments throughout the play because of the unfounded suspicion that there is another woman in the case.

"THREE HOURS LATE" is the title of the latest Christie comedy starring Bobby Vernon and Clare Seymour. The play is directed by Al. H. Christie. "Three Hours Late" is the story is a clerk who was sent on a hurry trip by his boss to deliver a $5,000 check to Mr. Brown. Bobby meets a girl while on the train. At the junction they miss another train, wait three hours, arrive at the home of Brown—and then the plot deepens when another plot in the making makes it appear that the girl is Brown's wife.

PEGGY PEARCE, one of the well known players in the local film colony, who appeared in scores of Keystone comedies, has been added to the comedy force at the Christie studios. She will play opposite Earle Rodney. The latter's first picture for Christie was with Ethel Lynn. His second picture was with Clare Seymour.

BUSINESS Manager Charles H. Christie and Director Al. H. Christie, of the Christie comedies, have leased a beautiful home on Sunset boulevard. It is located near the Christie studios.

WILLIAM DUNCAN, playing the lead in the Vitagraph serial, "A Man of Might," this week filmed a scene where a seven-passenger touring car was sent at full speed over a 150-foot embankment. The car will be salvaged.

JOE ROCK, of Montgomery and Rock, Vitagraph comedians, was on a vacation this week, which he spent in hunting for a bungalow. His mother is expected to arrive in Hollywood from New York next week.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS last week left for New York to participate in the Liberty Loan campaign in the East. He was accompanied by Bennie Zeidman, his personal publicity representative. They halted a day in Chicago, according to word received at the Lasky studios. After the pause, Fairbanks continued his way to New York, but Zeidman went to a hospital with Spanish influenza. Later advice is that Zeidman is improving.

BRYANT WASHBURN returned to the Lasky studios this week from New York. He began immediately the work of finishing a production begun in the East, and as soon as this work is completed he will take things leisurely for four weeks.

MONTE KATTERJOHN, well known scenario writer for Lasky and other companies, has organized his own producing company and will begin production soon at the Brunton studios, it was announced this week by Robert Brunton. It is understood that Katterjohn will write his own plays and will also assist in the direction of them.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN announced this week that after nearly two weeks' work, or rest, since he completed "Shoulder Arms," he will begin work on a new Chaplin comedy. He said he knew what the beginning would be, but he has no idea how the production will end. Work on this vehicle will begin next week.

DOROTHY GISH this week began work on a new picture under the direction of Elmer Clifton. The play has not been given a title, neither has its locale or plot been disclosed.

BY THE END of the week Clara Kimball Young will have completed "The Road Through the Dark," which is now being made by Director Ed. Mortimer. This photoplay will have Jack Holt as leading man opposite the star, and little Bobby Connely plays a most important part. The second company, working under the supervision of Harry Garson, that of which Blanche Sweet is star, is filming a special subject, "An Unpardonable Sin." Marshall Neilan is directing, and besides Matt Moore, the leading man, principals of the cast are Wallace Berry in the role of a German officer, and Mary Alden.

What Butte Is Doing

MANAGER GEORGE BOURKE of the Universal Exchange had a merry time of it cancelling bookings. Supplying 153 houses in Montana, from the Butte exchange, cancellations came in thick and fast so that only a scant half dozen were still taking the service.

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY show houses were hit in a similar manner and only a few were running this week in Montana. Bookings will simply be suspended until the quarantine is lifted and then resumption will take place at the point where the service was halted.

GEORGE CALLADAY, representing the Vitagraph, was in this section the past week. His headquarters are Salt Lake.

MEL WILSON is back from a trip along the High Line. Mel is now on the road for Famous Players-Lasky

J. G. RILEY, formerly booker for the Paramount at the Butte exchange, has been assisting Booker C. C. Chellew of the Universal branch in putting the local exchange on a new booking system.

D. W. LEDERMAN, special representative for the Universal, is in Butte from New York, on his tour of the country. He is visiting the leading exchanges installing his system of booking. The new system is designed to curtail labor and increase efficiency. Wherever explained it is meeting with the endorsement of branch managers. The plan is to adopt the same system at every Universal office so that men, trained in one office, may be transferred to another, and find themselves in familiar environment.

JOE BRANDT, general manager of the Universal Film Company, is expected in Butte in a few days, on a business trip.

H. W. BERRY of the Liberty, has gone to Southern Montana on a hunting trip.

Los Angeles Reorganizes Film Board of Trade

DEFINITE steps to reorganize the Film Exchange Board of Trade, of Los Angeles, were taken at this meeting last Friday, at which Harry Lustig, Pacific Coast representative of Metro, presided. Another meeting is to be held in the near future when officers for the organization will be chosen.

"The Los Angeles Exchangemen's Board of Trade will be operated on a similar plan to the Film Men's Board of Trade in Denver and Seattle," Mr. Lustig said.

"It will be a means of better cooperation and a better understanding generally between the film men, and we believe it will work to a more successful business for all of us."

Quimby Champions More Space for Picture News

"PROFESSIONAL baseball is now dead and buried," said Hugh Fullerton, the well known baseball writer, in the "Evening World" of September 13. Football is undergoing the worst season it has ever had, what with influenza and the restrictions imposed by the Government. Horse racing is no longer a popular sport in the true meaning of the word. It is patronized by its devotees, who form a class limited in number. Boxing has lost greatly since the start of the war. Golf has never been every man's sport, and tennis, with the young men of the country gone to war, no longer figures as a subject of popular interest. Thus the sporting page of the newspapers has fallen upon hard days. Yet the public, in spite of the masterful hold which the war has laid upon their minds, demands something lighter for mental relief. What shall take the place of the sporting page which so long has been popular, but which now is fast becoming a thing of the past? A motion picture page, says F. C. Quimby, sales manager of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., who calls attention to the fact that now is a psychological time for every branch manager, every salesman and every home office publicity man to preach motion pictures to the newspapers, which have either been covering them in a half-hearted or apologetic way or else have devoted no space to them at all. Mr. Quimby toured the country from coast to coast a couple of months ago ,and made it a point to see the newspaper men in every city he visited. He found them all, with only one or two exceptions, ready to co-operate if reasonable co-operation could be secured from exhibitors. "If exhibitors would only realize what wonderful results have been attained by liberal use of newspaper advertising in such cities as Seattle," said Mr. Quimby the other day, "they would make it profitable for local newspapers to devote the space they have been giving to sports to motion pictures, and the result would open their eyes. What's the use of having a fine picture in your house if the public doesn't know about it? One gets the regular or casual patron, but the real 'velvet' is not touched. The proper use of newspaper space will educate the public to coming around to your theatre. It will insure the interest of the newspapers used and make it profitable for them to make pictures a daily feature instead of a casual one. The whole business will be helped!"

On his return from his trip Mr. Quimby, in a letter to this paper, called attention to the opportunities offered at this time to secure for pictures the non-remunerative space formerly devoted to sports. Since the publication of his suggestions he has been in receipt of letters from several prominent papers asking for advice as to the best way for them to build up such departments in their papers. All have stated that they would be glad to take radical steps in that direction, but that local theatres used so little space that it would be a losing venture. "Get the exhibitors to see that their interests are our interests in this matter and we'll put it over," wrote one man, who thus expressed the idea of them all.

"A half column of one-inch theatre ads will not make the motion picture page of a newspaper a paying proposition," said Mr. Quimby in a recent letter to a New Orleans exhibitor. "Neither will a single daily ad one inch deep and one column in width make much of a dent in advertising a show to the public. Try some real ads, two or three columns wide and a half page in depth. Spread yourself and circus your pictures. You may depend upon it that your local papers that you patronize will duly reciprocate and get out a motion picture department that will immeasurably help the picture business in your community. Personality stories of the stars, interesting items about current and coming pictures, if printed in your papers will have an immediate effect upon your patronage. Co-operation between the newspapers and the theatres is essential if exhibitors wish to secure maximum results. For proof just look at what the Seattle Times, Portland Oregonian, Spokane Review, San Francisco Examiner, Dallas Times Herald, Washington Post, Cincinnati Inquirer and other papers have done for the photoplay business in their cities. Don't expect that the papers can do this unaided. They can't. Help them with your advertising."

It would seem, now that the publicity men of the business as well as many exhibitors will have time during the next three or four weeks to stop and take breath, that it is an opportune moment to press the matter with the newspapers. When the houses are opened up again proper and liberal use should be made of newspaper advertising. The public, having been told that it is dangerous to mingle in crowds, should be educated to the fact that conditions are normal again and that they may attend the theatre with as much safety as though they were at home. Exhibitors could well announce that their theatres are thoroughly disinfected after each performance. And furthermore, the public, after being deprived of amusement for some weeks, will be keen to attend pictures. The exhibitors who book good shows and advertise them well will reap a golden harvest, and, more important still, they will encourage the newspapers to devote so much space to picture news that it will prove of lasting benefit to their business.

May Allison Injects Abundance of Realism

MAY ALLISON learned to her sorrow that speed has its drawbacks, during the filming of a scene in "Thirty Days," her newest picture under production at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood. The dainty star ran full tilt into her leading man, Robert Ellis, and in the collision was, in the parlance of the hempen square, knocked cold.

Miss Allison's chin and Ellis's right shoulder came together. The mishap occurred after five rehearsals of the scene, in which the star was running away from the town jailer. She was supposed to race down the main street of the town, and while looking backwards at her pursuer, to collide with a young author, methodically piling his market purchases into his automobile.

It was a problem in perfect timing. Director Webster Cullison called "Camera!" after the fifth rehearsal. Miss Allison came tearing down the street, but as she glanced backwards misjudged the distance remaining between her and Ellis, and crashed into the latter. The force of the impact of his shoulder against her chin sent her reeling to the ground.

A dozen willing hands lifted Miss Allison to her feet. She was dazed and complained that everything was black before her eyes. It was several minutes before she recovered sufficiently to try the scene over again. With rare pluck she again raced down the street, and smashed into Ellis with such force that the leading man, caught off his balance, was upset and flopped down heavily on the seat of his trousers.

"That," remarked Cullison, "is more as it should be. The scene as photographed will stand."

Vitagraph West Cost Notes

ALL the starring members of the Vitagraph company at its Hollywood studio were on the volunteer call-list for speeches nightly at the various theatres of Los Angeles in the interest of the Fourth Liberty Loan. William Duncan, Antonio Moreno, Carol Holloway, Nell Shipman, Joe Rock, Larry Semon, Bessie Love, Grace Darmond, Edith Johnson, Joe Ryan and Blanche Payson are the Vitagraphers who were prominent among the sellers of Fourth Liberty Loan bonds.

STUDIO MANAGER W. S. SMITH returned from a week-end at his ranch at Colton, and it developed that he had spent the time there in filling gallon pails with olives off of his trees. "They're the biggest fellows I ever saw," was Mr. Smith's pleased comment. It may be that his olives will travel eastward to various friends in time for Christmas.

FOR the first time in his making of Vitagraph Big V Comedies, Larry Semon has chosen Balboa as a location for the comedy stunts of himself and company. So the Semon company is domiciled at Balboa, from which Mr. Semon expects to return with a complete two-reel Big V Comedy.

DIRECTOR DAVID SMITH has been busy with the direction of Bessie Love's new story, "The Enchanted Barn," which immediately went into production at this film plant. In her new story Bessie assumes the role of stenographer. It is one she has always desired to play, and she does hope that her typewriting will show to advantage in the picture, as she says that typewriting is something she really can do, even though she did learn it by herself. She has requested Director Smith to allow a close-up to be made of her fingering the typewriter. "It may not be done according to Hoyle," apologized Bessie, "but it's speedy." So Bessie is to have her typewriting fingers put into a close-up.

JOE ROCK and Earle Montgomery completed their Big V Comedy, "Farms and Fumbles," and immediately began work on another picture, under Gilbert Pratt's direction.

WILLIAM DUNCAN continues to make two appearances nightly at the Pantages theatre, where the Vitagraph serial, made by Mr. Duncan, entitled "A Fight for Millions," is being followed closely by Vitagraph serial fans.

In and Around Denver

MANAGER E. P. BRIGGS of the American Film Company, has returned from Salt Lake City and Ogden, where he closed yearly contracts for the twenty-four American releases with the American and Ogden theatres. Mr. Briggs is greatly elated over the arrival here last week of the latest American product stork series. It's an eight-pound boy.

HUGH A. JOPLIN, president of the Mountain-Plains Theatre Supply Company, successor to the Swanson & Nolan Supply Company, was found dead in one of the rest rooms of the Denver Athletic Club late Saturday night, October 12. It was then reported that death had resulted from cyanide of potassium, self-administered, but this report has since been denied by physicians who conducted a postmortem examination. The company headed by Joplin was one of the best known in the country.

EUGENE MILLER, a former exhibitor of Toledo, Ohio, was found dead in his room at the Brown Palace hotel Tuesday, October 15. Death was attributed to heart trouble. Mr. Miller financed the production of "Tarzan of the Apes." He had been a resident of Denver for two years.

SERGEANT LAWRENCE ROSS PEYTON, whose parents live in Denver, was killed in action in France on September 5. He was a motion picture actor prior to the war, and acquired prominence with Marguerite Clark in "The Goose Girl," Marie Sais in "The Sign of the Cross," and with Mary Pickford in "How Could You, Jean?"

THE FIRST NATIONAL EXHIBITORS' CIRCUIT CORPORATION has filed articles of incorporation in Colorado. The incorporators are H. T. Nolan, C. P. Mason and J. H. Ashby. Capitalization, $50,000.

Norma Talmadge Prepares for Next Production

AFTER a delay of one week caused by an epidemic of Spanish influenza in her company which attacked Director Sidney A. Franklin, Thomas Meighan and Gladden James, Miss Norma Talmadge is now getting well into the plans for making her next picture, "The Heart of Wetona." The star and her company were doing exteriors at Idylwild, a beautiful mountain spot overlooking the Pacific Ocean, not far from Los Angeles. In addition to the influenza attack, work on the picture was delayed by the sickness of an Indian chief, necessitating a retake of several scenes in which he had appeared. However, now that all these obstacles have been overcome, work is progressing rapidly, and Miss Talmadge hopes to be through and back in her New York studio by December at the latest. "The Heart of Wetona," which is a picture version of the Belasco success of the same name, will be a rather remarkable feature in the fact that only seven scenes in the entire picture are interiors, all the rest being exteriors. It was this fact that induced Miss Talmadge to take it on the Coast, as she wished to secure the finest scenic background possible.

"The Heart of Wetona" will be Miss Talmadge's first "Western" picture, with all the Indian and cowboy atmosphere so dear to the heart of the old picture fan. It will be the second of a line of characterizations which the star has set out to do. Her recent success, "The Forbidden City," revealed her as a Chinese girl, and in "The Heart of Wetona" she will create an Indian girl. Following this picture Miss Talmadge will do the series of pictures that Eugene Walter, the famous playwright, is now preparing for her.

Bank Helps Metro for "Faith" Picture

THE modern safe deposit vaults of the Home Savings Bank, at Broadway and Eighth street, Los Angeles, were used as a setting for a number of scenes in "Faith," Bert Lytell's newest picture, now under production at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood. Permission to use the vaults was obtained through the courtesy of L. H. Malin, one of the bank officials, and for two successive nights the spacious, tiled chamber below the street level resembled a busy corner on the stage of a motion picture studio.

Electrician Todhunter, of the Metro studios, installed a formidable battery of lights that turned night into day, so that Lytell's director, Charles Swickard, was able to get some startlingly realistic effects against a background that could not be duplicated in a built "set."

It was the first time these vaults, installed by the Home Savings Bank at a cost of $150,000, had ever been photographed by a cinema camera. Several of the young women clerks regularly employed by the bank took part in the scenes, imparting an atmosphere of businesslike efficiency. One scene required the closing of the forty-ton Bessemer steel door, the combination of which is controlled by four accurately synchronized time clocks, and Director Swickard had to keep his eyes open lest any member of the Metro company be locked in until the next morning, when the clocks would release the massive portal.

IN FRANCE AND IN FLANDERS

In France and in Flanders a battle line hundreds of miles long stretches from the Holland border to Switzerland. From one end to the other it is aflame. It would be impossible for one individual to see it all, yet by means of the Official War Review your audiences may get a broader idea of the great things that are happening than the soldier in the front line trenches.

The official cameramen of United States, Great Britain, France and Italy have made this possible. Your audiences see what scores of them, all along the line, are seeing with Government aid. Do you wonder that the Following the spirit of the instructions of the War Industries Board, and in line with my theories of necessary economies within the industry, I have made arrangements with GENERAL FILM COMPANY to turn over to it, so far as practical and economical, the physical handling of our films, routine accounting, etc.

After the theatres reopen my representatives will be found in each GENERAL FILM COMPANY exchange. This business will be continued in my name, existing contracts will be filled and there will be no change in our business relations with exhibitors.

Our next feature to be released will be "THE WALL INVISIBLE" with Shirley Mason, to be followed by "THE GIRL—ALASKA," the first feature ever staged in Alaska; short comedies starring Leon Errol; a number of new one reel comedies with Harry Watson as Musty Suffer; several O. dainty BILLIE RHODES

"She is certainly as clever as the best of them"

CANADIAN MOVING PICTURE DIGEST

I attended a pre-view of "The Girl of My Dreams," Billie Rhodes in the lead. I have never laughed more heartily at a screened comedy than I did when I witnessed this picture. * * * There are many great bits of comedy, not of the stereotyped order, but so natural and so amusing that they were a treat. There are also some big "punches." * * * Billie Rhodes is a "duck," not once did her work jar. She is certainly as clever as the best of them in this line of work. Her comedy was a "scream" and her pathetic scenes were delicately handled, showing a truly artistic temperament. Also she is very young and pretty; two indispensable assets.

"Delightful Vivid Original"

LOS ANGELES "TIMES"

A new and delicious film personality, delightful, vivid, original and combining the charm of the ingenue with a deeper note of histronism—that's Billie Rhodes, in "The Girl of My Dreams," at Tally's Broadway this week. Where has this Billie person been keeping herself, anyway? Of course, we really know. She's been playing in some charming one and two-reel comedies, and we've liked her for a long while. But we had no idea, when she romped through those things, of what she really could do.

"A Full-Fledged Film Star"

LOS ANGELES "HERALD"

Little Billie Rhodes stepped out of the two-reel comedy into a feature yesterday with the same naivette that made creditable her matutinal plunge in the mountain pool. She bears the stamp of innocence in every pretty feature, and looks out upon the world with a trusting faith and responsive affection that endears her to every spectator. The little actress registers joy and pathos with ingenuous fidelity to nature. Her tears are genuine well springs of sorrowing youth and no mere glycerine drops appended where they will be the most becoming. She is apparently free from any endeavor to "look pretty," and climbs about on mountain sides, up and down eave spouts and through rugged walls with boydenish abandon.

"Endears Her to Every Spectator"

LOS ANGELES "EXAMINER

Motion picture historians will chronicle the debut of Billie Rhodes as a full-fledged film star at Tally's yesterday as a complete success, histrionically, pictorially and financially. There have been greater premieres in this city, perhaps ("The Birth of a Nation's" and "Hearts of the World's," for instance) but none more enthusiastic from the audience's viewpoint, or more laudatory to a screen luminary—it is her initial five-reel starring vehicle. It won't be her last—if I am any prophet. Even if she couldn't act—which she can and does—her pretty face, clustered with cute little dimples, and fascinating personality would insure her of success. In this production she is the real girl of your dreams, a fascinating little creature, who is bound to soar to lofty heights in the film sky.

"Little Doubt of Her Success"

LOS ANGELES "EXPRESS"

The management of Tally's Broadway Theatre kept its promise yesterday, and put before the motion picture world a new star of personality and charm. Strictly speaking, however, Billie Rhodes is not a new star. She has a large following among those who like short-length comedy, and needs no praise for her ability to do sprightly and pleasing things in that metier. But now she appears in the realm of serious drama. The reception of the play yesterday left little doubt of her success. * * * As for Miss Rhodes, she is so arch, chic and spontaneous that she wins admiration at every step. There can be no doubt that if she is fortunate enough to find the plays to fit her dainty personality she will take a leading place at once among the popular stars of the day.

DAVID LLOYD GEORGE

By Sir Sidney Low

The Romantic Life Story of the Great Welsh Statesman

Produced by The Ideal Film Renting Co., Ltd., LONDON

(Under the sole direction of MAURICE ELVEY)

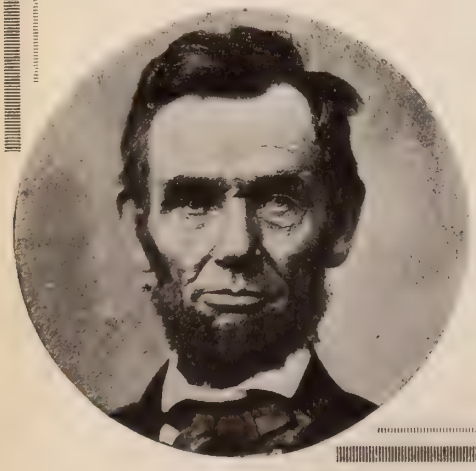
TEN PARTS

¶ A production that is certain to enlist the support of American Government officials and other prominent men.—Rich in publicity possibilities!

¶ The "Ideal Film Renting Co.", whose famous masterpieces such as "MY OLD DUTCH" and "MASKS AND FACES", found a warm welcome in America, have been engaged for AN ENTIRE YEAR ON THE PICTURE.



The London Trade Showing Will be Given Soon. Don't Fail to be Represented!

Note:—The picture has been so constructed that it may be released in episodes or completely.

The Picture That All America Will Want to See!

WHICH allied Statesman, outside America, has most CAPTURED THE IMAGINATION and won the hearts of the world?

Beyond a doubt it is DAVID LLOYD GEORGE, the great little Welshman, who has fought his way up by sheer grit, FROM COTTAGE TO PARLIAMENT, from bootmaker's protege to the Champion of England and the cause of civilization!

Fiction in its most fascinating pages contains no more captivating chapter than the real-life ROMANCE OF DAVID LLOYD GEORGE. The old saying that "Truth is stranger than Fiction" has received no more wonderful exemplification than in Lloyd George's great upward climb to leadership.

AMERICA AND LLOYD GEORGE

To-day the entire world hangs upon his every utterance and in particular no international figure makes so VIVID an APPEAL TO THE PEOPLE OF AMERICA!

His picturesque speech, his freedom from the spirit of caste, his rise to fame from humble origins, his determination to make the common people prevail over TYRANTS IN PURPLE, all give him in especial degree the ear and the heart of the Democracy of the United States.

LIKE ABRAHAM LINCOLN

It is not to be wondered at that the Nation that produced an ABRAHAM LINCOLN should admire such a figure as DAVID LLOYD GEORGE, for there is something wonderfully akin in the characters and careers of the two men.

The life story of LLOYD GEORGE, besides its fascinating romance, will be the most vivid illustration of THE REAL OBJECTS OF THE WAR that has yet been anywhere exhibited.

Through it move such famous Americans as WASHINGTON, LINCOLN, WILSON, etc., and it is, otherwise, PACKED WITH INTEREST FOR THE PEOPLE OF AMERICA.

SHOWING SOON

THE LIFE STORY OF DAVID LLOYD GEORGE will be one of the greatest events in filmdom.

For THOSE WHO MAY BE INTERESTED, quick communication may be had through our cable address: IDEFILM, TELEW, LONDON.

"THE ROMANCE OF TARZAN"

You'll do good business by just showing it
But you'll get a knockout profit if you advertise—

Tarzan pitting his superhuman strength against cannibal ferocity to save his mate from a fate worse than death.

Tarzan locked in a death-duel with a lion.

Tarzan—jungle-reared savage—storming the flunkied doors to society for his mate.

His simple jungle honor code outwitted by the cunning and villainy of social vultures.

His smouldering tropical rage fanned by duplicity into a burning fury of destruction.

Palatial elegance reduced to ruins by his mighty strength—aroused at last to fighting pitch.

The tremendous and original advertising and stunt possibilities in this great sequel to the amazing box-office success, "Tarzan of the Apes," prompted its choice by First National Exhibitors' Circuit as THE ONE PRODUCTION on which to base its exhibitor advertising contest for $1200 in Liberty Bonds.

HAS THE QUALITY CIRCULATION OF THE TRADE

"The Exhibitors' Medium of Communication"

Volume 18. No. 19 November 9, 1918

Speaking Editorially:

THERE'S one outstanding fact about the four weeks' ban on new productions, releases and trade advertising which should get considerable thought from all of us during the next few weeks.

The producers and distributors have shown that they can, when necessary, get together, hold together—and converse together.

At first thought this may not strike you as a very remarkable feat. Especially ordinary will it seem to you if you haven't basked in the Times Square atmosphere for a few years.

But if you have grubbed for bits of scandal on Broadway for many moons, if you have given ear to the sub-rosa opinions of this manufacturer and that manufacturer—

Then, with us, you'll mingle feelings of amazement, admiration, and watchfulness of the future as you ponder the thought:

The producers and distributors have shown that they can, when necessary, get together, hold together—and converse together.

* * * *

And the Greatest of These—

IT might well be said that necessity prompted the united action of the manufacturer group. But it is not the deed that arouses our comment—it is the fact that the executives are meeting once and twice a week and talking plain, cold facts.

Not all the conversation is pleasant, perhaps. Indeed, diminutive Mary Pickford and her new contract have caused some rather heated words.

But the important point is—the big fellows are talking to each other and to one another.

Look at it from this angle:

From many, many moons any manufacturer would tell you—as an individual—that overproduction and excessive distribution overhead were the basic evils of the business.

The same manufacturer would tell you that the only solution lay in united action—to limit production and merge exchange overhead.

But these fellows always left you with the impression that they made one reservation—"My production plans are all correct; my exchanges are the ones that should remain open and handle the other fellow's distribution."

That was the way it used to be—and will continue to be for some time.

But they are meeting over the luncheon table now. They are getting acquainted.

So keep your ear to the ground—and both eyes open!

Congratulations, Gentlemen!

FRANKLY, we believe that a word of praise is due the manufacturers for the inherent strength and ability to organize that they have shown in this crisis.

Think it over—and think of the future possibilities.

A distinction is drawn between the present Committee of Producers and Distributors and the National Association. But the distinction is largely one of words alone.

And to us, the big thought of this four-week ban is that it shows the power that the National Association can wield—and some day will wield, if it is to justify its existence.

We can't believe that there need be any fear of this power of organization being used wrongly—for example, solely in producer versus exhibitor squabbles. The plain and fundamental laws of business competition affecting buyer and seller will take care of that.

But there is the bright prospect of the power shown in these few weeks being eventually used to instill new strength, cohesion and value in the place that it should be—the industry's National Association.

And so we say—Congratulations, Gentlemen!

* * * *

Good News at Last

THERE'S pretty good news for all of us on pages 2831 and 2832 of this week's issue. One, two and three at a time territories are opening up all over the country.

If our office calculations are right Monday, November 4th, will find at least fifty per cent of the country's theatres open again. The percentage may even be greater, for every few hours is bringing a telegram telling of another section where the theatres are operating at full force.

The West—last to be hit—is still stagnant. The South, outside of Atlanta and Richmond, is not entirely clear. The East and Central States are opening up rapidly.

And, if our correspondents are not merely indulging in space-rate adjectives, the indications are that the picture theatres of the country will present bright, clean faces to the rush of patrons that is expected. "Exhibitors are redecorating and cleaning" is the word from every city.

But, by the way, reports from Boston would bear out the fact that picture theatres should not be in a hurry about reopening. Boom business is not a certainty unless the patrons are entirely free of any fear of the influenza.

Extend Ban Another Week!

FOLLOWING a meeting of the Committee of Producers and Distributors on Thursday, October 31st, the following statement was issued:

"The undersigned producers and distributors have carefully canvassed the situation in every territory. Full consideration has been given to exhibitors' needs everywhere.

"With the reopening of the majority of the motion picture theatres of the United States and Canada expected by November 16th, regular releasing will be resumed Sunday, November 17th.

"We feel that the suspension of releases during a period of emergency has had a healthy effect on all branches of the industry.

"Exhibitors of the country have worked with us in a splendid spirit and have solidified an industry that will attain its greatest expansion and benefits through still closer cooperation of the elements that are necessary to each other."

The statement is signed by the same eighteen companies responsible for the original ban; with the additional names of Vitagraph and Essanay.

Suggested to the National Association

WALTER H. BROOKS, manager of the Auditorium, Coatesville, Pennsylvania, has favored Motion Picture News with a most timely suggestion. We pass the opportunity for real service to the industry on to the National Association.

Manager Brooks suggests that since eighty per cent of the country's theatres have now been closed for an average of four weeks, it might be proper to appeal to the Fuel Administration for a modification of the "lightless night" order.

Surely, since the playhouses have saved all light and fuel for four weeks, they will not be exceeding their allotment if granted more than the present three nights of light.

Theatre illumination is at present allowed on Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Our Pennsylvania reader brings out the point that the permission to use light on Sunday is of no use to exhibitors in many sections of the country.

"In Pennsylvania this is utterly ridiculous," he says. "In most small cities—among the eight per cent of the theatres—the use of light on Sunday is foolish. I will grant that the ruling is satisfactory for the District of Columbia and for New York City, and some western states; but certainly for the vast majority, three week nights would be decidedly more valuable than the Sunday privilege."

He's In Again?

WE just had time to read in print the nice things we said—from the heart—about Frank Tichenor and General Film last week when that combination broke into the news pages again.

So we want to remind you of what we said last week:

"He followed the conservation highway—and he is only beginning to reap the benefits."

This week the news chronicles the fact that George Kleine's exchanges are to move under the General roof. Overhead will be cut, while the Kleine organization will maintain its individuality by means of special salesmen in the General offices.

It's another move towards conservation worthy of praise.

And it brings up another interesting sidelight:

Much was said pro and con about George Kleine's recent recommendations to the Priorities Board calling calling for a drastic merging of exchanges. Everybody took a fling at the task of saying an editorial word on the latter.

We want to be the first to say:

George Kleine has never been afraid to take his own medicine. All who know the picture business know that the Kleine distribution organization was the heart of George Kleine.

Now—having prescribed the reduction of exchange roofs to help the ailing industry—George Kleine has stepped up manfully to take his own biteer tasting prescription.

Shake hands, George Kleine.

George Spoor—Laboratory Man

GEORGE SPOOR has made his share of money producing pictures. And it is as a producer that most film men think of him.

It is only those who have been favored with a trip through the Spoor plant in Chicago under the personal direction of that pioneer who know that George Spoor should really be thought of as an inventor.

A hundred and one costly investigations and experiments are continually under way there under the eyes of Mr. Spoor. And we might add that quite a few startling surprises are all but ready for Mr. Spoor to say the word.

This week he has said the word on one point—in offering manufacturers the facilities of the new Spoor-Thompson automatic processes for developing and printing.

Mr. Spoor is of the belief that if there is anything more than noise to this continual talk about "Economy" and "Let's save money" he has offered the manufacturers their opportunity.

The news story will be found on page 2856.

The Right Way About It

THERE'S a news story on page 2837 of this week's issue that should interest both exhibitors and manufacturers. It tells of the manner in which New York exhibitors have prepared for the legislative battles of next year.

The New York State League hasn't waited this time until dreaded bills reach the floor of the Assembly or Senate.

It has started long before election at the task of placing all state candidates on record regarding the motion picture and—having started at the right time, when a politician's heart is in his boots—it has secured a complete and valuable collection of data.

Which is considerable of an improvement over the usual method of attempting to fight politicians by hurriedly placed assessments on the National Association members and futile junketing parties to Albany.

Country Cheers Up as Theatres Open

Influenza Ban Reported Being Raised in Various Sections of Country—Washington Among First to Dispel the Gloom—Normal Conditions Soon Expected

THE scourge of influenza which has been sweeping the country, dragging in its wake closed theatres and a tied-up motion picture industry, was reported this week and last as being rapidly put under control. This brought with it permits from various health boards to open the motion picture theatres, and in all parts of the country the houses are again getting under way.

October 30 marked the beginning of resumed business in Chicago, and Buffalo, N. Y., followed by opening up on November 3. Pennsylvania is reported as very optimistic. Latest wires also add Des Moines and other Iowa towns to the "open" list. Nebraska has also lifted the closing order, precisely four weeks after it went into effect in that state.

Chicago Opening on Sectional Plan

CHICAGO, ILL. (Special).—Wednesday, October 30, saw the theatres and other public places in Chicago north of the Diversey Parkway once more throwing their doors open. The local authorities are opening the houses on a sectional plan, the ban being lifted in different territories as conditions warrant.

On Thursday the open zone was extended to include everything south of Twelfth street; on Friday it is expected that the entire city will be open with the possible exception of South Chicago.

The Health Department is making close inspection of all theatres before they are allowed to open. They must be in sanitary condition and have satisfactory ventilation.

Buffalo Health Order Sets November 3rd

BUFFALO, N. Y. (Special).—Local exhibitors have been instructed by Health Commissioner Dr. Irving Gram to go ahead and prepare for reopening their houses, Sunday, November 3. This order, however, may be rescinded, if conditions in the fight against the "flu" epidemic should show that the disease has not disappeared from the city.

A meeting was held in the Health Commissioner's office this week at which exhibitors were told that from present indications all theatres could safely open Sunday. During the closing period managers have been putting their houses in tip-top shape and all will be scintillating for "Der Tag."

Pennsylvania Rapidly Opening Up

HARRISBURGH, PA. (Special).—The influenza ban will be lifted November 5 by State Health Commissioner Royer in twelve counties out of sixty-four, with more being added to the list almost hourly. Philadelphia theatres have been operating since Wednesday. Pittsburgh is expected to follow suit within a few days.

After a few days of strained relations with the municipal authorities the State Commissioner issued his order allowing Philadelphia to open on Wednesday, October 30, last Saturday. This was followed on Monday with orders allowing theatres to open on Election Day, November 5, in the counties of Chester, Montgomery and Delaware, with the exception of five towns where conditions are not yet clear.

Then on Tuesday night the Health Board announced that the ban would also be lifted on Election Day in Lancaster, Pike, Monroe, Adams, Cumberland, York, and Perry Counties. Part of Dauphin County, including the city of Harrisburgh, was included in the order.

Mayor Babcock, of Pittsburgh, is putting up a strenuous fight to have the ban lifted in that section. At first, when he sought immediate relief, he met with a cold turn-down from Commissioner Royer who stated that he was not satisfied with the epidemic's progress.

Following an exchange of letters Mayor Babcock journeyed to Harrisburgh on Tuesday and talked with the State officials. Later he announced that the ban would probably be lifted in a few days.

Members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Dauphin County met in Harrisburgh Monday and appointed a committee, including Peter Magaro, Regent theatre; James George, Victoria, and John Lenney, Grand, to call on Dr. Royer and plead for the reopening of the theatres of the Harrisburgh zone. Later in the day this committee presented to the Health Commissioner the argument that health conditions in Harrisburgh are better today than they are in Philadelphia, where the ban was lifted.

THE LATEST

Frequent Reports by Wire Show San Francisco Opening and Closing

OFF again—on again is the role San Francisco is playing in the influenza tragedy, which has held the boards for the past three weeks.

Frequent reports from 'Frisco by wire show that the city is opening and closing with great regularity, but that the epidemic and the closing orders do not appear to be jibing very well.

Among the latest wires to MOTION PICTURE NEWS, following reports that "open house" had been declared, was one dated October 28, which read as follows:

"Situation is improving in San Francisco, and the Board of Health reports a falling off of fifty per cent in the number of cases compared with yesterday. Reopening of theatres, however, is not yet visible."

Truly, the influenza is nothing if not inconsistent.

Capitol Houses Reopen on Monday

WASHINGTON, D. C. (Special).—Health Commissioner Brownlow on Wednesday gladdened the hearts of local motion picture men with the announcement that the ban on theatres would be lifted next Monday, November 4.

Earlier in the week the prospect was that the ban would continue for a much longer period but the local theatre men kept plugging away and finally secured permission to operate Monday.

Washington has been hard hit by the influenza epidemic and the theatres were just as well satisfied to be closed. With conditions clear now, however, they look forward to boom times starting next week.

Virginia Theatres Will Follow District

RICHMOND, VA. (Special).—The Richmond health authorities have declared that local theatres may reopen next Monday, November 4. It is expected that theatres throughout the State will follow Richmond's lead as the epidemic is on the wane in every section.

Richmond theatre managers previously showing first runs are planning to run pictures one week behind release dates.

Indiana Open by End of the Week

INDIANAPOLIS, IND. (Special)—Unless there is a decided reaction in the influenza situation within the next forty-eight hours

all the theatres of Indiana will probably be open by the end of the week.

Indianapolis expects that the ban will be lifted Thursday by the Board of Health. This is the attitude of the city health officials. The state officials will allow many sections to reopen on Thursday, and others to follow on Friday.

The State Board of Health expects to lift the ban county by county as conditions warrant such action. After Thursday night it is believed that but a few cities will be closed, while it is confidently hoped that Saturday will find all theatres open.

Wisconsin Expects Action by November 3rd

MILWAUKEE, WIS. (Special)—Indications here point to the reopening of Milwaukee theatres in the very near future, most certainly by November 3. Health Commissioner Ruhland declines to make any definite prediction but is holding meetings this week to consider the question and allow the lifting of the ban at the earliest opportunity.

FOND DU LAC, WIS. (Special).—With the third week of the ban on motion picture houses nearing, there is hope here now that orders permitting the theatres to reopen November 3 will soon be forthcoming.

MADISON, WIS. (Special)—While the closing order is still in effect in Wisconsin the plague is well under control. State Health Officer Harper is taking extraordinary precautions to prevent a recurrence of the epidemic, which accounts for the slowness in reopening. It is now expected that the lifting of the ban will happen on Sunday, November 3. Local managers were prepared to reopen last Tuesday but all cities are awaiting Doctor Harper's word.

GREEN BAY, WIS. (Special)—Picture houses will probably be permitted to reopen next Sunday, November 3, if conditions continue to improve during the balance of the week, it was announced today by local Health Commissioner Chloupek.

Many Towns in Ohio Have Reopened

CLEVELAND (Special)—While Cleveland and Cincinnati are still "dark" towns in so far as motion picture theatres are concerned, reports are beginning to arrive at the Cleveland exchanges which indicate that the rest of the state is gradually opening again.

Hicksville, Bryan, Cambridge, Holgate, Kenmore, Lafferty, and upper Sandusky announce that they will reopen on Sunday, November 3. Martin's Ferry opened on Tuesday but was again closed on Wednesday.

There is an unconfirmed rumor here that Cumore, Toledo and Mansfield will open also on Sunday.

Florida Looks for Relief Next Week

TAMPA, FLA. (Special)—The epidemic of Spanish influenza seems to be on the decrease throughout Florida, according to reports received here, among the native residents. But in sections having large Latin populations it is reported that the plague is still raging among the latter.

There are no hopes of the theatres opening during the present week but the prospects are fifty-fifty for reopening early next week.

LATE BULLETINS

BUTTE, MONT. (Special).—Early reopening of theatres is expected at Anaconda where no new cases of influenza were reported today and no deaths for a week. Conditions in rest of State continue unchanged.

ATLANTA, GA. (Special).—The theatre closing order effecting Atlanta has been rescinded. All picture theatres were operating at full speed Saturday, October 26.

MUNCIE, IND. (Special).—Present indications are that theatres here will reopen on Thursday, October 31.

FLINT, MICH. (Special).—Rumors here are to the effect that there is a possibility of the theatres reopening on Sunday, November 3. The situation is improving greatly. It is certain that the theatres will reopen by Election Day.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL. (Special)—The influenza epidemic here is on the decline and the theatres are already making efforts to reopen. The prospects, however, point to Sunday or Monday as being the earliest possible date for the reopening of theatre.

SAN DIEGO, CAL. (Special)—The influenza situation here is reported as more favorable. No deaths have been reported in the past three days. There have been only twenty-five deaths here since the epidemic started.

Cleveland Patiently Awaits Reopenings

In Cleveland it was reported that the different branches of the industry have been taking the situation philosophically. The exchanges have for the most part retained their full office forces and taking advantage of the condition by inspecting films, repainting film cases, and otherwise overhauling their systems of operating. In some instances, members of the sales forces have been temporarily retired. Others are retaining their salesmen on half pay, while still others have their men out on the road. So far as can be learned, Paramount is the only local exchange which has its men out right now. The Standard Film Service of Cleveland, transferred its sales force to Detroit, to work out of the Detroit office of the company, but as Detroit closed late in the week, they have been recalled. The Pathe Cleveland exchange kept its sales force in tact, on condition that the men devote all of their time to the sale of Liberty Bonds.

The Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers has held several meetings in regard to handling the releases, once the theatres are again doing business, and they have agreed to continue their releases just where they were terminated last week. The difficulty lies with the towns outside of Cleveland, which will not be opening at the same time. In all probability, these towns will wild cat until all of the theatres are running, and a regular booking sheet can be resumed.

The exhibitors, in many instances are cleaning up their houses, redecorating and preparing for lively business when normal conditions again prevail. The Mall theatre is putting in its new Euclid avenue front, and expects to have it all ready some time next week. The Alhambra is completing some of the improvements which were started last summer. The Standard theatre is having its entire lobby done over with a new coat of paint, and several of the neighborhood houses have followed suit.

Films Division Names New Series

A new series of twelve two-reel pictures, under the general title "For Life and Liberty," is announced by Director Chas. S. Hart, of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information.

Three of these two-reelers are now in the laboratory and three more are in the hands of the directors and camera men.

The stories for the new series were prepared by Rufus Steele, scenario editor for the Division of Films, and the entire work of preparing the pictures is being done under Governmental supervision. Each picture takes up some vital war activity and illustrates how successful results are being obtained.

Following the date of the initial release, which will shortly be announced by Denis J. Sullivan, Manager of Domestic Distribution, it is expected that one of these two-reel pictures will be issued every two weeks.

The direct title of the first of the new series is "When Your Soldier's Hit."

Ruppert Engages Hall

Colonel Jacob Ruppert, who is still strongly interested in motion pictures, on October 31 engaged Frank Hall as general manager of his recently announced Film Clearing House.

Frank Hall has had active experience in independent producing and distributing.

Some Sections Remain Undetermined

Michigan Expects to Remain in Clutches of Gloom Until November 10—Denver Reports New Cases—No Promises in Rochester

TO offset the many cheerful reports that have been received from various sections of the country in regard to the influenza situation and its attendant hurtful effect on the motion picture theatres, several cities announced at a late hour that the ban was still in effect in their territory. Some held out no hopes of an early "armistice," while others expressed the opinion that things would be open and going smoothly by November 10. Denver is classed in the latter list, and Michigan is practically in the same boat.

Seattle, Wash., reports indicate that influenza conditions have neither improved nor abated, and that masks are still in vogue. Butte, Mont., reported a slight improvement in the situation. Spokane is classed as still "serious."

Michigan Expects Nov. 10 to Decide the Question

Late in the evening of Oct. 31 it was reported from Detroit that Governor Sleeper and the State Board of Health may not remove the ban on theatres and churches until Nov. 10, which would make a three weeks' closing for that state. The epidemic is said to be rapidly subsiding in Detroit, in view of which fact it is said accusations have been made that the Governor is playing politics by not allowing the theatres to reopen earlier. The state election falls on Tuesday, Nov. 5. It is said the exhibitors of Detroit and Michigan lack an efficient organization to bring sufficient pressure to bear to get an earlier opening. The Detroit health officer has strongly opposed the closing order, but is powerless.

Denver, while almost as bad, entertains hopes of being able to open Nov. 4, it was announced by wire Oct. 29. Four hundred and eighty-seven cases of influenza were reported in Denver for that day alone, breaking the record. In stating that the ban would probably be lifted Nov. 4, the State Health Department made it plain that exhibitors need not be surprised if they were told to remain "dark" longer than that.

A wire from Seattle, Wash., Oct. 30, read: "No shows can open here this week. Influenza conditions are the same, and everyone wears a mask in the stores, cars, elevators and even on the street. Some small towns are opening."

The fact that some of the smaller towns around Seattle are opening has led to the belief that the West will not remain under the ban many days longer.

Rochester Authorities Make No Promises

A total of 10,519 cases of influenza had been reported in Rochester, N. Y., up to Oct. 29, with the deaths placed at 475. The epidemic was reported as showing a slight abatement, but authorities would make no promises regarding reopening.

Butte, Mont., also showed slight improvement on Oct. 30, but there were no signs at that time of the ban being lifted. Many new cases were being reported in Butte every day.

Spokane reported its situation as serious. State Health Officer Tuttle asked that the closing ban remain in effect at least ten days from Oct. 29. A total of 207 new cases were reported in Spokane on Oct. 29, making a total of 2,599 since the epidemic came into prominence.

Nov. 4 was set as the day for lifting the ban at Cincinnati, where it was reported things had been unusually "dark." One of the most optimistic signs that the influenza is disappearing from that section and that theatres will shortly be doing their normal share of business was the report that the Camp Sherman theatre would open at once for the soldiers at that training station. This means the quarantine at Camp Sherman has been lifted.

Cleveland reports on Oct. 30 indicated the theatres would remain closed another ten days. In the meantime exhibitors have been preparing for reopenings by securing the cooperation of the Health Board, guaranteeing the safety of the theatres to the public.

The only news emanating from Grand Rapids, Mich., was that the houses were still closed on Oct. 29. The town had probably not received the news that Nov. 10 was expected to be the reopening day in Michigan. Lansing appeared further in the dark than Grand Rapids, and announced that although schools were being reopened it was not expected the termination of the closing order would arrive for another three weeks. Officials pronounced the situation still very serious.

OPERATORS

Always Prefer a Trade Journal That Does Them REAL Good

THE following letter is a fair sample of what the majority of operators throughout the country think of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. They are very emphatic in their remarks that they find what they want in the NEWS—and that's what a trade paper is published for, but few of them obtain their object.

Here it is:

"Have been a motion picture machine operator for years. The Projection items in the NEWS are the best in any trade journal, and the NEWS is the best of its kind in the country."

(Signed) L. E. BEYNON.

The Projection Department is but one of the many departments edited with the end in view of accomplishing REAL things for the readers.

DOMINATES THE FIELD

Merchants Feel Need of Theatres in Many Places

Indications are plentiful on every side that the merchants of the various cities that are closed feel deeply the lack of theatre audiences. Without the theatres the stores are said to be much below their average in the way of customers and sales.

In Elgin, Ill., merchants have given their support to the effort of exhibitors in attempting to secure a promise of reopening of the local theatres as soon as possible after the enforced closing. Proprietors of cigar and ice-cream stores, catering to evening patrons, endorsed the exhibitors' appeal, declaring their business in the closing weeks to be cut in half. Drug stores felt the loss of evening patrons also, as have the outlying grocery stores. It is estimated that Elgin's four show houses average attendance of 1,500 an evening. The enforced closing of the Elgin theatres, it is said, put a crimp into the proposed raising of prices by local theatres on November 1.

Cincinnati merchants by October 24 had noticed a considerable slump in their receipts, it was reported. The motion picture theatre crowds contained many buyers and to have a store near a picture house was a distinct advantage. Some of the merchants declare that their loss in business has amounted to about $500,000, with the prospect that it will go higher.

Exhibitors of Tampa, Fla., Carry On

With the "flu" raging, theatres closed tight for over two weeks, stores open only from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m., people wearing masks and draping a bag of asafetida around their necks in place of the lavalliere, with new cases and a long list of deaths daily, the exhibitors of Tampa, Fla., are not sitting down waiting to see what is going to happen next, but are "carrying on" by painting, cleaning, decorating and generally improving their houses for the season they know must come when the deadly epidemic has folded its tent and passed away.

Mr. C. D. Cooley, who is the President of the Florida Exhibitors' League, and Manager of the finest of Tampa's theatres, The Strand, and also the Grand, says:

"The peak of the epidemic seems to have been reached here. In fact all over the State, with the exception of Miami. I do not believe there will be a need of keeping the theatres closed more than a week or ten days longer. I feel that we will be opening again by Sunday, the third of November.

"I am painting and decorating my houses, so that when my patrons return they will feel the cleanliness and know that there are no deadly germs lurking in the corners."

Mr. Edward Kane, the Manager of the Alcazar, was busily engaged in directing a crew of painters and decorators; he said:

"My house looks as though the 'flu' had hit it, hey. Well there won't be a cleaner, brighter house in the State when I'm through with it. This thing can't last much longer and I'm getting ready for the amusement hungry crowds, when the 'embargo' is off."

Mr. F. M. Catron, Manager of the Bonita, has had a touch of the "flu," but it failed to keep him under cover long. He, too, is painting and fixing up his theatre. He said:

"I have a boy in France, another away off in New Mexico. They expect their dad to keep the home fires burning, and I'm doing it to the best of my ability."

Mr. W. H. Carroll, the Manager of the Prince in Tampa and the Rex in St. Petersburg, said:

"It has been an awful blow to the country and to the Motion Picture Industry as well, but we must all make the best of it. I am renovating my houses and getting ready for the opening day which I feel will soon be here."

Mr. Carroll, too, has a son "Over There."

All Tampa exhibitors feel keenly the loss of a loved brother exhibitor, Albert H. La Belle, who owned three theatres in Ybor City, the Latin quarter of Tampa. Secretary of the Exhibitors' League, he was a great favorite all over the State, always smiling, fat and healthy, a good word for everybody—no wonder they called him "Happy La Belle."

Toronto Exhibitors Not Kicking at Closing Order

The closing of Toronto's theatres for an indefinite period starting with Monday, Oct. 21, by the local health officer was welcomed by the exhibitors, according to Thomas Scott, secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario. Speaking for the exhibitors, Mr. Scott said: "It is a fine idea. The moving picture men are always ready and willing to co-operate with the authorities when the general public is benefited."

Toronto was almost the last city in Canada to close its theatres and local exhibitors became just a little anxious, according to the opinions offered, lest the people would blame the theatres for the spread of the disease locally. The people and the papers were more inclined to rap the street cars, however, as the menace. The exhibitors were quite ready to close down because attendance had fallen away off, except in a few instances, during the latter part of the week of Oct. 14.

On the day that Toronto theatres closed all Canadian houses should have started in the great drive with the Victory Loan pictures to boost the Fifth Canadian loan.

The epidemic took one of Toronto's best known exhibitors on Oct. 20, when M. J. Thaler, proprietor of the College Playhouse, 344 College street, Toronto, died at his residence, 347 Brunswick avenue, after a brief illness.

"Open Houses" Not Much Better Than Closed Ones

Manager Bert Goldman, of the New Princess and New Majestic theatres, St. Paul, had the following to say to a News representative when questioned about business conditions in the only large city of the entire West where theatres remain open during the influenza epidemic:

"Though conditions are perhaps not so bad in St. Paul with theatres open, as they might be if the theatres were closed tight, nevertheless, it seems to me "dark houses" could not be much worse than the present situation. We are playing normal pictures at normal rentals and our overhead is not reduced, yet our patronage has taken a drop of easily fifty per cent. There are a few people who are not worrying about the influenza but a majority are deathly afraid of catching it despite statements published here daily that conditions here are not bad.

"It seems," added Mr. Goldman, "that many people are afraid that if they come to theatres in St. Paul that they might meet people coming from Minneapolis who might possibly bring influenza germs with them. To me this seems ridiculous, but I have heard people debating about this subject in the lobby."

Epidemic on Wane in Flint, Michigan

The influenza epidemic which has had Flint in its grasp for the last two weeks and has been responsible for several score of deaths and illness of from 5,000 to 10,000 (estimated) is believed to be on the wane.

Theatrical men who have co-operated with the city and state health authorities to the fullest extent, some against their own wishes, but with the desire to do everything possible to aid in checking the epidemic though it has meant a great financial loss, are hoping for a cancellation of the closing order within the next few days.

C. Edgar Momand, manager of the Garden theatre, says that he believes that business will reopen with a rush after the closing order is revoked. People will be show "hungry" and mighty glad to see performances in the theatres again and business will be very good, is his view. Mr. Garfield of the Arpheum also holds this view and points to the fuel closing order last winter to substantiate his belief. He says business was better with him immediately after the theatres were reopened last winter than it had been just before they were closed.

It is understood by the local theatre men that there will be no confusion in getting pictures through the Detroit film exchanges after the theatres are opened. It is understood the Detroit film men have agreed that the bookings of theatres will be carried out by the various exchanges just as if there had been no closing, the films being sent out in the order in which they had been contracted for the period during which the theatres have been closed.

St. Paul Profits By It

The St. Anthony and Merriam Park districts of St. Paul which adjoin Eastern and Southern Minneapolis, the few theatres of the district are enjoying good business due to the coming of eager movie fans from Minneapolis to St. Paul to see shows. Managers of several of these suburban houses state that they have heard the fear of St. Paulites that Minneapolis might bring "influ" germs over to the theatre with them, often expressed but seemingly this has not affected business to any great extent.

Northwest Becomes Restless Over Ban

The ban on the exhibition of motion pictures in the Northwest seemed to be no nearer being raised October 27 than it did a week before, for although conditions are evidently better health officers will not admit that the time is yet ripe for amusements to be reopened. In St. Paul, despite the fact that a few new cases of influenza have been reported, the theatres are remaining open, though not playing to anywheres near normal patronage.

Conditions in Minneapolis were so much better last Saturday that the Department of Schools ordered school work to be taken up again the next Monday, but after the first period Monday the school doors were again locked. The University of Minnesota was allowed to begin its fall semester October 21 however.

Kleine Shifts Exchanges to General

Aims to Economize on Distribution by Circulating His Pictures Through Latter's Offices—Only Change to Exhibitor in Booking Is Street Address

GEORGE KLEINE, whose system of distribution has withstood the ever-changing moods of the motion picture industry since it was organized several years ago, has decided upon a step which is considered consistent with principles of economy recommended to the War Industries Board. The plan is, according to an announcement this week, to pick the George Kleine exchanges up bodily and set them down within the walls of the present General Film Exchange offices throughout the country. This will mean, it is shown, that a new service co-operation will have been brought about without a change of control of the Kleine program.

Practically the only change, in so far as the exhibitor is concerned in booking the Kleine productions, is the physical routing of the films through General Exchanges.

One of the first pictures to be affected by the new arrangement is "The Wall Invisible," in which Shirley Mason is presented as star.

Practices His Preachings

Close upon his outspoken recommendations to the motion picture industry to practice a course of specific economies in the interest of conservation, as outlined in a letter written by him to the War Industries Board and which aroused a great deal of thoughtful comment in the trade, George Kleine made an announcement this week which presents him as following his own advice in regard to distribution. He states that he will issue his pictures to exhibitors henceforth through General Film Company exchanges.

The statement which comes from Mr. Kleine makes it clear that duplication of exchange facilities by his organization is not warranted if a satisfactory system is available to provide physical service for the product distributed by him. This system he has found in General Film Company with its wide circuit of exchanges that are already handling the product of several large distributors. It means that the George Kleine product no longer will be issued from Kleine System exchanges but will reach the market through the established General Film exchanges.

In proclaiming the change Mr. Kleine emphasizes that he has given up no individual responsibility, and that the arrangement relates to such service as the machinery of General Film Company can provide for his pictures, this including as far as may be practical and economical the movement of film, booking, routine accounting and ordinary transactions involved in circulating the product. All the feature pictures and short length subjects marketed by Mr. Kleine through his own exchange system will now be diverted without any break in service through the General branches.

No Contract Changes

To represent the Kleine organization and to keep it in contact as formerly with his clientele, special representatives will be found at the General exchanges. The effect will be, as far as the trade is concerned, simply a change in street address where the Kleine program may be secured. Existing contracts will be filled and there will be no change in the Kleine business relations with exhibitors.

Several months ago a similar co-operative arrangement was made with General Film Company by Mr. Kleine in Canada, where the number of exchanges was lessened through use of one set of offices for both concerns, with a notable saving of overhead expense for all concerned. The deal whereby the plan is carried out more completely in the United States is a result of the benefits demonstrated in Canada.

The long list of successful Kleine releases will be available, besides which several new groups of product are ready for distribution when the reopening of theatres justifies their release. A big feature, "The Wall Invisible," with Shirley Mason is one of the first of the more important productions, to be followed with "The Girl—Alaska." The latter is the first picture ever staged actually in Alaska, and it promises some revelations in atmosphere. Some short comedies are scheduled featuring Leon Errol, famous in New York musical comedy shows. There are also a number of O. Henry stories. The first of these will be "In the Fog," a masterfully produced three-reel subject fit to lead any program.

Among the Kleine releases already on the market are such productions as the Essanay-Chaplin "Triple Trouble," "Conquered Hearts," "Behind the Lines in Italy" and various Perfection Pictures—"Ruggles of Red Gap," "Brown of Harvard," "The Unbeliever," "A Pair of Sixes," "The Curse of Iku," the always impressive "Quo Vadis," and the Mary MacLane picture, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me."

OH, BOY!

We Certainly Don't Want Him to Pass Away On Our Account

IF slang was ever expressive, it assuredly is in the following "squawk" from a tried and true reader of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. He wants what he wants when he wants it—and it can be readily seen that he is not backward about saying so.

"Holy mackerel! Jumping Juniper! What do you think I want to do, Die? Haven't had a copy of the M. P. N. since three weeks ago. I bought out the Harold Peerson Estates moving picture business and supposed the copy would continue to come. So it did for a few months. Then what a change. No NEWS. Enclosed find check of $3.00 to cover one year's subscription. If this isn't enough, send along for more. Go the limit. I can't be without the NEWS."

Exhibitors Hold Ball at Hunt's Point

The Cinema Exhibitors' Association of Bronx County, N. Y., of which Henry Cole is chairman, has completed all arrangements for its sixth annual entertainment and ball to be held November 4 at Hunt's Point Palace, Bronx.

Among the entertainers who are expected to contribute to the evening's merriment are Harry Houdini, Mabel Julienne Scott, McCarthy and Fisher and Billy Gleason. The all-star photoplayers' grand march will probably be led by George Walsh and Marion Davies, and stars expected to be present include Virginia Pearson, Alice Joyce, Ruth Stonehouse, Rose Tapley, Margaret Marsh, Leah Baird, Sheldon Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Hobart Henley, Jack Dunn, Grace Valentine and others. City and county officials have been invited, as well as friends in the F. I. L. M. Club and the trade in general.

Boston Starts Good, But Falls Down

Sunday night, October 20, saw the theatres of Boston breaking all attendance records, following receipt of a permit to open from the Board of Health. The first night's business, however, appeared to be an unreliable gauge, as Monday brought noticeable changes in the situation.

Many first-run picture houses that were usually filled to capacity at every performance, barely half filled their theatre. Reports from every source told of poor business, and many exhibitors believe it will be fully two weeks before the influenza scare is over. The majority of the theatres up to Thursday were barely paying expenses and many were losing money.

Theatres in Lowell and vicinity will remain closed, as the epidemic is not sufficiently under control.

Record Made Despite Influenza

Film Distributing Record Despite Influenza Is Reported by Committee in Charge of United War Work Campaign

A NEW record in film distribution, it is believed, in spite of influenza complications, has been set by the motion picture committee of the United War Work Campaign. Once again every branch of the industry has responded to the "win the war" appeal, plans have been made for 150,000 exhibitions of pictures showing the activities of the Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., Knights of Columbus, Jewish Welfare Board, American Library Association, War Camp Community Service and Salvation Army.

To carry on the programme of war service which has been intrusted to these organizations the American people are asked to contribute $170,500,000. Efforts will be made, however, to raise at least a quarter of a billion dollars.

Early in the fall a motion picture committee with E. A. MacManus as chairman, and S. L. Rothapfel and William A. Johnston as the other members, was formed to co-operate with the United War Work Campaign. This committee began operations with an attempt to obtain more motion picture circulation than had even been obtained by similar means for any single idea. How successful has been this attempt is shown by the following statement from Mr. MacManus:

"We decided to concentrate upon news reels and at once obtained the hearty co-operation of the Universal, Pathe, Mutual and Gaumont companies. The Bray Pictograph has incorporated several subjects along lines suggested by us for distribution by Paramount. This corporation is also releasing much United War Work material which was brought from Europe by Burton Holmes and incorporated in his Travelogues.

"Special material taken abroad by Newman is being distributed by the Educational Film Corporation. At the same time H. E. Hancock has been making his 'Around the Clock' series in American camps.

"The committee arranged all this material with a view to providing seven hundred prints a week. In spite of unusual and unexpected obstacles we have been able to reach this goal over a space of nine weeks. More than 6,000 prints, therefore, are available for distribution in as many of the 14,000 motion picture theatres as are not closed by epidemic conditions. The response of the exhibitors' associations has been unanimous in following the lead of Mr. Rothapfel.

"One of the special features initiated by the committee has been in the production and use of trailers. I believe that we hit upon an absolutely new idea by hooking up the outdoor poster campaign with the motion picture campaign. This has been accomplished by 'shooting' the posters, animating them with living pictures and then fading back to the original posters.

"Rex Beach and Kenneth C. Beaton—'K. C. B.'—aided greatly with ideas, titles, etc. Mr. Beach also collaborated with Mr. Rothapfel on a special five-reel feature covering the work of the campaign, for lease through Goldwyn. The epidemic may interfere with the elaborate preparations made for the showing of this feature, but otherwise the motion picture programme has not felt the restrictions inspired by influenza as much as have the usual run of features.

"The slides have attracted wide approval. We prepared seven different slides, which are being distributed by exhibitors' State leagues. They contain quotations from prominent people, statistical information and reasons why the nation should oversubscribe the United War Work Campaign Fund."

Camera Men to Be Called to Colors

It was announced from Washington this week that within the next thirty days certain camera men of the motion picture industry will be picked to film "the greatest spectacle of all times," the world war as it is now being fought on the other side of the "big drink." Uncle Sam is the director. The Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, stated that the War Department realizes the extreme importance of making full and complete picture-history of the war. After the war is won, these official pictures, taken by the Signal Corps of the U. S. Army, will form the eternal picture-history of the last days of autocracy.

The Division of Films expressed the belief that the right sort of men will apply at once by addressing the Photographic Section, Office of the Chief Signal Officer, Washington, D. C., for an application blank.

Two New Stories for Mary Pickford

Mrs. Charlotte Pickford has purchased the screen rights of "Daddy Long Legs" from the Jean Webster estate, and also the screen rights for "Pollyanna," it has been announced.

The price for both these stories is declared to be $80,000. Mrs. Pickford leaves Los Angeles to meet Mary in New York, and it is stated that an announcement will then be made concerning the future activities of Mary Pickford.

Late Wires Show Additional Deaths

A telegram from Los Angeles on October 31 carried the news that a number of additional fatalities have been reported among studio employees, especially the technical people. Among the players reported as dead are Arthur Morse Moon and his wife, Donna Drew. They were former prominent players.

Harry Sherman is reported as dangerously ill.

Cleveland Exchanges Manage to Keep Active

Announcements of activities on the part of exchanges these days are so rare, as to be very conspicuous. One such was made last week by Charles Schwerin, general manager of the Success Film Productions, of Cleveland. Mr. Schwerin, while in New York, recently acquired the releasing rights in Ohio and Kentucky, for seven Norma Talmadge and nine Frank Keenan pictures, to be released early in November. The Waldorf, Akron, and the Strand, Canton, both of them first-run houses, have already signed up for the series, commencing with Talmadge in "Fifty-Fifty," and Keenan in "The Coward."

A. C. Lebensberger has been named assistant manager of the Cleveland office of the Famous Players Film Service, Inc., succeeding G. H. Penn, who recently resigned to become affiliated with the Cleveland Goldwyn office.

The Cleveland Paramount exchange has put out two new road men, both of them well known to exhibitors in this territory. They are W. W. Kulp, former exchange manager, and J. B. Reilly, who used to be connected with the Metro office.

Baltimore Profits by Closing Order

The old adage that "It is an ill wind that blows nobody good" is borne out by the Baltimore theatre owners, who have turned the Health Department order closing their houses during the influenza epidemic to an advantage. All of them have turned in and given their theatres a thorough cleaning and renovating, and are preparing for the increased patronage

Most of the theatre managers are glad that the closing order, which has been in effect for nearly two weeks, has lasted as long as it has. They say that during normal years it is next to impossible to give their theatres the cleaning which they need, unless they close their doors for a week or two.

Strand Books New Brady Film

By an arrangement effected between Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand, and William A. Brady, Mr. Brady's picturization of "Little Women" will be presented for the first time on any screen at the Strand theatre the week beginning Sunday, November 10.

Harley Knoles directed "Little Women." The four "Little Women," Meg, Jo, Beth and Amy, are portrayed respectively by Isabel Lamon, Dorothy Bernard, Lillian Hall and Florence Flynn. Henry Hull is John Brooke and Conrad Nagel plays Laurie.

Dayton Redecorates

While all Dayton, Ohio, houses are closed all of the theatres are taking advantage and are redecorating their house to some extent.

New York Candidates Go on Record

Systematic Work by State Exhibitors' League in Present Campaign—Response to Questionnaire on Sunday Opening and Censorship Proves Gratifying

WHAT is declared to be the first extensive pre-election survey of candidates by the motion picture industry has just been completed in New York State by the Laws and Legislation Committee of the New York State Exhibitors' League.

The committee has succeeded in placing practically all candidates from the gubernatorial nominees, Whitman and Smith, down to the Senate and Assembly aspirants on record in black and white as to their views on such questions as Sunday opening and State censorship. It is said that the response has been so gratifying as to make the exhibitors most optimistic concerning the prospects for fair treatment at the hands of the next Legislature.

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the New York State League; Samuel I. Berman and Charles L. O'Reilly, constitute the committee which has been laboring strenuously on the survey for over a month.

A Typical Letter

The following letter to Governor Whitman, who is a candidate for re-election, is typical of the communications sent the politicians. In cases where an immediate reply was not forthcoming follow-up work was done. With the views all compiled the State Committee was then in position to take whatever steps were deemed necessary before election.

The letter follows:

His Excellency, Charles S. Whitman,
Governor of the State of New York,
Capitol, Albany, N. Y.

Sir:

We respectfully invite your attention to the fact that the United States Government has declared the Motion Picture Industry an essential in the successful prosecution of the war. The motion picture houses are awakening and keeping afire and afresh the spirit of patriotism throughout the country, and as much, if not more, than any other one force in the land, welding the diversified interests and races composing our citizenship into one invincible, unconquerable, loyal and liberty loving people. Sixty seconds after war was declared, our great Government found sixteen thousand motion picture theatres throughout the land fully equipped for service, on the working line. From then until now, the motion picture houses have been daily instructing, encouraging and inspiring eighty million citizens of our Republic. They are the sacred school houses within which are taught in the most effective manner the duties of citizenship, and where devotion to country is inspired.

As propaganda, the motion picture screen is recognized as a great and powerful agency by the Washington authorities. The admission tax paid by patrons of the motion picture theatre is a source of enormous revenue to pay the cost of a successful conclusion of the great war.

THE MOTION PICTURE HOUSES IN THIS STATE ARE RECRUITING STATIONS OF AMERICAN PATRIOTISM.

We, the undersigned, representing the motion picture theatres of the State of New York, are desirous of ascertaining first hand by word of reply from you your views and proposed attitude with reference to the Motion Picture Industry.

In the fifteen hundred places of amusement operating in the State of New York, the combined attendance, conservatively estimated, is in excess of one million persons daily. We, therefore, at this time deem it our duty to inform the patrons of our places of amusement throughout the State by motion picture film, slides to be projected on the screen, and in our house programs, and in some localities by public speakers at each performance, your views with reference to the motion picture.

May we ask that in your reply you specify your views and proposed attitude on the following:

1. Are you against the creation by act of Legislature of a Motion Picture Censor Board in the State of New York?

2. Are you in favor by enactment by the next Legislature of such laws as would tend to clarify so as to permit the exhibition of motion pictures throughout New York State on Sunday?

Your further views with reference to the exhibition of motion pictures on Sunday is respectfully requested.

Your early reply will be appreciated.

Very respectfully,

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, New York State.

SYDNEY S. COHEN,
President.
SAMUEL I. BERMAN,
Executive Secretary.
CHAS. L. O'REILLY,
Secretary to Committee on Laws and Legislation.

"DARK-AGE" LETTERS

Not as Dark as the Theatres During the Reign of Influenza

IT'S a queer thing, but the letters we get while the "dark-age" is on, and King Influenza is reigning supreme, are not so gloomy as one might think.

"Cheerful" is a moderate word to use in reference to the following two gloom-dispellers:

"I would not attempt to run a show without MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and I think that any man who does will make a failure. At least he must have some paper in the trade, and I think there is nothing else quite so good as the NEWS."

(Signed) H. T. HODGE,
Gem Theatre, Abilene, Texas.

AND THIS ONE!

"It seems queer to be receiving a paper on the trade in this far-off place, but we are just as live a little exhibitor as there is (in our estimation), and the best trade paper is none too good for us. Therefore we renew our subscription to MOTION PICTURE NEWS. I value it very highly."

(Signed) C. J. APPEL,
Empire Theatre, Timmons, Ont.

National Association at Work

Following some weeks after the exhibitors and within a short time before election the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry sent a letter to all candidates for Congress requesting their views on the motion picture industry.

The National Association letter declared:

"The motion picture has outgrown its original sphere as a popular amusement and has become a necessity for the dissemination of all kinds of Government propaganda. Today it is looked upon as the most powerful force in existence for the moulding of public opinion.

"Its work as a direct force in aid of the war program has been enormous in both scope and magnitude. Its work after the war in the reconstruction period that is to follow will be still greater. In the industrial Americanization of the world it is the greatest medium that can be utilized.

"At the present time the motion picture industry is going through a precarious period of its evolution. It is not in a position to stand any additional burdens such as would be inflicted by adverse legislation or would tend to cramp its natural growth and expension.

"The motion picture industry is now a solidified body with an organization covering the entire country. May we have an expression of opinion from you relative to your attitude on any form of legislation that may come up that would prove detrimental to the motion picture.

"We wish to do all we can through our representatives throughout the country to assist in the election of candidates for legislative office who are favorable to the motion picture.

"Will you favor us with an expression of your views on the subject?

"Your very truly,

"(Signed) FREDERICK H. ELLIOTT,
"Executive Secretary."

From a Minister!

EDITOR'S NOTE—The fact that Motion Picture News never accepts a subscription without actual assurance that the subscriber has a valid connection with the motion picture field is responsible for the following letter—and for some of the cheeriest moments we have spent in many a week.

Pastor Fruhling's letter should be read by every exhibitor—and filed for future reference. It shows how, in one town, the local exhibitor and church are working together harmoniously and to mutual benefit. It shows how the feelings of prejudice on both sides are disappearing rapidly—and soon will disappear entirely through the repetition in every section of the country of incidents like that treated below. The letter follows:

Vacaville, Cal., Oct. 17, 1918.

Motion Picture News, Inc.,
729 Seventh Ave., N. Y.

Dear Sir:

In reply to yours of the 10th inst., I might say that I am an exhibitor, but I will let you decide. Our church exhibits moving pictures every Sunday night, and we put on big features recently released. Since I am responsible for the bookings, I desire to have a magazine such as yours to keep me well posted. There is but one little motion picture theatre in our town, and its owner and I co-operate very nicely. My screen prevents my people from going to the movie on Sunday nights, and consequently it hurts the theatre on that night. But it also is educating lots of people to enjoy the motion pictures, who before never went to the movie, and consequently the little theatre does a better business during the week. I advertise his special features on our screen, and Mr. Godfrey helps me in many ways.

It might interest you to know that whereas about 40 used to be our average attendance Sunday nights, since putting on pictures we average 454 in attendance, sometimes going as high as 600—and in this little town of 1,200 population. We put on "Hearts of the World," and showed that wonderful picture to 950 in the one day.

Our equipment is, I think, a good one. The operating room is a regulation steel cage built in accordance with the underwriters' requirements; the machine is a latest model Simplex Type "S." We change the indirect current to direct by means of a rectifier. Our hall is the largest in town.

I believe in the motion picture business as well as in the use of the motion picture by the churches. The churches' use of the screen will not only increase the volume of business for the film trade, but will do much to create a demand for clean and wholesome pictures, thus helping greatly to maintain high standards of production. If it isn't asking too much of you, will you let me know, candidly, what you think of our enterprise and my attitude? At least please let us remain a subscriber to your valuable magazine.

Yours sincerely,
A. F. FRUHLING,
Pastor First Presbyterian Church,
Vacaville, Cal.

Political Slides a Boomerang

Jersey Republican Brings Industry Into Limelight with Complaints About Slides—An Exhibitor's Letter

SLIDES supplied to motion picture theatres in every section of the country within the past two weeks through the instrumentality of the Democratic National Committee resulted in bringing the industry into front page prominence when a Jersey candidate used them as the subject of a heated statement Tuesday.

The slides called for the election of candidates "in harmony with President Wilson." Senator Baird, the Republican seeking re-election in New Jersey, alleged that the text of the slides showed they had been prepared almost simultaneously with the President's famous statement of last week, and proved the latter to be a carefully premeditated political move.

Fred Hawley, of 80 Fifth Avenue, who supplies motion picture lists and directories, furnished the slides to theatres. Following is an exhibitor's protest against the slides received by Motion Picture News during the week:

IRIS THEATRE
Belle Fourche, S. D., Oct. 22, 1918.

Mr. Wm. A. Johnson, Editor,
Motion Picture News,
New York City, N. Y.

Dear Sir:

I am inclosing a copy of letter I wrote to Mr. Fred Hawley, who appears to be one of the Democratic campaign leaders, also inclosed the letter from him.

I do not know your politics, but I do believe that your trade journal is free enough to take up this matter. I have explained in my letter to Mr. Hawley what I thought of his method of trying to enlist the picture screens in a campaign which I nor any other theatre manager wishes to take sides. I do not professs to be a Republican, Democrat, Socialist or have any other connections with politics, but I do stand for a square deal. Mr. Hawley is attempting (so it appears to me) to enlist the aid of picture screens in politics under the guise of being a war measure, and a duty for theatres to show. I personally call this one of the rankest pieces of such work I have met with. There is no doubt but what hundreds of theatre managers will show these slides thinking they are helping to win the war. Why didn't Mr. Hawley write and ask what our advertising rates were, and if we could make room for showing his slides?

We get paid for advertising on our screen the same as newspapers get paid for space. We play no favorites in the line of politics.

I would like to see your journal take up this matter through its columns, and you can print both letters.

Yours, a booster for the NEWS,
LEO PETERSON.

The Hawley letter, against which Exhibitor Peterson protested, follows:

80 FIFTH AVENUE
NEW YORK
October 18, 1918.

Iris Theatre,
Belle Fourche, S. Dak.

Dear Mr. Manager:

At this critical period of our history supporters of the President are needed in Congress.

I am sending you a set of slides, which, if shown in your theatre at repeated intervals from October 20 to November 5, will aid in electing men who are in harmony with President Wilson.

These slides which are being supplied by the Democratic National Committee contain messages pointing out the necessity of unity of action in Washington. They should help in crystallizing a sentiment for the support of President Wilson as the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy.

I trust that you are in accord with this sentiment, and that you will aid us in this patriotic work.

Thanking you for your co-operation, I remain,
Cordially yours,
FRED HAWLEY.

Honor Roll

A. Libson, manager of the Bijou theatre at Cincinnati, Ohio, is now a member of Uncle Sam's Army.

Henry Kaden Baugh, who combined the double duties of managing the Opera House, a large motion picture theatre in New Philadelphia, Ohio, with those of cashier of the New Philadelphia Bank, has left for Camp Taylor, Kentucky, to enter the officers' training school there. Baugh is seeking a commission in the field artillery branch of the service.

W. F. Sexton, manager of the Family theatre at Toronto, has received a cable that his son has been seriously wounded while serving with the Canadian troops in France.

Sidney Rosenthal, well known Ohio film salesman, is now stationed at Alliance in a Government capacity.

The first one in the Los Angeles film colony to die in action, according to the casualty reports, is Sergt. Lawrence R. Peyton, of Denver, Colorado, well known in picture circles.

Phil Goldstone, well known Mid-West Film man, has been in the Navy for five months and is in charge of the Photographic department of the Navy Relief Society at Great Lakes, Ill.

Cleo J. Doherty, shipping clerk for the Pathe Exchange at Omaha, has left to join the colors at Camp Bowie, Texas.

Herman Pollak, well known exhibitor, is now with the Medical Officers' Training Corps, at Camp Greenleaf.

Two New England Houses Change Ownership

Two New England theatres changed ownership, at Littleton, N. H., and Brattleboro, Vt.

The Premier theatre, Littleton, N. H., has been sold by William P. Gray, of Lewiston, Me., to W. A. Davis, formerly assistant manager of the Strand theatre, Portland, Me.

Mrs. Emma C. Farrington, of Brattleboro, Vt., who has very successfully managed the Princess theatre, the popular photoplay house of Southern Vermont, has leased the Auditorium, the legitimate theatre in the same town. The policy of this house will be to play the best of the road attractions, also the large special picture productions.

In and Out of Town

John Cecil Graham, General Foreign Representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, sailed for England and will remain abroad some three months, during which time he will consult with representatives of the Famous Players-Lasky organization in England and France.

Lieut. N. W. Davidson of the Royal Flying Corps, formerly Vancouver manager for the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., holders of the Pathe franchise for Canada, was a visitor in New York this last week with L. E. Ouimet, the president of the Specialty Film Import.

Cleveland Gets First Films by Airplane

The first motion picture film to arrive in Cleveland by aerial post was delivered last Wednesday morning to the local Pathe exchange in the Belmont building, of which Mr. A. M. Holah is manager.

C. C. Palmer of Hicksville, Ohio, was the manager who consigned the film to this city. It was a news film which was needed for immediate delivery in another town. Manager Holah notified Mr. Palmer to send it to Cleveland by the quickest route. Inasmuch as Hicksville is in the direct line of communication of the airplane route from Chicago to Cleveland, he arranged to have the package taken up by the aerial messenger when he made his next stop in that city. That happened to be Tuesday evening. The package arrived in Cleveland Wednesday morning, and was delivered to the Pathe exchange before ten o'clock of the same day. "Ordinarily we allowed two days each way for a package for Hicksville," Mr. Holah said. "This trial delivery shows the possibilities which the aerial service will open up to the motion picture industry. The saving of time and expense, to both exhibitor and exchange will be tremendous. Allowing such a short time for delivery, we shall not require half so many prints of a film to cover the territory, as we now use. At the present time, prints are working about half the time. The other half of the time they are on their way to and from the exchanges."

This was the first film delivered into Cleveland by the air route. It is also said to be the first delivery of film made in this manner anywhere in the United States.

Spoor-Thompson Open New York Office

It was announced this week that the New York sales office and service bureau of the Spoor-Thompson Laboratories has been opened in rooms 1403 and 1404 at 110 West Fortieth street. Charles F. Stark, recently appointed sales manager of the company, is in charge, assisted by M. P. Fitzpatrick.

Influenza Claims More Picture People

Additional deaths and cases of influenza were reported this week from the scourge that has been sweeping the country.

One of the first deaths reported was that of D. L. Cornelius, former manager of the Strand theatre in New Orleans. He died at the naval camp near the southern city. Mr. Cornelius was among the best known southern showmen.

Jack Woods was another New Orleans man reported among the victims. He was manager of the branch of General Film at New Orleans. Foster Olroyd, present manager of the Strand in that city, was said to be recovering last week from an attack. E. V. Richards, Jr., general manager of the Saenger Amusement Company, has fully recovered, it is reported.

James Cary, owner of the motion picture theatre at Lee, Mass., died at Glens Falls, N. Y., of pneumonia last week. He had gone to his home in Glens Falls and had succeeded in nursing his mother and sister through attacks when he was stricken.

Charles Franklin Oldt, manager of the Third Street theatre in Easton, Pa., died last week following an attack of influenza.

It was learned in Cleveland, with regret, last week that Allen Schnitzer, brother of J. I. Schnitzer, Universal district manager, died a victim of influenza. He was connected with the Universal exchange in Pittsburgh, where he lived with his mother.

It has already been published in the trade press that Harry Reichenbach lost his father, Charles Reichenbach, and his brother, Irving Reichenbach.

John Wellman, for five years with General Film Company as a bookkeeper, died last Wednesday in Washington after a short but sharp illness from pneumonia. District Manager Elder and Branch Manager J. E. Flax arranged the funeral details, as Mr. Wellman had no family in this country.

Merrill Takes Another Milwaukee Theatre

It was reported from Milwaukee this week that the Merrill Theatre Company of Milwaukee, Wis., which operates the Merrill theatre, has leased the Strand, a downtown house there having a seating capacity of 2,000. Both houses will be managed under the personal direction of E. C. Bostick, it is said.

Manager Bostick has been at the Merrill for the past two years, and it has been his policy to operate on the open booking plan. This idea will be continued at both the Strand and Merrill theatres.

Baby Daughter to Binneys

Harold J. Binney, whose production of "Velvet and Rags" with Vangie Valentine, was interrupted by an attack of pneumonia, is now convalescing and expects to resume operation in a week or so. Mrs. Binney gave birth to a girl since Mr. Binney's illness, and the father and daughter have never met, for Mr. Binney's condition has been so serious that a few days ago his life was despaired of.

Lang Compiles Films for Industrial Section

A striking demonstration of the value of the motion picture in war activities is found in the films which Philip B. Lang is now compiling and editing for the Industrial Education Section of the Ordnance Department. Mr. Lang, who is widely known as an author and editor, entered upon his governmental duties last August. The films which he prepares from selected material are shown exclusively in war plants. They depict the activities of our armies overseas, the work of the "industrial army" at home and the vital necessity of continuous productive effort on the part of those who supply the military forces.

Two pictures edited by Mr. Lang, "America's Defenders" and "Freedom Forever," each in one reel, are now being circulated in the plants and he is at present engaged in the preparation of others.

Mr. Lang has requested the MOTION PICTURE NEWS to bring his highly important work to the attention of producers who have scenes, either topical or dramatic, which deal with different phases of the war. These, he states, can be incorporated in his films to good advantage, as producers who already have patriotically co-operated with the Industrial Education Section of the Ordnance Department have found to their gratification. He emphasizes the fact that the films are not shown in theatres or any place where an admission fee is charged.

Mr. Lang's address is District Ordnance Office, Industrial Education Section, 1107 Broadway.

Universal Loses Theatre in Havana, Cuba

Universal's theatre, the Campoamor, and its exchange, containing thousands of reels of films, were wiped out by fire October 24 in Havana, Cuba. Dispatches that reached the company's headquarters in New York this week report that its property in the Cuban city was a total loss, and that the manager, B. Lichtig, and his wife, barely escaped with their lives.

Mr. and Mrs. Lichtig occupied an apartment on the second floor above the exchange offices. They were rescued from the front window by firemen.

The blaze occurred at about 7 o'clock in the morning. Mr. and Mrs. Lichtig were still asleep at the time, and became aware of the fire only when the fire apparatus arrived. The pair were helped down a ladder garbed in their nightgowns.

It is understood that the Universal will take immediate steps to establish a new exchange and resume the business in Cuba.

Cohen Buys Another

Sydney S. Cohen has purchased from Messrs. Heyne and Scharf the North Star theatre, occupying the entire block on Fifth avenue between 106th and 107th streets, with an orchestral seating capacity of 1,500.

The theatre is being extensively renovated and will be operated along similar lines to his other theatres.

Exhibitor Service Bureau

Making the Most of It

There Are Things Wrong With the Material You Get, But Are You Doing Your Part to the Utmost?

WE believe that the readers of this department will bear us out in the statement that this bureau has conducted a strong fight for better material to be supplied to the smaller exhibitor for use in exploitation. We have singled out the smaller exhibitor because the man in the larger city, who has the advantage of reproducing trade paper advertising, of making attractive cut-outs from the stills and who can go the limit on hand designing, doesn't need these aids as do the smaller men.

In the past year, and since the time that this department was started, there has been a remarkable improvement in the material that is being supplied. We know that it has come, in a considerable measure, from the opinions of the exhibitors who have recorded themselves here—because the producers and the distributors of the pictures know that this is the forum of the showmen of the country and because they know that this department speaks for and by them. But there is still a long way to go.

We are not minimizing the shortcomings of some of the producers when we say that there is a big part of the fault that lies with the exhibitors themselves. We are not referring to those cases where the exhibitor gets no material at all with which to work—and there have been many such complaints recorded—but where the exhibitor himself fails to do his best with the material that is at hand. We are referring to those cases in which the exhibitor says: "Oh, well, the exchange hasn't sent me hardly anything and I guess I'll just slap this in." And he goes ahead, with the result that the public knows that the display has just been slapped in, and concludes in the same manner of thinking that all the theatre manager wants is to get the price of his ticket.

Now here is a thought that is well worth taking home: Don't you imagine that if ninety per cent of the exhibitors of the country showed an inclination to try to do this with the material supplied them—even granting that it is poor—that the producer would strive to do a great deal more for the exhibitors as a whole in the future? Lack of demand for cut matter that is prepared at great expense is largely responsible for failure of the producer to produce more and better of this matter.

You are familiar with the town loafer in your community who is always complaining "I never had a chance." And if you will listen to him he will give you a reason why every one of the other fellows has succeeded, but he will never grant them brains and industry. The man who is kicking never had a chance because he never tried to get out in the middle of the road and grab one off. And you exhibitors who are complaining about the material that you get will never "get a chance" to get better matter until you begin trying to do things with the matter that you do get.

On the opposite page we reproduce three of the VERY BEST advertisements that we have seen, considering the size of the city. They are the work of J. H. Heath, who owns the Grand Photoplay theatre in West Liberty, Iowa. No, West Liberty is not a suburb of Liberty, Iowa, or anything of that sort. It is merely a metropolis with the census population of 1,666.

Yes, if this man had the facilities of the advertising manager in Portland or Cleveland or Los Angeles he could have done better. We might suggest here a dozen things in each of the displays that could have been improved had he the facilities at his hand—engraving plants, hand lettering, and the like. But, for taking advantage of the opportunities that he has, Mr. Heath is a hundred per cent perfect advertiser, and he deserves as much credit for what he has accomplished as do those who are known to you through the Motion Picture News as the best advertisers of the country.

HE USED HIS OPPORTUNITIES AND HE MADE THE MOST OF THEM.

Let's see what he has done. He has a weekly paper at his command for his advertising. It is one of the kind with the "patent insides." Most small-town exhibitors think that advertising doesn't count because they haven't a big metropolitan paper available, and there are as many more of them that think that because it happens to be a country weekly that most anything goes. That is in line with the idea that you might not as well do anything because you haven't everything in the world to do it with.

Mr. Heath used 8½ inches across three columns in advertising "Dodging a Million," and we want to say right here that it takes a country exhibitor with enterprise to use this amount of space in a country weekly in a town of 1,666. He used one of the single-column stock scene cuts supplied by Goldwyn and he used the selling lines from that company. It is a splendidly written advertisement, and that Mr. Heath is thinking and writing for himself is proven by the fact that he has grasped the idea on displaying the Hearst-Pathe Weekly as well as the feature. As we have said, there are improvements that could have been made. For instance, we would have brought out the line "You Remember Her" and the name of the star in larger type, but it's a mighty good selling argument as it is.

Two columns 7 inches has been employed in exploiting "Our Little Wife." Do you get the atmosphere of this display? It is daintiness. Again the manager has read his press sheet carefully and has adopted the best of it. He has a display here that has not been beaten on any advertisement on this picture that we have seen anywhere, except for the failure to bring out the name of the star as strongly as should have been done. The argument of some exhibitors is in cases like this that the star is not sufficiently well known in their territory. But isn't that partly your fault and isn't it up to you to make them well known?

But the air of daintiness, in keeping with the picture, has been carried out even to the border. The line cut that is used here is much more effective in this case than would have been a half tone. The "She's Here, etc." matter is most effectively displayed.

On the Jack Pickford production there is used one of the stock cuts that was provided by Famous Players-Lasky. The matter is largely taken from the plan book. The name of the star and the title are a little too small, and the boxed effect that makes "On the Same Bill" stand out ahead of anything else, is bad, but still the selling argument gets over. The "Saturday" should have been in caps, thus furnishing a contract with the lower case of the other matter.

These are improvements that could have been made by running the borders into the cuts and that sort of thing, but the manager who has to deal with the printer on the country weekly is wise in trying not to get too involved. He generally gets messed-up effects.

We want to repeat that Mr. Heath is a hundred per cent advertiser. He had availed himself of his material—splendidly.

Madera, Cal., has 2,404, according to Uncle Sam's figures, but it has two daily papers. A. C. H. Chamberlin, manager of the Opera House, is a firm believer in advertising, and he does not let the sun set on a day when he fails to use the papers. Mr. Chamberlin is another man who knows about his pictures before he starts to advertise them, and he has used good sense in making the display on the Theda Bara picture. We must admit that we do not like these heavy black borders and that the display would have been much more effective had the same rule been followed all the way around, because the mourning effect diminished the appeal of the cut, but still he has put the picture over mighty well in the 5 inches double that he has used. Best of all, he has the selling talk and all of the chief ideas.

Majestic, Jackson, Mich., which is a city of 34,097, is another house that runs to heavy border effects, but in this case he used

What's Your Best Work of the Year?

By Sam W. B. Cohn

Manager Liberty Theatre, Spokane, Wash.

THIS is indeed an opportune time to review ones activities during the past season. With theatres closed everywhere, on account of the influenza epidemic, exhibitors now have time to scratch their heads and reflect.

"What have I done or accomplished during the past months which has made my theatre stand out from the other fellows?"

"Is my house more popular with the town folks than my competitor's theatre and if so, why," While in this retrospective mood it will do no harm to seek flaws in your system of catering to the public. While you are cleaning house physically, it is a good time to do the same mentally.

While the janitors and painters were engaged in rejuvenating our theatre, here in Spokane, during the epidemic, I, personally supervised the job and from so doing was awakened and amazed to learn that so much dust and dirt could gather in a house which was so thoroughly cleaned each night by two able janitors. It seemed impossible that there could be a particle of dust remaining, but the general house cleaning we gave the theatre proved to the contrary. This fact set me to thinking and I wondered whether I, in the past, as manager of the Liberty, had overlooked any bets for the betterment of our programs, service and publicity. Until this time I was absolutely confident that I was giving my patrons the best of everything; that I was doing all in my power to bring to their attention the fact that we were offering them the best possible amusement and entertainment and that our service was par excellence. In retrospect I found that I had passed up many bets along these lines. I have just mentioned and I concluded that the reason that I had not discovered this fact before was that we were moving in such a fast cycle—day in and day out—that I had never stopped to reflect or diagnose my past efforts.

I just took it for granted "that there was no dust in my house." Do you get my point?

Then too, I learned in retrospect that we had accomplished some things of which I am very proud but which I did not consider exceptionally brilliant at the time I accomplished them.

For instance, there was the "Liberty Night" which we staged during the Third loan campaign. At that time we were not furnished trailers made by the various movie stars boosting the loan. I had anticipated this, however, and a couple of months prior to the campaign, I wired to several of the favorite stars asking them to make a special trailer advertising the Loan for my "Liberty Night." From these wires I got one hundred per cent returns. "Doug" Fairbanks, Dorothy Dalton, Enid Bennett, Charlie Ray, Tom Ince and others of equal prominence in the movie field complied with my request and my Liberty Night went over with a bang. We had singing, short talks, and everything necessary to bring the need of the loan home to the audience and when the last trailer was run we gathered up a mighty fine showing of pledge cards. You will bear in mind that this was all done during the Third loan, before the industry was so finely organized for the purpose of boosting the drives.

I could go on and name a dozen things which we accomplished during the past twelve months of which I am proud. It is also true that there are some instances of which I am not so proud. Not because I fell down on anything which I had started, but because I did not start some things which would have been of great benefit to the prestige of our theatre.

In closing this article I want to call attention to one other thing of which we of the Liberty theatre, Spokane, are proud. It is the fact that this house has gotten squarely behind every patriotic and war movement or measure. We have not waited to be solicited; we went out soliciting war work to do. Our screen carries every message that the administration sends out; we are the advertising agency for the Red Cross Shop in our town and if there is a war charity that is pulled off within a radius of one hundred miles of Spokane and we haven't got a hand in the advertising of it, well, there's something wrong somewhere.

YOUR BEST IDEA

We Asked Leaders to Tell Us Theirs. What's Yours?

WE have asked members of the Advisory Board to tell the exhibitors of the nation the best ideas that they have had during the past year—the best things they have done to further the interest of the theatre. The first of these will be found here.

In the letter to these men we have said that during the closing period the exhibitors had a chance to think, and those of us who do not have opportunity to sit down now and then to cast up their successes and their lost opportunities are not going to get the most out of the promises of the future.

We called on the members of the Advisory Board first because they are always willing to serve their fellow exhibitors. But the invitation is open to you as well. Won't you sit down and write to us the big idea that you have put over. Tell us how you did it, and send us matter to illustrate the article, if it is available.

If you have a kick coming, if there is something that could be done better in any part of the industry, let us hear from you and we will help you out.

Now is the time to think and to make your THOUGHTS WORTH MONEY TO YOU.

"AT THE ZERO HOUR"

This is the first of a new series of articles on advertising by Mr. McCormick, whose past articles in the Motion Picture News have attracted so much attention. You all know that "The Zero Hour" is the name given by our soldier boys in France to the time just before they are to go "over the top." And so the title applies to the moment just before the motion picture theatre manager is preparing to put his picture over.

By S. Barret McCormick
Managing Director, Circle Theatre, Indianapolis

The last strains of the orchestra had died away and were being supplanted by the unmelodious bang of upturning seats. In the projection booth the operator was eagerly putting the dead show back in its can and gumming on the caution label. The advertising man of the Mastodon theatre, seated at his desk, reluctantly put his final O. K. on the revised proof of the Sunday ad. and settled back into that state of nervous expectancy that inevitably precedes the opening of a new attraction.

Very, very carefully during the week he had laid his barrage fire of advance advertising and timed his shots and calculated the resisting power of his eternal "enemy," the public. Up in the big newspaper plant amid the stench of scorched matrix and hot metal they were putting the amusement section to "bed." Tomorrow the Mastodon had to go over the top again and the line in front of the box office when the doors opened would tell the story.

It was "The Zero Hour" in advertising, when the bubble of confidence feels the pin prick of doubt.

That eternity between "one minute to go" and the first step on the ladder never held more dubious seconds than this Zero Hour, and no gallant trooper ready to climb over the parapet imagined wilder dreams of what might have been than the phantasmagoria that flickered before the mental eye of the advertising man.

The Zero Hour is always a good time to meet the advertising man, it always opens up new channels of thought and brings out a logical analysis of the problems that confront him—particularly so if you are the advertising man and can meet yourself in this dual communion.

On the Subject of Democracy in Advertising

An opened copy of Printers' Ink lay on the advertising man's desk and he quoted from an article that seemed to interest him: "A great deal of advertising has either too little democracy in its manner or too much." "Now," commented the advertising man, "democracy as a word is being rather overworked of late; we are inclined to requisition it on the least provocation. Before the war we were likely to use it only in describing some individual who had achieved success and could still eat at the Automat or who could sit beside a frowsy individual in a day coach and not squirm at the thought of the invisible cooties. But now when we apply the word 'democracy' to advertising we are very likely to become so absorbed in 'calling a spade a spade' that we forget that a spade can have a very sharp edge and a very attractive handle and can dig much faster than the bare hand or a cedar shingle."

The Unvarnished Truth is a nice old copy-book maxim, but when we take the Truth and marcelle it and sprinkle on a little of the essence of attractiveness and send it out on the highways and byways of commerce we soon find out which one brings home the bacon.

It is the business of advertising to find the hidden charms of Truth; we've got to hang all our faith on that, for Truth is the

The theory in exploiting "The Unchastened Woman" was that she was such an abnormal creature that conventional method would fail to carry an adequate impression of her. The "Cubist" or "Futurist" idea of illustration was therefore resorted to, an art layout composed entirely of "Impressions" framed a sales talk that strove to analyze her in a whimsical and half-humorous mood. When this campaign was planned it was realized that perhaps not ten per cent of the advertisements' readers knew what a "Futurist" was, but the psychology of it was that those who did know would flatter themselves that they did, and want to see the film because of its ultra-modern theme and the other ninety per cent would use their imagination, form their own impressions and desire to know the answer

L. C. BARNES, manager of the Elite theatre, Kalamazoo, Mich., has originated one of the best ideas yet in aid of the Government war work, and at the same time boosting his theatre. It is designed to encourage the women and children in the purchase of War Savings Stamps and at the same time to increase his matinee business.

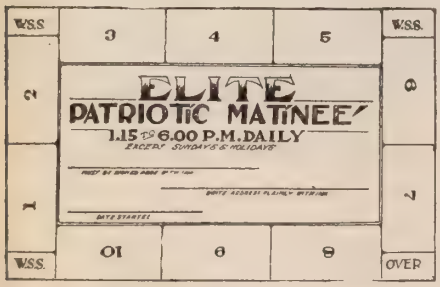
Mr. Barnes has issued cards, which are reproduced here, which are to be presented with the paid admissions at matinee performances. As this card is presented for the first time space No. 1 is punched, and then similarly with different visits to the theatre until the entire ten numbers have been punched. When the card is full the owner is given a War Savings Stamp. The cards are not good on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays.

There is one condition listed on the back of the cards which we do not consider wise, and that is that these will be punched for children only when paying the full admission prices. Of course, we understand that Mr. Barnes could not afford to give a twenty-five-cent stamp with ten five-cent admissions, but it would be wise for the exhibitor to extend the time further and call for, say, twenty admissions for the children. You can readily see that a wrong impression is left if you ask the children to pay a higher price to get the thrift reward. On the surface it is going to appear to many that the patriotic motive is being used to boost the revenue of the theatre, and this is something that wants to be carefully avoided ALWAYS.



Attractive advertising, such as is reproduced here, was used in making the announcements of the offer. It's a mighty good stunt and one that every exhibitor can use, by making the modifications necessary to his theatre and his admission prices. It helps to wipe out the idea prevalent in some communities that attending motion pictures is wasting money that is needed for war work.

Sometimes when your "goat" is gone, it pays to sweep out the "stall."

FOX'S Terminal theatre, Newark, N. J., used an entire page in advertising "Why America Will Win." Our only objection to this display is the fact that the name of the picture was sacrificed. Especially when the name itself has a selling talk it is mighty bad business to play it down for any reason. Another line that ought to have been made far more prominent is that telling that the film is the story of the life of Gen. Pershing.

Now it was fine business to use a number of cuts showing scenes in the life of the American commander and evidently the effect that the designer sought to bring out was to make the drawing of the general stand out and give the selling punch to the whole display. But as good as the drawing is the figure of the mother results in confusion. We would have rather reduced the size of the illustrations and have played the title and the Pershing end much stronger.

Yet, with these faults it is an advertisement that will be read and that will convince.

THIS is a cracking good idea for a "combination" advertisement from the Strand theatre, Bridgeport, Conn. At first glance the thing that impresses you is that there is far too much reading matter and you get the idea that the theatre is advertising the bill for the various days of the week. That would have been avoided if the line "A Series of Smiles" had been used in sufficiently large type to make it stand out. The idea of the ad writer was splendid, but it was poorly carried out.

Practically every picture on the bill had a smile in it and the manager had the right idea in making that idea stand out, yet the typographical effect was so bad that the opposite result was accomplished—the patron had to read the SMALLER type to get the MAIN idea. Needless to say that the lines across the advertisement are unnecessary. A dash would have given the same meaning and would have avoided the "slashed up" appearance of the whole display.

Let the escort of every one leaving your theatre be Satisfaction. Advertising will bring them there.

MAX STEARN, manager of the Majestic theatre, Columbus, O., did good work when he took advantage of the lay-off and the fact that the other theatres were not advertising to make his announcement that Geraldine Farrar had been added to the list of stars who would be seen regularly at the Majestic. The names of the first two of her new pictures in which she would appear at the Majestic were given, an announcement of the coming of "The Romance of Tarzan" as well as various other of the coming attractions.

We venture the assertion that the Majestic theatre has never before used an advertisement that will pay better. Most managers are unable to see why it pays to advertise when their theatres are closed and they cannot do business. But it is a fact that when you have something to say and your competitors are not appealing to the public, that is the very time to say it. Columbus people were all soon talking about the coming of Miss Farrar to the city when the fact would not have made ten per cent as great an impression had the normal amount of motion picture advertising been appearing in the papers. Space used is nine inches across three columns.

"Pop, goes the weasel." And the weasel slinks away; he is not one of the advertising sort.

LOEW'S THEATRE, Hamilton, Ontario, made a real effort to offset the idea that theatres are ill-ventilated and disease-spreaders, which was often suggested before the local theatres were closed down on account of the epidemic, by a series of interesting advertisements.

In one advertisement the Loew house was referred to as "The House of Perfect Ventilation" and the reasons for this statement were given as follows: The air is changed every three minutes; five fans either eject or suck air for ventilation and there are twenty-one double-door exists and one hundred windows in the theatre which was only recently built. Announcement was made in this advertisement that "Not one Loew employe had been affected" by the epidemic though the ushers and others mingled with thousands all day long. The theatre even distributed copies of the official health bulletin on the cause, effect and treatment of influenza to patrons.

On October 15, the management announced that 8,000 people had paid admissions to the theatre on the previous day.

BECAUSE they have been employed so successfully the use of the newspaper "extra" form of advertising appears to be becoming popular. The latest to employ this was Theo. L. Hays, who has taken over the management of the Liberty theatre, St. Paul, Minn., in addition to the New Garrick.

"Carmen of the Klondyke" offered an excellent opportunity for this most sensational style of display and the reason that this was adopted was because Mr. Hays wanted to get the name of the new Liberty theatre on every tongue. It doubtless accomplished that result, but we wouldn't recommend this as a usual thing because it is likely to keep as many people away from a high class house as it will bring in. It makes it appear that the whole picture is built around brute force and we imagine that there are lots of women and children who would not respond to this appeal, but who would come if the picture were exploited in the usual style.

But it's a good thing to "wake 'em up" once in awhile.

The show's not over until the last patron has gone away with a smile of satisfaction.

"IT CAN'T BE DONE." You will remember that beginning to one of these comments and think this is the same old story. And it is just about except that we are using a different advertisement to illustrate the same conclusions.

Boyd theatre, Omaha, had an excellent bill here, but it made the mistake of trying to play up the two attractions equally. The space between them was divided with utmost precision and the advertising matter that was used came from the Universal exchange. It was good matter, if one or the other pictures had been featured, but the effect of trying to feature both has been distinctly "messy."

If you have the double bill idea firm in your head you had better use simply the names of the stars and the titles. You may be able to get over the idea of quantity then. But when you try to say a lot about each of two productions you dare the man to read them both.

Sell him one or the other; alternate the selling arguments if necessary. But if you were a merchant and a man came into your store for shoes and a pair of socks you'd try to sell him one or the other first.

TIME? NOW!

If You Want Your Advertising Criticised Send It Now

WHILE so many of the theatres are not advertising, you who are still awake and thinking of the future have an unusual opportunity to have your advertising given the careful attention of our advertising expert. In normal times we are not always able to give this matter as prompt attention as we wish, but with the demand on our services somewhat curtailed by the lay-out, there is all the more reason for you to act.

If you are in doubt why any newspaper matter that you used failed to get you results, send us in the specimens and we will do our best to tell you why. Cut them out, with plenty of space, so that the borders will show and make no marks on the face of them. Either write the name of the town on the back in pencil or enclose a card or letterhead. Better still, if you can give us any facts about the peculiarities of your community.

Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

IF you had gone into the music room of the Rialto theatre at two o'clock on Friday morning you would have found the musical staff of the Rialto and Rivoli working over the musical score of "Woman" which is being presented at the Rivoli this week. And if you had gone in at the same time Saturday morning you would have found the staff still busy. And if you had dropped into the Rivoli theatre Sunday morning you would have found the full musical rehearsal in full swing.

And, now wonder then, if you went into the Rivoli at the first presentation of "Woman" on Sunday you would have heard the people in the audience commenting on the wonder of the score and you would have heard a burst of applause at the end of the picture and you would have had your ears full in listening to the delighted comments of the people as they left the theatre. Mr. Rothapfel has never done more in the presentation of a picture than he has in this case, and it has been a long time since Broadway has talked as long about anything.

There is another thing that the presentation of this picture shows—and that is New York has its faith in Rothapfel. It is mighty, mighty rarely that he advertises his personal guarantee on a production, but he did so in this case and the result was that when we started into the Rivoli the lobby was not only packed with people that could not gain admission, but there was a line a block long still waiting, though the announcement was being made that no further tickets would be sold for a time. We couldn't even get close to entrance and so we had to slip in the back way. And all this with the influenza in our midst.

The meaning of this is that it pays to build confidence in your theatre and in your name and to use your guarantees sparing. "Woman" had not been advertised even in the motion picture trade press and the general public knew absolutely nothing about it, but when Rothapfel told them that it was worth while they came by the hundreds and thousands. It is simply another evidence that it pays to make your theatre THE THING.

"Capriccio Italien" is the brilliant overture at the Rivoli and then comes the Animated which consists only of the Allies Official War Review. For the first time in the history of the Rothapfel houses the whole of the music for this is carried on the organ. This is caused by the fact that the orchestra has a heavy task on its hands with the playing of the music for the feature and this is the only time for rest. But it shows, too, how well the music for such stirring pictures can be carried on the organ, and that you don't have to have an immense orchestra to put them over.

"Forward Leading Roads" is the general title for the review and "Marche Heroique" is used at the opening which shows the activities on the Italian front. "Mazeppa" is played with the scenes of the American and French side by side in the trenches and shell holes, and when the scene turns to "In Palestine" and "Marche Africaine" is used. Then we get pictures of American soldiers at the base of the big gun with which the Huns shelled Paris and a mysterioso is employed. At the title saying that the roads of France ring with the footsteps of the marching Americans we have "Over There" used, though it is almost drowned out by the wild applause.

Now watch carefully the unusually artistic manner in which the feature, "Woman," is presented. The lights become blue all over the house and the orchestra begins to play "Macbeth" as the prelude. The curtains part, furnishing a setting by John Wenger that baffles description. As the advertisements say, "It has to be seen to be appreciated." The audiences break into applause at the sight which represents the dominant figure of woman with a background of weirdly tall trees, a single star in the blue sky. The curtains come to again and the applause recurs. Immediately afterwards the feature is started.

We have already told you that the music for this is wonderful. We cannot even attempt to give the score here, but one may appreciate the character of it when you are told that among the composers represented are Mendelsohn, Rimsky-Korsakoff, Catalani, Ethelbert-Nevin, Boito, Rebikoff, Goldmark, Delibes, Charpentier, Nougues, Burgmein (Titi Ricordi), Massenet and Bucalossi.

At one portion, where the angel appears to warn Adam and Eve we have a fanfare of trumpets, like the call of Gabriel and at another place where the monk is represented at prayer where another sings, "Hozanna" is sung from off the stage. There is an effective pause between the two verses.

Now "Woman" consists of a prologue, five separate episodes and an epilogue. Mr. Rothapfel has made this more effective by having a gauze curtain, tinted with lights, fall between each of the episodes, the picture of course pausing while the orchestra plays. It adds wonderfully to the impressiveness of the presentation.

At the end there are some striking patriotic scenes and here we get the advantage of stirring music that spurs the audience on to more applause.

There are things so artistic that they baffle telling about. The presentation of "Woman" is one of them. But it is certain that there has never been a picture presented anywhere that has called forth more comment and has aroused more enthusiasm than this one at the Rivoli.

Liszt's "Second Rhapsody" is the overture at the Rialto this week. With Dr. Reisenfeld leading the orchestra at the Rivoli this week Erno Rapee is transferred to the Rialto. And this serves to show how "regular" the Rialto audiences are. It was no reflection on Mr. Rapee that the audience did not applaud him when he appeared (at the performance we saw). It was simply because those people who have been coming to the Rialto every week know their Rialto and they expected to see Hugo Reisenfeld and they did not know Mr. Rapee. It is still another argument about making THE theatre and everything about it appeal.

"Heroes of the Coast Guard" is the scenic this week, a Ford production showing the way these heroes operate in their saving of lives from the oceans' storms. "Scene de Ballet" is the first selection and then "Fingal's Cave Overture" is played up to the scenes that show the breeches buoy in operation where the second "Peer Gynt" suite No. 8 is used up to the point where the last survivor is landed and then the music reverts to "Fingal's Cave Overture."

With the lights all blue and a red spot on the 'cellist Gaston Dubois then plays Faure's "Elegie."

"Rialto March" is used for the opening of the Animated and then with Gaumont pictures of college boys becoming soldiers at New York University it changes to "College Life." Screen Telegram pictures

LIKE OLD DAYS

Only a News Weekly and a Feature on the Bill at the Rivoli

AFTER we had enjoyed the presentation at the Rivoli this week, we thought to ourselves that this was something like the bills that prevailed a couple of years ago—only the feature, and then a news reel or a one-act comedy. For, except for the overture and the prelude to the feature, these are the only items on the bill.

But you remember the old joke when the end-man said: "This reminds me of So-and-so—it's so different."

If you are persuaded that you are going to make your motion picture house "the same old thing" day in and day out, you'll be the wisest to find some one with an ambition to be a "magnate" and sell out. If you are content to run along with the stereotyped policy, you will last for a certain length of time—till some one who does things invades your territory.

You don't have to do big things to do things "different." You don't have to have a symphony orchestra or specially built stage settings. You can make your theatre "different" week after week. Don't let the only novelty in your theatre be the unexpected ending that the producer gives the feature or the twist the author puts in the plot.

Think for yourself a little.

of Baker just back from the battle front and promising "no relaxation in war work" and this continues through pictures of Secretary Daniels promising "full steam ahead and of the Swiss Charge d'Affaires" who transmitted the German peace notes and Hearst Pathe pictures of Col. House.

Hearst Pathe then supplies a cartoon "Under the Lash" showing Belgium piloried by the Hun and then the king coming to the rescue and driving the Thing away. The first four and the four last bars of "La Brabaconne" is the accompaniment. "Southern Wedding" is used with Screen Telegram pictures of oyster dredging and "Under the Rambling Rose" with pictures of seals in a Chicago park. Gaumont then shows pictures of the Kansas City stockyards under the title of "Bully beef for our soldier boys," while "Mock Morris" is played.

Now here is just a little point to remember. You can see how all of these pictures bear on the war. Even the seal picture was captioned "They eat no sugar or wheat" and of course the picture of the cattle is to bear out the same idea, but the thought that these were to be put to death seemed to shock some people who sat around us, for there were comments of "Oh, isn't that a shame!" from some of the fair sex. It shows that anything that suggests slaughter is not pleasing in these war times.

"Hands Across the Sea" is used for Hearst-Pathe pictures of Prince Axel of Denmark in San Francisco and "Go Get 'Em" with Gaumont pictures of balloon work near the White House. "Auld Lang Syne" is most appropriately played with the pictures of the farewell to the British tank, "Britannia" which has worked for two war loans in this country. Gaumont pictures show the Jap editor with the sword for presentation to the President and here we have the last six bars of "Japanese Hymn" and linked in with this, under the caption of "They're Our Allies" we have Screen Telegram pictures of Japanese children, the music turning to "When It's Cherry Time in Tokio" until the caption calling attention to their smile when we get "Pack Up Your Troubles."

Then the real punch starts to go over. First we have Hearst-Pathe pictures of our cavalry in training at San Antonio with "Step With Pep" being played. From the same source come pictures of the Italian troops in London and the greeting given them by the war workers and "Garibaldi" is used to add to the warmth of the applause. Then come Gaumont scenes "over there with our boys" showing how Vaux looked when it was recaptured, pictures of the marines going back to the front after a rest—greeted with wild applause from the audience—and after other scenes at the front "La Patrie" is played. Advertising their coming Y. M. C. A. drive as well as giving a striking ending to the Animated are Gaumont pictures of the Y. M. C. A. worked at the front. The chorus of "Over There" is played once through, and then as we have scenes of the soldier boys singing the orchestra sings the chorus, and all over the house it is taken up. You can imagine the applause that comes at the end of the Animated.

After Mlle. D'Espiney sings Gounod's "Serenade" we have the feature, Enid Bennett in "When Do We Eat?" an extremely light offering. The music is in keeping with the character of the picture. For instance, when Enid Bennett first appears on the stage there is a burlesque of "Hearts and Flowers" and this burlesque spirit is carried through the stage scenes. "Procession of Sardar" is the second orchestral number.

One of the biggest hits that has been scored at the Rialto is recorded this week with "Theatre de Hula Hula," an animated cartoon released by Educational. This was first shown at the Rialto a year and a half ago, but that does not keep it from being one of the biggest laughing hits that we have yet seen. There is also an animated title for it showing a dog and a cat fighting with the letters forming the words "Rialto Comic Supplement" resulting. The picture itself shows a weird, nonsensical series of dances with a comic orchestra in action in the foreground. "Yaaka Hula, Kickey Dula" is the musical accompaniment.

It certainly sends everyone home in a good humor with his worst enemy.

Rialto bill might be called a laughing bill this week. There is hardly a laugh in the Rivoli bill except for some of the clever titles on the feature. But though the two offerings are entirely different they both leave one with the sense of perfect satisfaction.

Float used in Buffalo Liberty Loan parade that is adaptable to advertising war pictures

Here's a Float That Will Aid You in Exploiting War Pictures

IN the Fourth Liberty Loan parade in Buffalo the Lackawanna Steel Company featured a big float, the central figure of which was the Pup of Potsdam sitting on a redhot rail, which was mounted on one of Bill Boche's famous iron crosses and on one side of the truck was the inscription "Hot Rail 'Kaiser Bill' to Hell—Buy More Bonds." In front of the Kaiser was the whole $6,000,000,000 of the Fourth Loan. The float was mounted on a replica of an armored motor car. From the back of the turret a man fired shots from a machine gun at the kaiser, the blank shots attracting attention for some distance. The float was a big hit.

Exhibitors undoubtedly could work out a float along the same lines to boost such pictures as "To Hell With the Kaiser," "Crashing Through to Berlin," "The Kaiser's Finish," "The Prussian Cur," "18 to 45," "Lafayette We Come," and countless other big features. Well worked out the float should attract much attention and better still create no end of talk. Illuminated at night the float can be made exceptionally attractive and with the shots being fired at the kaiser.

Base your advertising on the idea that you have a seat for every person in your community, and you'll soon have to supply more of them.

only substantial thing in business; but it is the Beautiful Truth rather than the Ugly Truth that walks on the welcome mat.

"The Colonel's Lady and Judy O'Grady may be sisters under the skin," but advertising gave one her position. So you see, while we are at the business of democratizing advertising we've got to be sure that while we're trying not to shoot over their heads that we don't hit somewhere below the belt.

The first thing we have to attain in merchandising, and in merchandising pictures in particular, is to get the imagination going. Not only has the salesman who speaks through type got to picture the necessity of a thing, but his imagination must be so infectious that the consumer visualizes its desirability and with the glowing colors on his own mental pallette proceeds to paint the lily and gild the sunrise. Just as the dreamer is the architect of life, so is imagination, both in seller and buyer, the life blood of business.

All too frequently we find imagination shackled to the prison walls of precedent, handcuffed and crucified before the altar of tradition. Many a fragrant flower of vision has been pressed between the pages of the advertising primer.

Not so many years ago a very excellent advertising man made the remark that the two poorest advertised articles were automobiles and amusements. He was in the motor car business. I haven't seen him for years, but automobile advertising is much better now than when he made the remark.

In amusement advertising we are slowly gaining the heights, but still fettered with the ball and chain of dogma. What we need most of all are a few Columbuses who will dare to seek a shorter route to India.

Across the weird abyss of ages he leaped from the strange jungle home where he ruled—a white king of apes and tigers and long tusks—to the gilded halls of civilization, searching for his wildwood mate.

In elemental things the imagination will always form very definite pictures. In reading a Jungle story one is very likely to hear the Lion's roar. The Tarzan advertisement sketched a vista of the play and strove to excite the readers' imagination by making him vision the actual happenings

It takes courage to trod on the toes of tradition. It is easy to alibi behind custom, but it is equally as simple to stumble over the mummy of precedent.

Just as the speaker supplies the mood for his audience, so does advertising create the mood for its reader. If it is dull, stilted and prosaic it will find its audience in a like mental state, while if it is animated and imaginative it will stimulate the dormant visual powers within every mind.

Every sale is the result of an emotional impulse, and amusement advertising must cater to the dramatic instincts, it must awaken by inference the great cinematograph of our brain, where dreams are wrought and castles in Spain conceived.

But being imaginative in advertising does not necessarily mean being grotesque, or, in the language of the theatre, "up stage." A man unacquainted with advertising psychology will frequently condemn copy that is immaculately dressed and "high sounding" on the ground that it won't be understood and forgetful of its potential power of creating visions of desirability and therefore necessity.

To Mr. "Brass Tacks" we respectfully refer him to Carlyle, who said: "A naked House of Lords would inspire no awe," or, to translate it into our own philosophy, "What we don't understand we respect, otherwise religion and politics would never flourish."

No, democracy in advertising does not mean reducing our appeal to the mental status of the lowest, but rather in inspiring him to look aloft.

Man naturally looks up.

Gold and Silver Passes Bring Big Loan Subscriptions at the Rivoli

THERE are two people who have perpetual passes to the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, but the Government is a great deal richer as a result. And there are quite a few others who won't have to pay their way into the Rothapfel houses for the next year as the result of the Liberty Loan drive.

During the evening that Frank Keenan was speaking at the Rivoli Mr. Rothapfel offered a silver perpetual pass to the first person who subscribed for a $10,000 bond. Commander Truman Newberry, U. S. N., and candidate for senator in Michigan against Henry Ford, won the pass. On the same evening sixteen others were given a pass to the Rivoli for taking $1,000 bonds. Three others got season passes to both houses for subscribing for $5,000 bonds. In all $52,000 was raised during the Frank Keenan evening.

On the following evening Mr. Rothapfel made the offer of a perpetual gold pass to both theatres to the first one who took $25,000 in bonds. The man who won this was Max Straus, shipbuilder and head of the firm of A. E. Johnson and Co.

NEWS, not only for theatre which I direct and manage, but for myself. Conditions have changed wonderfully in our business. I have seen it grow, and I have grown with it.

I was ever alert to catch on to ideas and business getter methods, the MOTION PICTURE NEWS my constant companion. When in doubt about one thing or the other pertaining to our business, I would look over the various issues to help me out of my dilemma.

For years it has been known that Toledo was second in newspaper exploitation. Up to a year or so ago the ads of Toledo's motion picture theatres were pasted on the walls in various exchanges throughout the country. Producers would get copies of our several newspapers, cut out the ads and forward to their respective exchanges.

In 1917 one theatre that I was connected with spent 20 per cent of its gross receipts in newspapers alone. However whilst the newspapers are very valuable mediums to let the public know what you have for sale, I believe that at the present time it takes more than a 80 or 100 inch ad to get the people into your theatre.

In fact I know this from experience, and thanks to the NEWS they gave me the pointers and I was not a bit slow to take advantage of the other fellows ideas. That is why the Alhambra theatre is one of the most successful theatres in Northern Ohio to-day, and it is not difficult for a salesman to get a second run when his stuff is booked to show at the Alhambra.

them effectively, if the cut of Miss Talmadge had printed properly. Unfortunately the result has been a mere smudge. But here is a case where it is very evident that W. S. McLaren, the highly successful manager of the Majestic, did not have a great deal of material for use and went to the opposite extreme in attempting to call attention to the picture. He did that successfully, because the display stands out on the page of the newspaper "like a sore thumb." He realized the drawing power of the name of the star and he played this especially strong and in the box effect, because he knew that the cut that he had to use was poor.

He has dominated with the name of the theatre the name of the star and his own endorsement of the picture. We believe that the artistic appearance of the display could have been improved a great deal, but for the "hit you in the eye" stuff with poor material available, apparently, it is mighty hard to beat.

Every one of these displays proves that the exhibitor can get better displays if he will do the work on his part.

But there is another thing that suggests itself at least in the case of the advertisements at the Grand. This manager has evidently had the cooperation of the compositor on his local weekly. It is a mighty important point to keep in touch with the people who have charge of your typesetting. They have it in their power to make your advertising draw or to make it "mere advertising." And if you will arouse their pride in their work and show your appreciation you will get results.

One exhibitor wrote us recently: "I got more results out of your criticism of my advertising than I had been able to get from my printer in a year. I took the criticism to him and he agreed that everything that was said there was right. Then he asked me to bring the copy of the NEWS to him each week so that he could study the advertising. 'Motion picture advertising is different,' he told me, 'and I want to learn all I can about it.' Since that time my advertising has improved one hundred per cent. and I know it."

This is not said as a circulation argument, because the NEWS wants no circulation except EXHIBITOR CIRCULATION, but if you can get your printer interested enough it will help you on to lend him the copy for a day each week and let him get the benefit of the criticism of others' work.

And if you can get the right sort of cooperation from the printer you can learn a lot from him. Some exhibitors miss fire because they do not take the slightest trouble to learn the MECHANICS of advertising. The result is that they prepare advertising that will not "fit" and with little idea of how the display is going to look when it is printed in the newspaper. The smaller town exhibitor needs more than the others to have this knowledge for the simple reason that the printing offices haven't the same facilities as the cities and as a rule not as well trained workmen. You will find as a general rule that your printer is willing to give you all the cooperation in his power.

So the best advice that can be given to the smaller city exhibitor is to take advantage of every opportunity that is offered him and not to throw up his hands and say that it cannot be done.

The articles on newspaper cooperation in larger cities will soon be concluded and then we are going to devote more space here to talking about the advertising of the smaller fellows, about advertising that employs the sort of material that you get, good, bad, and indifferent. But in the meantime the invitation is always open for you to have your advertising criticized here or in personal letters to you.

New Garrick Makes Fine Record with Its Stage Sets

PATRONS of the New Garrick theatre, St. Paul, Minn., are taking a new interest in the house on account of the splendid stage settings that are being employed these days by Thomas L. Hays, the manager. The St. Paul theatres have escaped closing on account of the influenza because the health regulations have been otherwise strictly observed.

Mr. Hays believes firmly in the combination of the music, the picture and the stage setting and he is working the idea out in most of his programs.

One of the recent settings was used under the title of a scenic prelude. This represented "A Night in Venice." The slowly opening velvet curtains revealed the Grand Canal of Venice with the palaces of the Doges in the distance. Moonlight rippled over the water and in the distance were heard the strains of music, becoming louder as a gondola appeared. A trio, consisting of violin, flute and harp, dressed in Neapolitan costume, then rendered "O Solo Mio" and the gondola moved off the stage to the strains of "Maria Maria."

A scenic and instrumental prelude were used with the presentation of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." It opened with "My Old Kentucky Home," sung off stage and then as the lights came up the orchestra played Turner's "The Darkies' Jubilee," the musicians singing the refrain, "Roll on dat Cotton," and a steamboat whistle sounding from the orchestra as a miniature steamboat slowly crossed the stage, of course through the water that represented the river. The heart-dear songs of Stephen Foster and other characteristic Southern music was used during the picture with "Ave Maria," on harp and violin, for the transfiguration of Uncle Tom.

St. Paul audiences have shown their full appreciation of these settings.

Exhibitors Box Office Reports

LAST MINUTE REPORTS

The Following Individual Reports Came in as Motion Picture News Was Going to Press

"The Cruise of the Make-Believes" (Lila Lee-Paramount)—"Very good picture. Great star."

"The Ghost of the Rancho" (Washburn-Pathe)—"Fair picture, but poor business."

"The Road to France" (Blackwell-World)—"Other than patriotic sentiment, this picture has not much to recommend."

"A Soul Without Windows" (Clayton-World)—"A fine picture entitled to do more business."

"The Green God" (Morey-Blythe-Vitagraph)—"Very ordinary picture."

"Pershing's Crusaders" (First National)—"Big to average to poor business in three-day run."

"Riders of the Purple Sage" (William Farnum-Fox)—"Opened average and closed extra big in four-day run. Appeals to young and old."

"Geezer of Berlin" (Universal)—"A record breaker for seven days."

"Peck's Bad Girl" (Normand-Goldwyn)—"Average business three days."

"Cleopatra" (Bara-Fox)—"Opened after being closed four weeks by epidemic. Business light until Saturday. Strong feature but people still nervous."

Editor's Note: The Box Office Report chart includes all pictures released since August 1 on which a sufficient number of exhibitor reports have been received to base a verdict. In the column "Average of Exhibitors' Reports" the term "Extra Big" indicates a picture which far surpassed expectation; "Big" means a picture doing better than the usual business for that day under average conditions; "Average" is the grading given the production on which business held up to normal; "Poor" indicates the picture falling below normal in box office and entertainment value.

The comments given are no indication of the number of reports received, as many exhibitors merely check off the grading without comment.

TITLE, STAR, AND BRAND	AVERAGE OF EXHIBITORS' REPORTS	EXHIBITORS' OWN COMMENTS
ALL MAN (Morey—Vitagraph)....Aug.	Average	"Fair." "Seemed to please. Good story, directing and acting."
APPEARANCE OF EVIL, THE (Elvidge-Mayo—World) Oct.	Average	"Average picture four days."
BELOVED BLACKMAILERS, THE (Blackwell—World) Aug.	Average	"Average story and average business." "Good."
BERLIN VIA AMERICA (Fordart—State Rights).....	Average	"Fair picture; good money maker; three days to big business."
BIRD OF PREY, THE (Brockwell—Fox).....Aug	Big	"Extra big." "Good show." "Brockwell's all right, but Oh that Mexican stuff." "Good but people don't want Mexican stuff." "Blood and thunder; pleased here." "Just a big melodrama." "Star good. For love of Mike, get Gladys out of Mexico. Too much is enough."
BOUND IN MOROCCO (Fairbanks—Artcraft)....Aug.	Average	"Big drawing card but not altogether pleasing on account of weakness of plot. Only 'Doug could get away with it." "My patrons expected more than they received." "Doug. is story, cast and all." "Extra big." "Big to start, average on week." "Full of pep; no story; took well. Few didn't like it; good business." "Fair." "Extra big."
BONNIE ANNIE LAURIE (Hyland—Fox).....Sept.	Average	"Did not please." "Did not even get film rental. This star a loser. Picture satisfactory." "Better than average program picture, but epidemic has made accurate estimate of business impossible. Best work star has done yet."
BREAD (MacLaren—Universal).....Aug.	Big	"Went very big." "It was well advertised and brought good patronage money and satisfaction; the title put it over."
BRAZEN BEAUTY, THE (Dean—Bluebird)....Sept.	Big	"Priscilla Dean is to be reckoned with as a coming star. Her assets are brains, beauty, intelligence and personality. Liabilities, 'scrambled' hair that kills the effect of an otherwise beautiful woman. Slick it down, Priscilla, there's a good girl."
BURGLAR FOR A NIGHT (Kerrigan—Paralta)...Aug.	Big	"A good picture with lots of class." "A dandy picture; they like him dressed up; went big all four days."

Universal Begins New Publicity Ideas

Universal set into motion last week a new newspaper publicity campaign of an unusual sort. The project is directed by Tarkington Baker, a newspaper man of broad experience who came from Indianapolis to take up his new duties. The plans have been under process of development for the last six months.

It is the purpose, according to Universal's announcement, to establish a close, intimate relation between the company's exchanges and the local press. All the newspapers of the country hereafter will be served with Universal publicity, largely through the channels of the local branches. The material will be specially designed to meet the individual style requirements of the various newspapers.

Mr. Baker will leave shortly for a trip over the country visiting all the exchanges.

Broadway Views Select's Mammoth New Sign

Select Pictures Corporation is the possessor of one of the most striking signs in New York. The sign is located on the south side of the Godfrey Building at 729 Seventh avenue, and announces that Select Pictures Corporation has its executive offices in the Godfrey Building, and names Select's five stars, Norma Talmadge, Clara Kimball Young, Constance Talmadge, Alice Brady and Marion Davies.

The sign is one hundred feet by sixty-eight feet and extends down the south wall of the building for a distance of nine stories from the top.

Hodkinson Transfers to Pathe

Latter Company Will Handle All Distribution Formerly Put Through General—New Arrangements November 25

A NEW releasing arrangement between W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and Pathe Exchanges, Inc., whereby the latter will in the future distribute all the Hodkinson productions, was consummated last week, it was announced October 27th by both Pathe and Hodkinson. This new deal will also mean, it was said, that the Hodkidson productions, which have heretofore been booked at General exchanges, will also be transferred to Pathe exchanges. Monday, November 25th, has been named as the date upon which the new arrangement will go into effect.

The productions included in the above which have previously been going through the General Film Company and which are to be transferred to work through Pathe, are the Jesse D. Hampton Productions featuring J. Warren Kerrigan, Lillian Walker Pictures, Bessie Barriscale Productions, Louise Glaum Pictures, Douglas Natural Color Films, etc., etc.

In speaking of the change, W. W. Hodkinson stated that the move was made as a result of much careful thought and deliberation, and was calculated to give to the users of Hodkinson Service of selected photo plays the very best and most efficient exchange service possible to secure in the field, and that Pathe's unquestioned superiority in physical exchange work made them the logical organization for the purpose.

Hodkinson representatives in each territory will have their offices with the individual Pathe exchanges and will give their personal attention to each Hodkinson customer as heretofore. It is the desire of the Hodkinson organization—and all departments are working hard to gain this purpose—to have all arrangements completely settled so that the change will be effected before the great majority of the theatres are opened, and that not only present Hodkinson customers, but the many new customers who have signed up in the past few weeks who have been unable to secure films owing to the influenza ban, may be served with expedition and dispatch.

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation at present has twenty-four pictures in the various territories and over 2,500 theatres are being served with these productions. Working through the Pathe organization, every exhibitor will be assured of prompt and efficient service on his films and advertising accessories.

C. E. Shurtleff, general sales manager of the Hodkinson Corporation, will leave next week for an extended trip through the Northern and Middle West territories, visiting each Hodkinson representative and giving complete instructions for the change. W. A. Bach, assistant general sales manager, will make a flying trip through the Southern territory, returning by way of Kansas City, St. Louis and Pittsburgh, fulfilling the same mission in this section of the country. P. N. Brinch, Western division manager, will handle the territory from Omaha west, as heretofore.

There are now twenty-four Hodkinson representatives in the field, and, with the addition of the Pathe branch managers and Pathe salesmen, who will all be financially interested in the efficient and equitable placing of Hodkinson Service, it is estimated that the largest, most complete representation in the field will be engaged in not only selling Hodkinson Service to the exhibitor, but keeping him satisfied after he has signed for same.

In connection with the future releasing plans of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, Mr. Hodkinson stated to a representative of this paper that, contrary to the report which had appeared, his plans contemplated a continuance of the one a week releasing basis, provided consistent quality of releases could be secured.

"The Pathe sales organization is today the best in the country," said Mr. Brunet in talking of the new arrangements. "I have developed it, selected it and had it trained until I can truthfully make that statement with a very justifiable pride. When I saw our branch managers all gathered together at our 'Save and Serve' convention recently I was proud of them. I felt that it was very doubtful if ever in the history of the industry there had been gathered together a body of exchange managers who would average so high in ability, appearance, character and knowledge of the business.

"Knowing the value of our organization, I knew that we could be of great aid to Mr. Hodkinson, for whom I have great admiration and a high esteem. Our agreement cannot fail to be good business for us both and for the industry as a whole."

Heavy Run Reported on Goldwyn Specials

Goldwyn's successful special productions are said to be literally "saving the day" for thousands of exhibitors who find themselves face to face with a feature shortage during the present situation in the industry.

The theatres which are privileged to remain open during the influenza epidemic are declared to be booking several or all of the big Goldwyn independents.

Anita Stewart, the Star, and Louis B. Mayer, President, of Anita Stewart Productions, Inc. Miss Stewart's Most Recent Picture Is "Virtuous Wives"

Mayer Augments Star's Efforts

Louis B. Mayer Declares He Believes in Providing Excellent Stories, Elaborate Settings and Expert Directing for Anita Stewart

WHEN Louis B. Mayer was host at a luncheon to many producers and distributors recently at the Hotel Astor he was quizzed anent the report that he was quite extravagant in producing his first Anita Stewart picture for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

While Mr. Mayer did not state just what salary he was paying Miss Stewart, he declared that he was paying her more money than he once thought was in the whole world. "I believe Anita Stewart is a wonderful box office attraction in herself, but I will not handicap her by providing her with poor stories," Mr. Mayer continued, in answer to many pointed questions.

"I paid what some would call a tremendous price for the screen rights to 'In Old Kentucky' and 'Virtuous Wives.' But even with what I consider a wonderful star with most excellent stories, I could not consider the so-called average director. So I managed to secure George Lone Tucker.

"Yes, all this costs money, and big money, too, but what is the use of paying a huge sum for a mansion and then furnish it with rag carpets?

"Now comes the surrounding company. What would you think of a great mansion finely furnished by a master hand if its grounds were not kept up, if the lawn was scragly and weeds grew where flowers belonged. It would be an eyesore. So it is with Stewart, her play and her director. Her surroundings are going to be in keeping with the whole. That's why I've spared no expense on the supporting company.

"Of course, I admit that my way may not be orthodox. But, in my opinion, it is the difference between the machine-made suit of clothes in a sweatshop and a classy made-to-order garment from a Fifth avenue tailoring establishment. I am not making machine goods. I am building for the exhibitor a made-to-order product. I don't have to rush to get it out on a certain date. I take my good time in making it right, and then announce the release date. When the exhibitor gets it he must know it's right.

"Certainly the process is expensive, but so is anything really worth while expensive. The exhibitor is mainly interested in two things—satisfying his patrons and making money. He cannot do either without accomplishing the other."

"Cannibal" Film to Have Showing at Astor

November 19 at the Hotel Astor Robertson-Cole Company will have a showing of Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas."

This company has just disposed of the New York State rights to the First National Exhibitors' exchange, and this showing is intended principally for exhibitors in this territory.

The "Cannibal" films will be released in two parts of approximately 5,000 feet each, and tell a complete story of the trip, from the time Martin Johnson left San Francisco, when Mrs. Jack London said goodbye, to the escape from Chief Magapate, after the Johnsons had nearly lost their lives.

"Safe for Democracy" at Rivoli Theatre

When S. L. Rothapfel viewed J. Stuart Blackton's production "Safe For Democracy" he immediately booked it at the Rivoli theatre for the week of November 3. Mitchell Lewis is the star.

Commodore Blackton, after finishing "The Common Cause" and "Safe For Democracy," announced that he would take a short rest before starting "The Battle Cry of Liberty."

Fox Offices Make Many More Changes

Several changes are being made in the offices of the Fox Film Corporation, in the Leavitt Building, 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York. Partitions are being torn out, departments are being torn out and shifted, and office space is being rearranged with a view of taking care of the growth of several departments.

The offices of the New York exchange have been extended to include most of the reception space on the seventh floor. The Foreign Department, which has been growing so rapidly that it has moved three times within a year, is now more conveniently and commodiously quartered in offices adjoining the New York exchange. "Salome" headquarters have been moved and the Auditing Department has taken over the entire tenth floor.

Alsatian Farm Shown in New Screen Classics

An Alsatian farm in all its details has been reproduced at Trogg's Neck, New York, for the Screen Classics production "Wilson or the Kaiser?" This superfeature has been written by Maxwell Karger and directed by Charles Miller, with a big cast to interpret its seven acts.

A modest little building was found at Trogg's Neck which suggested Mr. Karger's idea of the home of the young Alsatian hero, Conrad Le Brett, played by Creighton Hale. Metro's technical staff, under the direction of E. J. Shulter, at once proceeded to remodel it until it came exactly within the requirements.

Giegerich to Vitagraph Publicity Department

Charles J. Giegerich, well known in newspaper and motion picture circles, has been appointed as publicity representative for Vitagraph at the company's studio in Hollywood, and has already taken up his duties there.

This is Mr. Giegerich's second affiliation with Vitagraph, he having been the first Publicity Director of Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc., the Vitagraph Distributing Organization, at the time of its formation in 1915.

Film Market, Inc., Secures Entire Gotham Output

The Film Market, Inc., has acquired for distribution throughout the world the Gotham Film Corporation's entire output of miniature novelty productions. These consist of two subjects, a patriotic and a classic, released as a one-reel feature every four weeks.

The subjects now ready are "The Star-Spangled Banner," "Columbia," and "The Battle Cry of Freedom," each approximately five hundred feet, produced before the policy of two subjects on the same reel was adopted, and "Home, Sweet Home" and "The Girl I Left Behind Me," made since the two-subject reel plan went into effect.

Robert W. Priest, president of the Film Market, Inc., has placed the entire series for the first year with Sidney B. Lust of Super Film Attractions, Washington, for the territory of Delaware, Maryland and District of Columbia, and with Greenfield & Condell of the Liberty Feature Film Co., of Shreveport, Louisiana, for the Texas and Oklahoma territory.

Anita Stewart Composes Popular Song

Anita Stewart, the motion picture star now under the management of Louis B. Mayer of Boston, has found time while making "Virtuous Wives" and "In Old Kentucky" to compose a topical song entitled "A Cheery Smile Is as Good as a Mile on the Road to Victory."

Musicians are said to have pronounced the song an exceptionally fine one for a first attempt. It certainly sheds new light on Miss Stewart's versatility, and will come as a distinct surprise to her admirers who have known her only as a screen artist.

Siegel Moves Offices

A. E. Siegel, of "Topics of the Day" films, selected from the press of the world, announced this week that he has moved his offices from 707 Times Building to 716 Longacre Building, New York.

No Dearth of Screen Material

F. E. Woods, Supervisor of Famous Players-Lasky West Coast Studio, Says There Is Plenty of Good Screen Material

FRANK E. WOODS, supervisor of productions at the West Coast studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, declares emphatically that there is no real dearth of screen material. He says:

"It is not owing to such a shortage that we are transferring stage plays to the screen, for in a large measure this has been the policy of the organization for some time. If others follow suit, it argues that the idea must be a good one, for imitation is the sincerest form of flattery.

"Photoplay 're-issues' must not be confused with certain 'reproductions,' so to speak, of films done in the earlier period of the industry, as for example C. B. De Mille's new version of 'The Squaw Man,' which is a new picture in every respect. Here the producer is given a splendid opportunity of improving upon his own work, and the production, aside from its general interest, serves as an evidence of the immense advance of the screen in four short years.

"Returning to the matter of adaptations from the stage or popular works of fiction," continued Mr. Woods, "as I have just said, it has long been the policy of this organization to specialize on such adaptations, but not to the exclusion of the original scenario, as our records will show. In any case, the adapter usually introduces so much original stuff—must do so, indeed, to fit the story to screen form—that the production comes from the camera fresh and frequently modernized.

"Where one hears complaints to the effect that a play is changed materially in its film version, it must be borne in mind that certain changes are essential. It ought to be obvious enough that the average play written for the speaking stage would be wholly unsuitable for the motion pictures unless considerably altered. The same holds good of the novel or short story. The one may be condensed, the other expanded.

"The whole purpose is to make a good picture, not necessarily to make a faithful transcription, so to speak, and where, as in our case, skilled and trained writers, who do nothing else but write for the screen, make the adaptations it is very safe to say that the results will be adequate and that nothing will be omitted or inserted that will destroy either the original conception of the author or the spirit of his work."

"Usually it has the effect of broadening the scope of the dramatic action, visualizing much that was left solely to the imagination, or at best described in words, which can never be as compelling as the action itself."

United Completing Two More at Brunton's

DUSTIN FARNUM, under the direction of Ernest Warde, is reported to be rapidly completing "The Man in the Open," from Robert Pocock's story, while Kitty Gordon, another United star at Brunton's studio, is engaged upon "The Nurse's Story," directed by Wallace Worsley, from the scenario by Jack Cunningham.

J. A. Berst, president United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., stated: "Mr. Brunton exercises personal supervision on all productions. There is no more artistic director of production than Robert Brunton, in my opinion.

"For years he has been a close student of the arts that appertain to painting and photography. He has read many volumes written on the subjects and his library along the above lines is unusually complete and comprehensive.

"Before entering the motion picture field Mr. Brunton was considered a distinguished scenic expert and authority," continued Mr. Berst. "He has been associated with the artistic side of many important theatrical productions.

"The United feels that under his supervision our plays will prove of great worth."

Spoor Has Processing Machine

Mr. Spoor Declares That Ten Machines Are Capable of Processing Ten Million Feet of Film a Week

AT a time when the film industry is feeling an external pressure due to the gigantic war and when internal conditions are particularly unsettled, necessitating the greatest economy in all its various branches, George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, has perfected a processing machine, which, it is stated, will save manufacturers millions of dollars annually.

Two of these machines, which are said to be revolutionary in their method of processing film, are now installed and working at the Essanay studios, Chicago. They are said to have been given a practical test under the most severe and exacting conditions, and it is asserted that they have processed millions of feet for Essanay and other concerns with highly satisfactory results.

Ten machines, each 40 feet in length and weighing 15 tons, have been constructed and are now being installed. They will be in operation shortly, and the ten machines, with a generous allowance for delays of any nature whatever, are capable of processing a minimum of 10,000,000 feet a week, according to report.

Some years ago Mr. Spoor, who has had developed and constructed much of the finest laboratory machinery in use in the motion picture art today, began a careful and exhaustive study of the situation. He was convinced that the system of processing film in vogue was antiquated, and had failed to keep pace with the advancement of the motion picture industry in other lines. He believed that there was a tremendous waste involved, both in time and material, in processing by the drum and by the tank, rack or frame systems, while the film thus processed was never of a consistent or equable standard of work.

"With a view to eliminating this waste and at the same time standardizing the work so as to obtain a uniform and high grade of development throughout, I engaged Mr. F. B. Thompson, an engineer of high qualifications and an expert in chemistry, to construct a processing machine," said Mr. Spoor.

"After a year of experimenting, Mr. Thompson completed this machine. Two years ago it was installed in our Essanay studios, where its operation was studied and thoroughly tested and corrections made until it was brought to the present high standard of efficiency and perfection.

"The machine has been operated under every conceivable condition and has proven even more highly satisfactory than anticipated. In the past two years these machines have processed all the products of the Essanay company and considerable for other concerns, and accomplished their work with unfailing surety, rapidity and success."

For years the leading pioneer film manufacturers have considered the possibilities of a central printing and developing plant. It has long been realized that there would be an enormous saving in this plan, but it has never been developed, largely because the difficulties seemed too gigantic. "Each manufacturer has maintained his own plant, mostly for competitive reasons," continued Mr. Spoor.

"But today the producer, whether he does or does not maintain his own processing plant, depends little if at all on the competitive power of his photographic work. A standard of quality having been reached practically by all, the question of economy is paramount.

"In fact, a large number of producers now send their film out to laboratories to have their positive films made, paying a high rate per lineal foot.

"The Spoor-Thompson processing machine, with its new method of developing 1,000-foot lengths with uniform precision and at the saving of enormous losses, makes a central printing and developing plant a reality.

"America's Answer" Plays New York Houses

"America's Answer," the U. S. official war picture issued by the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, and distributed by the World Film Corporation, will have its first motion picture theatre showing in Greater New York during the week of November 11, when it will be seen for three days at the Lincoln Square, Greeley, Victoria, Boulevard, National, American and Orpheum theatres. November 14-16 the picture will be seen at the Avenue "B," Metropolitan, DeKalb, Fulton, Palace and Warwick theatres. In addition to the above, the Circle and West End theatres will have "America's Answer" November 11; the New York and 86th Street, November 12; the 42nd and Bijou, November 14; the Broadway and 116th Street, November 15. All the above are in the Loew circuit.

Other houses where the Government picture will be seen are the Hamilton, November 11-13; Bunny, Washington and Clairmont, November 11; Odeon, November 13; Flatbush, November 14-15.

William Duncan Visits New York City

William Duncan, Vitagraph star and director of serials, took advantage of the temporary shut-down and came east to visit his parents at Steinway, Long Island. He did not discuss business while in New York, except to say that he considers "The Man of Might," the serial he is now engaged in making, the best of all the serials in which he has worked.

This would seem to promise big things when one recalls "The Fighting Trail," "Vengeance—and the Woman," and "A Fight for Millions," in all of which Mr. Duncan appeared as star and director.

The day of his arrival in New York Mr. Duncan was entertained at luncheon at the Lambs Club as the guest of J. Lawton Kendrick, who also provided him with a guest card for the duration of his stay.

"Faith," Lytell's Last Before Enlisting

Bert Lytell's forthcoming Metro picture, "Faith," will be his last starring vehicle until the end of the war. It has already been completed at Metro's Western studio.

The young star, on the rising tide of popularity among motion picture "fans" as the result of his artistic and conscientious work on the screen, has applied for admission to an officers' training camp.

"Faith" is a screen adaptation of the short story of the same name by Richard Washburn Child. It was scenarioized by George D. Baker and A. G. Kenyon, of Metro's Hollywood scenario staff. The photoplay is said to be out of the beaten track, and quite different from anything Lytell has hitherto done as a Metro star.

Jane and Katherine Lee Move to Los Angeles

Jane and Katherine Lee, the diminutive William Fox stars, having completed their new picture, "Tell It to the Marines," have gone to Los Angeles, as the vanguard of the Fox forces which will move to the Pacific Coast this winter.

The children were preceded by their director, Arvid E. Gillstrom, who staged the last two Lee productions, "Tell It to the Marines" and "Swat the Spy." Mr. Gillstrom took his cameraman, Ollie Leach, with him.

Benedic Loses Contracts—Gets Grippe

A. Jules Benedic, handling extraordinary attractions for the Dallas office of Fox, returned to headquarters last week with no contracts and a tale of woe besides. Mr. Benedic was caught in Arkansas just at the time the theatres were ordered closed, and, to cap the climax, he caught the disease himslf while in Arkansas, necessitating a layover in Little Rock of four days.

Famous Players-Lasky Revises Schedule

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has prepared its schedule of releases for the month of November, starting the 10th. The revised list, according to an announcement by Walter E. Greene, Managing Director in Charge of Distribution, is as follows:

November 10—Enrico Caruso in "My Cousin," an Artcraft production, directed by Edward Jose, from a story and scenario by Margaret Turnbull; Billie Burke in "The Make-Believe Wife," a Paramount production directed by John S. Robertson, from Adrian Gil-Spear's adaptation of Edward Childs Carpenter's play; Bryant Washburn in "The Gypsy Trail," directed by Walter Edwards, from Julia Crawford Ivers' adaptation of the play by Robert Housum; Success Series release, Victor Moore in "Snobs"; Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy, "Whose Little Wife Are You?"; Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogue, "Fifi Does Its Bit"; Paramount-Bray Pictograph, "A Modern Miracle Worker—Our Newest Possessions—How Movies Move."

November 17 — Ethel Clayton in "Women's Weapons," a Paramount production, directed by Robert G. Vignola, from a story and scenario by Beulah Marie Dix; Pauline Frederick in "A Daughter of the Old South," a Paramount production, directed by Emile Chautard, from Margaret Turnbull's adaptation of the story by Alicia Ramsey and Rudolph de Cordova; Vivian Martin in "Mirandy Smiles," a Paramount production, directed by William C. DeMille, from a story and scenario by Edith Kennedy; Success Series release, "The Cheat," with Fannie Ward and Sessue Hayakawa; Paramount-Arbuckle comedy, "The Sheriff"; Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogue, "Fire Walkers of Bequa"; Paramount-Bray Pictograph, "Tortola, the Fisherman's Paradise—A Machine That Thinks—An Oriental Wrestling Match—Cartoon, 'The Greased Pole.'"

Fox Havana Exchange Reports Big Business

FOLLOWING the recent opening of a new branch office in Havana, the Fox Film Corporation report a tremendous success for Fox pictures in Cuba. Officials declare that 200 exhibitors on the island have booked the various brands of William Fox productions on a rental basis. It is said that hitherto the rule has been to book American films on a percentage.

A. C. Calvo has been made manager of the Havana branch office, which is at 24 Aguila Street. Abraham Carlos, general representative of the Fox Film Corporation, has been in Cuba for the last few weeks, returning this week with the most enthusiastic report of the success of Fox Films on the island.

William Fox, it is said, received an offer to sell the rights of Fox pictures for the Cuban territory, but he turned this offer down, preferring to go into the Cuban field himself and educate the exhibitor and the public to his brands of films.

The result of a short campaign conducted by Mr. Carlos and Mr. Calvo is declared to be proof of the wisdom of this course. One example of the demand for Fox pictures is that the Theda Bara production, "Cleopatra," was rented to the Fausto theatre, Havana, for what was stated to be the biggest rental price in the history of motion pictures in Cuba.

A. H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin Will Launch the First "Ralph Ince Film Attraction," Under the Banner of "S L Pictures"

FROM plans crystallized and announced by A. H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, the first special Ralph Ince Film Attraction will be released under the banner of S. L. Pictures.

They feel that Sawyer, Lubin and Ince is a combination of names that should assure the exhibitors that no precaution will be omitted in the production of real high class film attractions.

During the connection of Ralph Ince with Vitagraph he directed "The Juggernaut," "A Million Bid," "The Wreck," "413" and many others. Some of the more recent productions directed by Mr. Ince are "Today," starring Florence Reed; "Tempered Steel," starring Mme. Petrova, and "Our Mrs. McChesney," starring Ethel Barrymore.

Arthur Sawyer is said to be one of the pioneers of the motion picture industry, and in the early days he was general manager of the Kinemacolor Company, which he was responsible for organizing in this country. Mr. Sawyer sponsored many of the first feature films to appear in Broadway theatres and was among the first to engage stars of the legitimate stage for pictures.

Herbert Lubin is very well known as an exchange man and distributor of pictures and has organized many big financial projects according to report. He has made a special study of exhibitors' needs and it is believed that his experience in this line will prove of great value to the newly formed S L Company.

Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin have introduced many new ideas in the marketing of pictures, as was evidenced in their state rights sales of "The Warrior" and "Mother."

"We will soon have some very interesting announcements to make as to our stars and the calibre of other men identified with our organization. Our principal aim is to strive to produce features that will meet the demand of the public for bigger and better pictures," declared Mr. Lubin.

Del Ruth with Lehrman

Henry Lehrman, vice-president and general producer of Sunshine Comedies, Inc., has engaged Hampton Del Ruth, well known in Los Angeles, as a scenario writer of comedy.

Mr. Del Ruth has already gone deep into the intricacies of comedy production and is busily assisting Mr. Lehrman in turning out several scripts, work on which has already been started. William Campbell, director for Mr. Lehrman, has started on one this week with Billie Ritchie, Hugh Fay and Betty Carpenter selected to play the leads.

Fred Fishback, another new director who has recently been added to Mr. Lehrman's galaxy of Sunshinites, is also rushing work on a Sunshine de luxe in which Mack Swain and Ethel Teare will carry the honors.

Novel Idea Basis for New Blackton Film

"Safe for Democracy" is, it is said, the first feature film based on the "Work or Fight" law, and Anthony Paul Kelly's fictional and fact story woven around the idea is expected to prove a surprise, according to Vitagraph.

Many in the industry will also be surprised to know that Commodore Blackton has almost completed actual filming of the production about which nothing was known until last week.

Kerrigan Dons Khaki

J. Warren Kerrigan in "Three X Gordon," his latest Jesse D. Hampton production, plays the role of Harold Chester Winthrop Gordon, an idle son of the rich, who tried to enlist for military service but was rejected because physically unfit.

Kenneth B. Clarke wrote "Three X Gordon" especially for J. Warren Kerrigan, and those who have seen the picture declare it is this star's best effort. It will be released November 1 by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, according to reports.

"Current Events" Show "Yanks" in France

Pictures of the Yanks "carrying on" in France, driving the Germans from the territory they have occupied for four years, are the feature of Universal Current Events No. 76. The pictures were made by United States Signal Corps photographers on the firing line.

It is declared that in some of the villages the photographers entered with the Yanks only twenty minutes after the Germans had departed and that some of the villages were still under Hun shell fire.

One of the most striking scenes is said to be the construction of a pontoon bridge, while under fire, from material captured from the Germans.

"Sumatra" in Pathe's Post Travel Series

No. 20 of the Post Travel Series, released by Pathe the week of November 28th, is called "Sumatra," and takes one on the oddest and most instructive journeys of the series. Its views of places and peoples give one a clearer idea of what Holland is doing in this remote part of the globe and what she will continue to do.

There is said to be an entire entertainment itself in Palembang, the Sumatra "metropolis."

Valentine Film Goes Through Sherry

Harold J. Binney's super-production, in which he is directing as well as presenting Vangie Valentine, announces that his picture will be released in November through the Wm. L. Sherry Service. Mr. Binney regards the story, which is an original scenario by George Edwardes-Hall, as being one of the most effective vehicles he has ever handled.

It deals with romance and mystery, the dominant themes being love and adventure.

Goldwyn Salesmen "Carry On"

Goldwyn's National Sales Organization Bucks the Line—Offsetting Epidemic's Effects—No Salesmen Laid Off

IT takes more than a country-wide epidemic and the temporary suspension of thousands of theatres to break down the enthusiasm of Goldwyn's big national sales organization. Goldwyn prides itself upon having a distributing mechanism unlike any other in the industry; an organization of exceptional enthusiasm and loyalty.

During the period of the epidemic and the consequent closing down both of theatres and new releases Goldwyn reports that it has not laid off a salesman in its offices, has not discontinued the policy of having its men travel their accustomed territories.

Thus during the most trying time that ever confronted exhibitors, Goldwyn men have been at the elbow of the company's customers aiding them wherever possible, going over plans with owners of theatres for the reopening of their houses.

During this period of national distress for a great industry no Goldwyn salesman or manager has endeavored to force sales at a time when minds were concerned with other affairs. His company has sought in many ways to perform the functions of a great relief organization and to draw itself into even closer relation with its customers and prospective customers than ever before, according to report.

One of the immediate results of this policy is said to have been a tremendous volume of virtually unsolicited business on previously unplayed Goldwyn first-year productions, on the Goldwyn special productions distributed by the company, on Capitol Comedies and on Star Series contracts for the company's newest productions of the current season.

"The Kaiser's Finish" Sold for England

THE English rights to "The Kaiser's Finish," the eight-part special state rights production made by S. L. Warner, have been sold to Mr. Venito Nichols of London, one of the largest of the foreign film operators, for a price said to be almost the equivalent of that which he paid for the same territorial rights to "My Four Years in Germany."

The territory for which Mr. Nichols has obtained distributing rights to "The Kaiser's Finish" includes Great Britain, Wales, Ireland and Scotland.

In purchasing foreign rights to "My Four Years in Germany" Mr. Nichols accepted a financial arrangement which, for size, exceeded the sales price on any other special production he had ever obtained, according to A. Warner, who conducted the negotiations in behalf of both the Gerard picture and "The Kaiser's Finish."

"That this price is closely approached by the one just paid to us for 'The Kaiser's Finish' is a rather remarkable tribute to the value of this special state rights' feature," declared Mr. Warner.

"Mr. Nichols said that the public demand in Great Britain for war stories, with a pronounced military atmosphere, is greater today than it ever has been. The market has grown in size until the British theatre-owners are finding difficulty in getting enough pictures of that type to satisfy their audiences. Conventional dramas are still popular, but they cannot compete on the same block with a war picture."

Nine New Productions Ready at Universal

NINE new productions have just been completed at Universal City including one multiple-reel feature, four Bluebird five-reel photoplays, one two-reel western drama, and three one-reel comedies.

The multiple-reel feature is "Carry-On," Dorothy Phillips' drama of the war, made under the direction of Allen J. Holubar. This is said to be the most expensive production Universal has ever staged, and several months were consumed in the making. More than 5000 persons took part in the production. It is regarded as the most colossal drama Dorothy Phillips has ever attempted, and is said to give her the supreme role of her entire career.

The Bluebird five-reelers include Juanita Hansen's new drama, "The Wrong Side of Paradise," produced by Colin Campbell from H. Tipton Steck's screen version of George Hull's magazine story; "Miss Doris, Safe Cracker," a Priscilla Dean production dealing with the underworld, produced by Jack Dillon from one of Jack Boyle's "Boston Blackie" stories, "Breathers There a Man," a new Monroe Salisbury drama produced by William Wolbert from George Hull's novelette of the same name; and "The Beautiful Mongrel" starring Carmel Myers, produced by Paul Powell from the original story by Sonya Levien.

"Love's Alibi" is the title of the two-reel western starring Helen Gibson just finished by Harry Harvey. The comedies include "An Amateur Daniel" featuring Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber; "Mixed Nuts" starring Willard Louis and Molly Malone, directed by Roy Clements, and "100 Per Cent American," a Lyons-Moran fun offering directed by Arthur Hotaling.

Fox Eliminates November Exhibitors' Bulletin

The October number of the William Fox Exhibitors' Bulletin, an elaborate magazine which is published monthly for the benefit of exhibitors, is just off the press. In this number the service department, which has won commendation from exhibitors for its helpfulness, has been developed to a higher degree with the aim of being of even greater assistance to showmen.

Because of the production shut-down, the next issue of the Exhibitors' Bulletin will be the December number. It will be out about November 10, and will give complete information regarding the winter policy of the Fox Film Corporation. Several announcements of special interest to exhibitors are scheduled for this number, it is said.

Eddie Polo Goes Back to Circus for Scenes

Eddie Polo, who is now making a serial of the tanbark, "The Lure of the Circus," for the Universal, actually went back to the old days under the big top, and demonstrated that although he had been a screenland star for the past few years, he could still "come back" and deliver the goods as a crackerjack aerial performer.

In appreciation of Eddie's services, the circus management turned the entire show over to Director Jack McGowan for shooting scenes for his chaptered melodrama. McGowan estimates it would have cost Universal $250,000 to reproduce the scenes secured at the circus if they had had to be taken at Universal City.

Nazimova's "Eye for Eye" Titles from Paintings

Title paintings of richness and beauty are said to add to the magnificence of Mme. Nazimova's production de luxe, "Eye for Eye," and aid in interpreting the meaning and mystery of this brilliant romance of the Orient.

"Eye for Eye" has been directed by Albert Capellani, as adapted by himself and June Mathis from the play by the Great Belgian dramatist. It will be presented in seven acts by Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger.

Kitty Gordon's First for United Is "Adele"

President Berst of United Picture Theatres of America announces "Adele" as the title selected for Kitty Gordon's first United superpicture. This title follows the name of the heroine in Adele Bleneau's thrilling romance, "The Nurse's Story," on which the picture is based.

With her first United picture nearing completion, Miss Gordon has settled down with enthusiasm to the prospect of the extended stay in California necessitated by the series of six other pictures she is to make for United.

Ince Forms Plan to Screen the Public

Thomas H. Ince, producer of Paramount and Artcraft pictures, has conceived a plan to place on the motion picture screens in American training camps and at Y. M. C. A. huts overseas, close-up pictures of relatives here of the boys at the front. This idea will be carried out by Mr. Ince himself, assisted by a complete motion picture organization from his studio and will offer another patriotic "bit" by this well-known producer.

The plan was tested at San Diego, California, and found success. At Balboa Park many thousand relatives of boys "over there" formed in line before the camera and presented their best smiles to be shown to their loved ones overseas. Newspapers, military and civic officials gave the project their most enthusiastic cooperation. Among those who gave much assistance were Rear-Admiral W. F. Fullam, commander of the reserve force, Pacific fleet; Brig.-Gen. Peter W. Davison, temporarily in command of the 16th Division at Camp Kearny, and Capt. W. D. Brotherton, commander of the naval training station.

In addition to taking pictures of the relatives and frienrds of these in service Mr. Ince filmed many scenes that will cheer the local boys at the front. These will be edited with the close-ups so that the entire picture will be of great interest to those who will view it. C. Gardner Sullivan, chief of the Ince scenario staff, is writing the subtitles, and Bert Lannon is in charge of general arrangements.

Robertson-Cole in New Deals

Entire World's Rights, Including United States, Is Secured for Eight Rhodes Pictures by the Robertson-Cole Company

BY a special arrangement with the National Film Corporation of America the Robertson-Cole Company has secured the entire world's rights, including the United States, for the National's Billie Rhodes pictures and also the picture starring Henry B. Walthal, besides looking after all the National Film Corporation's interests.

"Smiling Billy" Parsons has closed his New York offices and will confine himself entirely to producing. Robertson-Cole will supervise the accounts of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation in relation to the Parsons Capitol Comedies and it will have authority to approve all contracts made through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit for the release of the National's feature, "The Romance of Tarzan," the concluding chapters of "Tarzan of the Apes."

The National Film Corporation is planning to produce a new attraction, completing it for release before next summer. The title and subject have not yet been announced, but Robertson-Cole will control all distributing rights.

The contract with the National Film Corporation calls for the handling of eight Billie Rhodes pictures during the coming year. The first, "The Girl of My Dreams," completed a short time ago, will be given extensive advertising by Robertson-Cole and will shortly have a special premiere in New York City.

The initial Walthall picture will be "And a Still Voice," completed before the star came East to play in a show on Broadway. Within the past few weeks Robertson-Cole closed deals whereby all J. Warren Kerrigan pictures and Screencraft features are to be sold by them throughout the world, except the United States. The Robertson-Cole Company has also acquired for the entire world, including this country, the series of eight William Desmond pictures to be made by Jesse D. Hampton and Martin Johnson's phenomenal "Cannibals of the South Seas."

New York Rights Sold for "Cannibal" Film

THE First National Exhibitors' Exchange has secured for distribution in the State of New York, Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas." The deal has just been consummated with the Robertson-Cole Company, which controls the world's rights to this collection of motion pictures. Manager Ralph Clark personally conducted the negotiations for the First National Exhibitors' Exchange.

The First National Exchange is arranging an elaborate advertising campaign for these pictures, for special billboard display throughout New York and other cities of the state. These are said to be of distinct pictorial and artistic beauty, and the most unusual paper of a film in many months.

A handsome color scheme—with tropical blues, greens and yellows predominating—makes the billboard tremendously eye-arresting. It is said that the paper catches the spirit and atmosphere of "Cannibals of the South Seas" in remarkable fashion.

Universal Stars Are Energetic

During Enforced Vacation the Many Universal Favorites Busy Themselves in Various Forms of Patriotic Service

DURING the enforced vacation due to influenza, Universal's stars are devoting their energies to various forms of patriotic service.

Little Juanita Hansen is the only one in the group whose activities are not up to high speed. Miss Hansen's sole occupation is to lie in bed and fight her own case of influenza. Most of the others are providing good cheer for soldiers, sailors and influenza sufferers, or are engaged in work that will help the government.

Dorothy Phillips is dressing dolls for the Red Cross. Mary MacLaren has become a farmerette. Carmel Myers takes her machine out daily and gives joy rides to homesick soldiers and sailors.

Edith Roberts has gone to Catalina to fish for tuna to serve the market. Ruth Clifford has procured a gauze mask and is appearing in Los Angeles hospitals and singing for influenza sufferers.

Marie Walcamp is busy writing scores of letters to soldiers in France. Fritzi Brunette is hard at work with her husband, Bob Daley, composing a brand new war song. Mae Murray was reported a few days ago almost ready for a trip to New York.

Harry Carey is up on his ranch, directing operations to augment the food supply. Monroe Salisbury is also busy on his ranch, with special activity in the war against influenza.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, the comedy film team, have developed a comedy skit which they intend to stage at various army camps for the entertainment of soldiers.

Eddie Polo is not so terribly active these days, as he has accumulated several dozen cuts and bruises in various stunts he has performed for the serial film "The Lure of the Circus."

Priscilla Dean has a big task on her hands visiting modistes and milliners and getting together a new wardrobe.

Hampton Gets Stories for Kerrigan

Jesse D. Hampton seems to have no difficulty in finding suitable stories for his star, J. Warren Kerrigan. He has just announced to the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, distributors of Hampton-Kerrigan pictures, that he has secured "Four-Ace Baker," a picturesque melodrama of the days of '49, and "Uncharted Channels," a very beautiful comedy-romance.

These will follow "Three X Gordon," an up-to-the-second comedy-drama; "Come Again, Smith," a comedy-melodrama, and "The Unfinished Story," an Alaskan drama.

It's a Good Idea!

Universal exchanges report having found considerable advantage from joining the Boards of Trade in their town. This idea was suggested by the Universal several weeks ago.

As a result the heads of the various exchanges at once made themselves members of the commercial club in their town. There is always either a Board of Trade or a Chamber of Commerce or a commercial club of some sort in every city of importance. Membership in these organizations places the exchange man in touch with all the important business and civic affairs of his community.

Alice Blache to Direct for Leonce Perret

Leonce Perret has secured the services of Mme. Alice Blache to direct a series of pictures under his supervision. Among the stars she has directed in this country are: Florence Reed, Holbrook Blinn, Doris Kenyon, Catherine Calvert, and Bessie Love.

The first Blache picture for M. Perret will be from a scenario written by himself but not yet named. The star whose work will be supervised by Mme. Blache will be Dolores Cassinelli, who has already appeared in the two patriotic spectacles, "Lafayette, We Come!" and "Stars of Glory."

An E. Forst Story for Billie Rhodes

"Such a Little Genius," by E. Forst, author of "Sylvia on a Spree" and "Prescription," has been purchased by Isadore Bernstein, manager of productions for National Film Corporation for the new star Billie Rhodes.

Although a new writer in film circles, Mr. Forst has had great success, having placed four stories within the past two weeks for Emmy Wehlen, June Elvidge, and Billie Rhodes.

Production on Miss Rhodes' story will be started as soon as the enforced shutdown is lifted.

"Her Moment," Reported as Scoring Big

A highly successful first run engagement of "Her Moment" at Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, during the first week of October is reported by Manager George J. Ekre of the General Film exchange in that city. The seven-part drama written by Samuel H. London, featuring Anna Luther and directed by Frank Beal, headed the week's program.

The same General Film manager announces that John W. Noble's drama, "Shame," with Zena Keefe, has just concluded a Los Angeles run.

Universal Cameras Get Close-Up of Wilson

Cameramen for the Current Events and Animated Weekly service of the Universal accomplished a feat last Saturday when they captured a close-up picture of President Wilson marching at the head of the great Columbus Day parade in New York.

They did this in the face of organized preventive measures by a squad of police, and in full view of thousands. Some suggestion of what happened is shown in the pictures they got.

Current Events is said to be full of thrilling scenes attending the Columbus Day demonstration. A fireman is shown making a leap from the third floor of the Morgan building. Another fireman is seen climbing to a dizzy height on a perpendicular extension ladder.

Other scenes depict the review held recently at Annapolis Naval Academy when Lord Geddes, First Lord of the British Admiralty, was the honored guest.

"The Common Cause" Now Ready

Advance prints on "The Common Cause" have been shipped to all branches of the Vitagraph Distributing Organization and will be available for showing to exhibitors this week, it is announced.

Although the definite date of release has not been fixed, the Vitagraph, through which Commodore J. Stuart Blackton's big drama is to be offered, is going ahead with its plans for an extensive campaign in the United States and Canada.

For two weeks, it is announced, artists have been busily engaged in making sketches for the paper and advertising material that is to be supplied to exhibitors, and work is well advanced on it.

Intensive Campaign for "The Common Law"

LIKE "Over the Top," Womanhood, the Glory of the Nation," "Within the Law," "The Girl Philippa," and "The Battle Cry of Peace," "The Common Cause," J. Stuart Blackton's latest screen production, will be made one of the big releases of the season.

The Vitagraph Distributing Organization, which handled all of the Vitagraph specials mentioned, is anticipating splendid results with it, and is now engaged in completing plans for the exploitation of "The Common Cause" with one of the most extensive and energetic advertising campaigns that it has given to any picture in recent years.

The production is described as a stirring drama with many novelties and humorous situations and was written by J. Hartley Manners, author of "Peg o' My Heart," "Out There" and other plays, and Major Ian Hay Beith, author of "The First Hundred Thousand." The scenario was written by Anthony Paul Kelly.

The cast is said to be one of great power. Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Breamer are featured at its head and in their support are seen Lieut. Lawrence Grossmith, the English comedian and veteran of the war; Charles and Violet Blackton, Huntley Gordon, Mlle. Marcel, Philip Van Lorn and Louis Dean, who has won fame by his impersonation of the Kaiser in "Over the Top" and several other recent big productions.

In the prologue and epilogue which present the theme of "The Common Cause" are said to be five of the most famous women on the American stage today. Marjorie Rambeau appears as "Columbia," Julia Arthur as "Italy," Violet Heming as "Britannia," Irene Castle as "France," and Effie Shannon as "Belgium."

Scenes for the picture with the exception of the official battle shots, were made partly in New York and partly in Chicago.

United Adds Members—Pictures in Work

C. R. SEELYE, secretary of United Pictures Theatres of America, momentarily interrupted the tour which he is making in the interests of that organization, and was at his desk in the Mecca building for a few days. Mr. Seelye reports further results in Michigan from the lead taken by C. H. Miles, the prominent Detroit exhibitor, in joining United.

In addition to the number of exhibitors already published as having linked up with United in that section, further enrollments included Rialto, Gladwin, Park and Dawn theatres at Detroit, and Orpheum, Ann Arbor, and Temple at Toledo.

David M. Thomas, formerly Fox manager at St. Louis, succeeds C. Bayley as United manager at Cleveland.

On receiving a telegram of felicitation from President Berst of United Picture Theatres of America on the success of the initial showing of "The Light of Western Stars" Dustin Farnum out in Los Angeles is reported to have expressed his gratification at the news and to have remarked, "It is a great picture, and I want to add that the next one "A Man in the Open" is going to be even a more exceptional feature. I feel very enthusiastic over it."

Of "A Man in the Open" President Berst says, "This is Roger Pocock's most famous story and gives Dustin Farnum great opportunity for his virile talent."

Zukor Gets Praise in England

U. S. Consul General Pays Tribute to American Pictures—President of Famous Players Swells Fund for Disabled Soldiers

THE publicity department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation this week called attention to a high compliment recently paid Adolph Zukor in England.

The statement announces that at a luncheon on October 3, held by members of the motion picture industry of England in London, Robert P. Skinner, Consul General for the United States, paid remarkable tribute to Adolph Zukor, President of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. On this occasion Mr. Skinner turned over to the Chairman Mr. Zukor's check for 1,000 pounds for His Majesty King George's Fund for the Disabled, which brought forth the greatest demonstration ever given an American citizen, according to cabled reports.

In his speech, Mr. Skinner expressed his pleasure at the fact that the Motion Picture Industry in America has been recognized as a national asset and hoped the time was near when the British motion picture industry would also be recognized in a similar manner. Through C. A. Clegg of the Famous Players-Film Company, Ltd., London, Mr. Zukor's check was handed to Mr. Skinner, who in his address, said:

"It is indeed a great pleasure for me to meet you, gentlemen of the British Moving Picture Industry, because I feel that your wonderful business being so closely entwined with that of our country, I am less of a stranger than I would be at a meeting of any other British business body. And believe me, it is today the devout desire of every American to discover that something by which he can get into closer fraternal touch with his elder cousin, the Britisher.

"To my mind the one beautiful thing the war has brought about is this family reunion—not a mere trip or a visit to the old folks at home, but a mission of practical assistance founded upon a family sense of justice and a blood born desire to stand by our own kith and kin—the Britisher.

"My business here is really a happy illustration of this idea, for Mr. C. A. Clegg, of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has asked me to hand your Chairman, on behalf of my distinguished countryman, Mr. Adolph Zukor, a cheque for 1,000 pounds for His Majesty King George's Fund for the Disabled.

"Mr. Zukor, as many of you know, is Chairman of the Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, appointed to co-operate with the financial department of the American Government. He has thrown the vast organization known as the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation open to the needs of the Allied cause. He is spending all his days in the development and distribution of propaganda pictures. His aggregation of stars, the most talented and widely known in the business, have time and again been taken from their normal work and sent on national tours at his expense, in the interests of Liberty Bond sales, which I am glad to state have shown prodigious results.

"In fact no American citizen has worked harder or longer in the united interests of the Allies than Mr. Zukor, and it is extremely pleasant to record that his efforts have obtained the widest appreciation from every quarter of the globe.

"I am afraid that the rush and drive of the war has caused the majority to lose sight of the immense contribution of service made by the British motion picture industry, but rest assured that when the roar of battle has died out and the world is again in a reflective mood, the gigantic efforts of the British industry will be taken full account of, and I feel safe in saying that however often the call may be made, your splendid record of the past will always be a guide to your future achievements.

"It is with no little pleasure that I tell you that the Motion Picture Industry in America has been recognized as a national asset, and I hope the time is near when the British Motion Picture Industry is also recognized here."

Educational Cites Big Increase in Bookings

The Educational Films Corporation is announced as enjoying a remarkable increase of Greater New York bookings as the result of the unusual conditions in the industry. Not only have many new houses taken up the Educational films, but the old accounts have doubled or quadrupled their service, frequently arranging to play the Educational's seven days a week, Educational declares.

The new interest thereby created among the exhibitors and the public, it is believed, will outlast the temporary condition of film scarcity. E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the corporation, said:

"Wherever Educational has been once introduced, it is hardly ever cancelled—the advantages of balancing the program with instructive and amusing short features are so obvious. I anticipate in consequence a general permanent increase in our New York business, while reports from the field outside New York City are all optimistic that the resumption of motion picture exhibition throughout the country will bring with it a bigger demand for the instructive pictures."

"America's Answer" Sunday

The City Council of Evanston, Ill., has refused to permit the opening of motion picture theatres on Sundays, but broke the rule for "America's Answer," the U. S. Official War picture, which was shown Sunday, October 13, as a stimulant for the local Liberty Loan drive. It proved very effective, according to reports.

Vitagraph Officials Are Very Optimistic

A. W. Goff, assistant general manager of the Vitagraph Distributing Organization, and E. Auger, eastern division manager, have just completed a swing around the eastern circuit, and Mr. Goff is of the opinion that exhibitors are destined to have one of their most prosperous seasons as soon as the theatres are reopened.

"We visited Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, Cincinnati, New Orleans, Atlanta, Washington and Philadelphia," said Mr. Goff, "and while the theatres were closed in most of the cities, the exhibitors looked at the situation philosophically. They apparently realized that the closing order was a vital necessity in the interest of public welfare, and they are using their time to plan for the future.

"All of the exhibitors seemed to feel that just as soon as the ban on theatres is lifted that business will be greater than it has ever been before. We found Vitagraph's business better than at any time in the history of our distributing organization."

"Bridge of Ships" Meets Big Demand

One of the announced surprises in the distribution of "Our Bridge of Ships," by the General Film Company, has been the demand for the picture in the inland Western States. When the Division of Films, of the Committee of Public Information, issued this two-reel picture of the ever-growing activities in American shipyards and the rapid bridging of the Atlantic with steel and wooden ships, it was supposed that the coast cities would be interested to a greater degree than the inland towns. It has been found, however, that while the Atlantic and Pacific Coast cities have been strong for the picture, the interest in and around Denver, in the plains cities and the mountain towns has been remarkable.

The prints at the Denver Exchange of the General Film Company, it is announced, have not only had notable engagements in Denver, but they have also been booked solidly ever since, and for some time to come. In fact, that district could utilize more film.

Vitagraph Gives Releases for November 11

The Vitagraph program of releases for the week of November 11 has been scheduled as follows:

Blue Ribbon Feature — Five Parts — "Everybody's Girl," featuring Alice Joyce. Adapted from an O. Henry story. Directed by Tom Terriss.

Serial—Two Parts—"The Noose," episode No. 5 of "The Iron Test," featuring Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway. Written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady. Directed by Paul Hurst.

Big V Special Comedy—Two Parts—"Frauds and Frenzies," featuring Lawrence Semon. Written and directed by Lawrence Semon.

Doris Kenyon, De Luxe Star, in "Wild Honey." Which Wm. L. Sherry Will Distribute

Fox Revises Schedule of Forthcoming Releases

Compelled to revise all releasing schedules because of the halt in producing, Fox Film Corporation announces that beginning Sunday, Nov. 10, the Big Timely Pictures' release will be "18 to 45."

Standard Pictures' release on Nov. 10 is "The Woman Who Gave," starring Evelyn Nesbit; Nov. 24, Theda Bara in "The She Devil; Dec. 8, "I Want to Forget," starring Evelyn Nesbit; Dec. 22, William Farnum in "The Man Hunter"; Jan. 5, Theda Bara in "The Siren's Song."

Victory Pictures start Nov. 17 with Tom Mix in "Fame and Fortune"; Dec. 1, "The Strange Woman," starring Gladys Brockwell; Dec. 15, "I'll Say So," with George Walsh; Dec. 29, "Treat 'Em Rough," starring Tom Mix; Jan. 26, George Walsh in "Luck and Pluck."

Excel Pictures has a Nov. 10 release in "Tell It to the Marines," with Jane and Katherine Lee; Nov. 24, Virginia Pearson in "Buchanan's Wife"; Dec. 8, "Caught in the Act," starring Peggy Hyland; Dec. 22, Madlaine Traverse in "The Danger Zone."

Fox Extravaganza's schedule shows that "Fan Fan" will be released Nov. 17; "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves," Nov. 24. "Mongrels" is the Fox-Lehrman comedy listed for Nov. 10, and the Mutt and Jeff Cartoons start again Nov. 10 with "The Dough Boy."

Town and Country Films in New Offices

Town and Country Films, Inc., producers of the Paramount-Flagg comedies, have moved into their new offices at 25 West 45th street, New York City, where they will conduct all the business connected with the production of the pictures.

In addition to their business offices they have provided adequate cutting and assembling rooms, projection room, etc.

MacDowell Joins Hart

Melbourne MacDowell, the character actor, is in the cast of "Branding Broadway," the forthcoming William S. Hart Artcraft picture which follows "The Border Wireless."

About New Pictures

"Our Colored Fighters," produced by the Division of Films, will be handled by Downing Film Company, a concern composed of colored people, and located in the Astor theatre building, New York City. It is in two reels and will be exploited particularly in the sections inhabited by colored people.

Beulah Marie Dix wrote "Women's Weapons" especially for Ethel Clayton. This Paramount offering is directed by Robert G. Vignola, assisted by Lou Howland. James Neill, the character actor, has a fine part.

"The Danger Zone" is the first William Fox Excel picture starring Madlaine Traverse. Marshal Bruce Bannington wrote the story; Denison Clift and Adrian Johnson, the scenario, and Frank Beal directed it.

Priscilla Dean is featured in the latest Universal special attraction, entitled "She Hired a Husband." It is described as possessing excellent out-door scenes.

Goldwyn patriotic spectacle, "For the Freedom of the World," is reported as making a big hit throughout Great Britain. The principal lead in the production is E. K. Lincoln.

May Robson plays the part of an old squaw in "The Good Indian" from Frank Powell's adaptation of B. M. Bower's book. Produced by Sunset Pictures of San Antonio and distributed by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

In "Her Country First," the Paramount picture in which Vivian Martin is starred John Parke-Jones plays the role of a young man addicted to the flowing bowl in "Jane Goes a-Wooing."

Mme. Alla Nazimova's director, Albert Capellani, has arrived at the studios in Hollywood and will immediately prepare to direct the Russian actress in the first Nazimova production she will make on the Pacific Coast.

Lady Tsen Mei, the only Chinese star of the cinema, makes her debut as a screen star in Ira M. Lowry's "For the Freedom of the East," a Betzwood Film Company production distributed by Goldwyn.

Billy Human creates the role of the weak brother in "The Forfeit," the Frank Powell production that will be the first of a series distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

May Allison drives an automobile through the side of a bungalow in "Thirty Days," her newest picture, which is in the final stages of production at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood.

The sum of $1,178.37 was realized through the sale of War Saving and Thrift Stamps at the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's booth during the recent Motion Picture Exposition at Madison Square Garden.

Priscilla Dean, pretty star of the Univers Film Company, has just received a letter from Eddie Rickenbacker, the famous American "ace," announcing he is in a Paris hospital suffering with broken ear drums.

Henry Warwick, who played in "The Caillaux Case," has been engaged by Charles Coburn to play the colonel in the New York production of Capt. Bruce Bairnsfather's London success, "The Better 'Ole."

Claire Whitney will play the role of Molly Preston in Metro's forthcoming picturization of the patriotic drama, "The Man Who Stayed at Home," directed by Director Herbert Blache.

Dr. H. V. Barclay of 644 Madison avenue, New York, recognized his son, now dead, in the Jewel production, "Crashing Through to Berlin."

Despite the public tendency in New York to avoid getting into crowds during the influenza epidemic, the Strand theatre played to exceptional business on its week's run of "The Romance of Tarzan."

Seventy-six aeroplanes in gigantic review over Long Island forms one of the most spectacular scenes in the William Fox production, "18 to 45," directed by R. A. Walsh.

It was necessary to send a representative abroad to secure many of the facts and revelations shown in "The Kaiser's Finish," the eight-part photoplay which S. L. Warner has produced for the state rights market.

Julia Calhoun will play the part of Fraulein Schroeder in Metro's forthcoming picturization of "The Man Who Stayed at Home."

Marguerite Marsh, who will be seen opposite Houdini in the B. A. Rolfe serial, "The Master Mystery"

Extra Week for Chaplin at Strand Theatre

For what is stated to be the first time in the history of the Strand theatre in New York City, a film has been held over for an extra week. The honor fell to Charlie Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms."

This in face of the fact that the First National had booked the same picture in a great many of the surrounding houses during the second week's run.

Mr. Howard Edel, manager of the Strand, announced that "both press and public demand" that "Shoulder Arms" be continued another full week.

The ruling by the New York health authorities prohibiting standees in theatres cost the Strand, on Monday nights, receipts estimated at $1,400.

At the end of the second evening performance at 9:30 o'clock, the house was refilled and the ushers were compelled by representatives of the Board of Health to close the doors to a lobby still jammed to the street curb and for a block in either direction, with people demanding admittance for standing room.

Anna Case's First Film Title Is Changed

The name of Anna Case's first picture, which has been advertised as "The Golden Chance," is to be changed, due to the fact that another production was recently released under a similar title.

While many tentative titles are being considered, first choice seems to be in favor of "The Hidden Truth," and this is most likely the name under which it will be given to the public.

Harris Gordon Re-engaged By Screencraft

Harris Gordon, who portrayed the leading juvenile role in Screencraft's initial offering, "The Prodigal Wife," has been re-engaged by that organization for their second production.

The story is as yet unnamed, but will be produced under the direction of Frank Reicher at the New Rochelle studio. Mr. Gordon will play opposite Mollie King.

Sweet Film Declared "Knockout"

Harry Garson and Marshall Neilan Pronounce "The Unpardonable Sin," Starring Blanche Sweet, the Biggest Production of the Year

HARRY GARSON and Marshall Neilan make no bones in declaring "The Unpardonable Sin," Major Rupert Hughes' startling story of the Germans in Belgium, in which Blanche Sweet is starred, and which vehicle serves to bring this popular actress back to the screen after more than a year's absence as the biggest and most important production of the year.

Mr. Garson wires: "'The Unpardonable Sin' is the most wonderful picture I have ever seen. It is a great big special with a tremendous kick, a production that only comes once in a lifetime. Miss Sweet looks better than ever, and her double portrayal of the two sisters, Dimny Parcot and Alice Parcot, will be an absolute knockout. There is no question but what the picture will have a long and successful run in New York."

And this from Marshall Neilan, who directed the picture in person: "'The Unpardonable Sin' is by far the biggest and best production I have ever done. There is punch and situations one after the other from beginning to end such as you have never seen in any other picture. 'The Unpardonable Sin' will, I am sure, create a furore."

Mr. Neilan, well known as one of the top-notch directors in the business, has certainly let down the bars of his usual conservatism, and it is predicted that he has pulled a surprise of some sort.

Negotiations are now under way with several first class legitimate houses to house "The Unpardonable Sin" for a long run, beginning about December 1st. Just what theatre will be selected is not known, but will be decided upon in a few days.

The picture is in eight reels. A tremendous advertising campaign, national in its scope, is promised for this production.

Blanche Sweet and Wallace Beery in the Harry Garson Production, "The Unpardonable Sin"

Blanche Sweet plays two parts, Dimny Parcot and sister. The sister writes from Belgium that she has become the victim of German "kultur," and is so heartbroken that she begs her sister not to look for her. Dimny's trip from Los Angeles to Belgium is fraught with many adventures and great peril.

Wallace Beery portrays the part of Col. Klem, the German officer who has so ruthlessly mistreated the sister, and Dimny manages to meet him and foil him later. The entire eight reels are declared to be full of power and action, with many thrills. It has the "happy ending."

Mr. Garson will show the production to the Government officials at Washington on his way from Los Angeles.

Pathe Sees Big Opportunity in Shut-Down

THE temporary shut down of production activities resolved upon by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has affected every producer and distributor of note.

This is an opportunity which is being taken advantage of by the firm of Pathe Exchange, Inc. Pathe has a range of features which have played since release in the smaller cities but which have been held out of the metropolitan centers awaiting a favorable opportunity to secure a worthy first house for initial presentation.

Pathe furnished a list of their "best sellers" on the open market basis—twenty recent releases of Pathe Plays, Extra Selected Star Photoplays, Pathe productions, and Pathe Program Features: Fannie Ward in "Innocent"; Frank Keenan in "Loaded Dice"; Irene Castle in "The Hillcrest Mystery"; Bryant Washburn in "Twenty-One"; Frank Keenan in "Ruler of the Road"; Irene Castle in "The Mysterious Client"; Fannie Ward in "The Yellow Ticket"; Bryant Washburn in "Kidder & Ko"; Frank Keenan in "More Trouble"; Irene Castle in "The First Law"; Bryant Washburn in "The Ghost of the Rancho"; Irene Castle in "The Girl from Bohemia"; and Baby Marie Osborne in "A Little Patriot," "Dolly Does Her Bit," "The Voice of Destiny," and "Cupid by Proxy"; also Gladys Hulette in "Over the Hill," "Mrs. Slacker," "For Sale" and "Annexing Bill."

Two More Companies to Produce at Brunton's

Last week it was announced that ten companies had completed plans to produce at the Brunton studios, Los Angeles. Some of these companies are now at work. This week word comes from the studios that two additional producing companies have been added to the list.

Gloria Joy is the star in one of the new companies, while the second producer is said to be Monte Katterjohn, well-known author and scenario writer.

Parke Finishes Picture for Educational

Educational's "Romance of Coal" is completed by William Parke, who has been directing this special production since July 15. His labors have included four weeks in the West Virginia mining fields, six weeks in studio and a month devoted to the script, technical details, editing, titling and assembling.

During the period referred to his efforts have been seconded by a zealous and efficient company, a faithful technical staff and the unstinted co-operation of the Educational's executives. Due credit should be given in this connection to Miss Caroline Gentry, the originator of the idea, and to E. Lloyd Sheldon, the playwright, who fashioned the story. Tom Cushing, Mr. Parke's continuity writer, who put the finishing touches on the scenario, is now in France engaged in the patriotic work of soldier entertainment.

When the picture was privately viewed on October 28, it was declared that the characteristic Parke qualities were fully in evidence. It was recalled that many of these qualities were seen in his former Pathe production of "The Yellow Ticket."

"The Romance of Coal" is said to contain spectacular opportunities reminiscent of "Peer Gynt" and other spectacles that the director put on for Richard Mansfield and E. H. Sothern in the old "legitimate" days. Especially notable is the way he handles actors.

It is declared that the brain that directed the Castle Square "stock" in Boston and the Colonial in Pittsfield loses nothing of its cunning in the more flexible medium of the screen.

Following the completion of the director's labors "The Romance of Coal" will be exhibited for the approval of the Federal Fuel Administrator and the heads of the fuel industry throughout the country. It will subsequently be seen at a trade showing, and will then be pre-released at one of the Broadway theatres prior to its general distribution to the motion picture houses.

Four Mid-West States Sold for "Mickey"

J. W. Burke, manager of the Mid-West Greater Features Company, with headquarters in Denver, Colo., announces that his company has purchased from Triangle Film Corporation the rights for "Mickey" for the states of Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and Nevada, and is preparing to put it out on an elaborate scale.

Latest Universal "Clock" Series at Broadway

"Around the Clock With the Marines," the latest of the "Clock" series of two-reelers to be released by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, will have its premiere showing in the Broadway theatre on November 4, where it will run for a week.

This feature was produced under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A.

Marion Davies Will Next Be Presented by Select in "The Belle of New York"

Tourneur's "Woman" Plays Rothapfel's Rivoli

For the second time within a very few weeks S. L. Rothapfel has chosen a Maurice Tourneur production to be featured at the Rivoli theatre. "Woman" is Mr. Tourneur's latest production, and "Sporting Life" had just played the same theatre several weeks ago.

"Woman" is attracting a more than average interest, as it is heralded as a distinct step in the development of the producer of "Sporting Life," "the Blue Bird," "Prunella" and other equally as well known productions.

"Mr. Tourneur is a firm believer in the worth of a story or theme rather than in the exploitation of a star. He is now at work on a detective melodrama, "My Lady's Garter," adapted from the late Jacques Frutelle's novel, and the film has as its cast Sylvia Breamer, Wyndham Standing, H. E. Herbert, Paul Clerget, Charles Craig, Warner Richmond and Warren Cook.

The distribution of "Woman," as well as "My Lady's Garter" and forthcoming productions, is in the hands of Hiller and Wilk, Inc.

Lillian Hall in Next Rapf Production

Lillian Hall, ingenue, will shortly be seen in Harry Rapf's production, now in preparation, entitled "Wanted For Murder," and which stars Elaine Hammerstein. Miss Hall appears in the role of the star's sister. Her most recent work was in one of the principal roles of William A. Brady's special production, "Little Women."

David Powell to Goldwyn for Year Contract

David Powell has signed a year's contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to go to the coast and play leading parts.

He has played with Mary Pickford, Elsie Ferguson, Billie Burke, Alice Brady, Clara Kimball Young and others.

Here Are the Four Little Women, and Decidedly Attractive Ones, in William A. Brady's Production of "Little Women"

Brady's "Little Women" Reaches Screen

WILLIAM A. BRADY announces the completion of his picturization of "Little Women," and the bringing to life on the screen of the four little women—Meg, Jo, Beth and Amy.

For forty years Louisa M. Alcott's story has been read the world over. "Little Women" has been translated into more languages than the works of Dickens, and its appeal is said to continue as strong today as it was when first published. Practically every woman and girl in this country has read or is reading "Little Women," and this is equally true of England.

In transferring "Little Women" to the screen, Mr. Brady was successful in an undertaking in which many others had failed—that of securing the motion picture rights to the story. With such a vast, world wide audience ready made, so to speak, for a picture of the Alcott story, the estate of Louisa M. Alcott was constantly in receipt of offers for the picture rights. It remained for Mr. Brady, however, to secure those rights, and in securing them he secured also the active cooperation and assistance of the Alcott heirs, with permission to use anything and everything that would be of value.

"Little Women" was filmed in and about the actual house in Concord, New Hampshire, occupied by the Alcott family, and which has been preserved and stands today exactly as it was when "Little Women" was written, thanks to the Alcott Memorial Committee. Everyone of the characters which will appear on the screen in "Little Women" was passed upon by the surviving members of the Alcott family before a foot of film was taken. The four "Little Women" are portrayed respectively by Isabel Lamon, Dorothy Bernard, Lillian Hall and Florence Flinn. Henry Hull is John Brook and Conrad Nagel, Laurie.

Harley Knoles directed "Little Women." The picture is in six reels, and is announced for release on a territorial basis.

Lila Lee Comes East

"Cuddles"—otherwise Lila Lee—Paramount's youngest star, has progressed so rapidly with her productions at the Lasky studio that she has been granted a vacation of about a month and will leave shortly for New York, it is reported.

Miss Lee will, if she goes East, visit her guardians, Mr. and Mrs. Gus Edwards, in New York, and is delighted with the prospect. She will return in the early part of December to resume operations on a new production.

So far Miss Lee has completed "The Cruise of the Make-Believes," "Such a Little Pirate," "The Secret Garden" and "Puppy Love," and only the first named has been released, so that she is three pictures ahead.

Criterion at Atlanta Buys More Features

"Five Nights," the Victoria Cross feature, has just been purchased by Criterion Film Service of Atlanta, Ga., for its territory. The Criterion just secured the Ford Educational Weekly franchise for that territory also.

This exchange just opened at Atlanta sixty days ago, with M. A. Lightman as president, R. M. Simril, vice-president and general manager, and A. S. Dickinson as secretary-treasurer.

The Criterion controls "Grain of Dust," "Huns Within Our Gates," "The Deemster," Houdini serial, also many westerns and a series of Harold Lockwood and May Allison features.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Paramount-Artcraft

Cecil B. De Mille, who recently began work on a new superproduction for the Artcraft program, expects to finish the picture within a fortnight. He has been filming studio scenes. Some very lavish sets were provided for the picture.

Charles Ray this week was made an honorary member of a new club just formed here by officers and soldiers of the Allied armies who have been returned from overseas service and honorably discharged. It is called the "Fragments from France," and its purpose is to secure employment for returned soldiers.

Norma Talmadge, whose new picture has been titled "The Heart of Wetona," adapted from the play by David Belasco, was on location the larger part of last week. Thomas Meighan is playing the male lead in the picture. It is an Indian story, and it will require about two more weeks in which to finish the production.

The picture on which Vivian Martin has been working for two weeks will be finished the latter part of this week. It is still without a title. Miss Martin will then take a vacation for four weeks.

Bryant Washburn, who returned from the East last week, has been fighting a case of Spanish influenza this week. It was a light attack, however, and he was reported as getting through it in good shape as late as Wednesday.

Ethel Clayton will finish her new production within the next two weeks. Her picture, like other subjects now under production at the Lasky studios, is still unnamed.

Shirley Mason, who has been filming Paramount-Artcraft subjects in the East, will arrive in Los Angeles within the next few weeks and begin production at the western studios on November 11. The nature of her first western picture has not been announced.

Universal Newsettes

Four feature productions were virtually finished at the Universal studios this week, while two final episodes of an eighteen-chapter serial are being shot. Because of the illness of a director, production on one feature play was temporarily suspended. Harry Carey's western melodrama, "Riders of Vengeance," was finished under the direction of Jack Ford. Mary MacLaren worked day and night to complete her latest film effort, "Dearie," under Rupert Julian's direction. The newest feature of Dorothy Phillips, "Destiny," was nearly finished. It is being directed by Rollin Sturgeon. Ruth Clifford and her director, Elsie Jane Wilson, are working on the final scenes of Miss Clifford's newest Bluebird, "Home, James." Fritzi Brunette and William Sheer, in "Sealed Orders," have halted production because of the illness of Director Douglas Gerrard, victim of influenza. "The Lure of the Circus," with Eddie Polo, under the direction of J. P. McGowan, is nearing the eighteenth episode.

Juanita Hansen, star of the Universal "The Wrong Side of Paradise," was attacked this week with a mild form of Spanish influenza.

Word was received at the Universal studios this week that Lawrence Peyton, who played a leading role with Marie Walcamp in "Liberty, a Daughter of the U. S. A.," has been killed in action in France. He entered the service shortly after the outbreak of war.

Fox Studio Doings

Thomas Holding has been selected as leading man for Madlaine Traverse, the Fox star, who has begun production in the West Coast studios on a new Fox production, "The Priceless Love." Director Frank Beal this week rented the Majestic theatre for a number of scenes. More than six hundred people, comprising the leaders of Los Angeles society, filled the seats in one of the scenes.

Word was received this week at the Fox western studios that Theda Bara is in New Orleans finishing some of the scenes of her new play, "The Light." It is a story of France, and presents Miss Bara as the "wickedest woman in Paris." It is said that the French section of New Orleans offered the best scenic atmosphere for the picture of any other city in the United States.

Virginia Lee Corbin, child Fox star, entered the "big girl" class this week when she received a letter from a soldier admirer. The missive was addressed to her by Walter L. Clements, of Los Angeles, who is now with the English Royal Air Forces. He told her of having downed two Hun planes already, and that he hopes to get twenty-two planes before the Allies get to Berlin.

About Metro Players

"Faith," the new picture in which Bert Lytell is being featured, was finished recently at the Metro studios. In one of the scenes more than twenty-five children were brought before the camera. Two Hollywood physicians, Dr. D. R. Broadbent and Dr. Mae A. Wilson, wearing gauze masks, made a painstaking examination of the children before the latter were allowed to take part in the play. This was taken as a precaution against influenza. It was upon the pledge of Director General George D. Baker to observe the strictest medical precautions that the authorities were prevailed upon to allow the children to participate in the picture.

May Allison last week finished her latest picture, "Thirty Days," and she immediately went on a week's vacation. After this first week she expects to spend the remaining three weeks of enforced idleness in doing special war work.

Tom Geraghty, head of Metro's scenario department, has taken a few days' leave, saying before he went away that he expected to return to the studios with two or three good stories in his scenario grip.

George D. Baker, Metro director general, announced last week that when the studios reopen a more comprehensive production program than ever before will be inaugurated. He announced that a number of unusual productions are being contemplated.

Here and There

Work was begun this week at the Brunton studios, which has for its purpose the finishing of the six stages begun several months ago and the final completion of the score or more dressing rooms originally planned for the studios. The hammers of the busy carpenters kept the studios ringing with activity throughout the week. The dressing room plans call for not only a number of elaborate suites for the stars, but for a general reading room and waiting room, where all the accommodations for waiting extras will be provided.

Jay Morley, well-known juvenile actor, has been engaged for juvenile parts with Kitty Gordon's company. Miss Gordon's new production, now being filmed at the Brunton studios, is about half finished.

Bessie Barriscale began work on a new production this week under the direction of Howard Hickman. The title of the subject has not been announced. The continuity was written by Jack Cunningham. Miss Barriscale's newest vehicle, completed last week, was given a preview last Monday at the Brunton studios. A large number of Los Angeles exhibitors, taking advantage of their vacation, were present at the showing.

Mae Murray, Universal star, will leave soon for a brief visit in New York, or as soon as Director Robert Leonard finishes cutting and titling her four latest productions, "The Scarlet Strain," "What Am I Bid?" "Merely Mary McGuire" and "The Big Little Person."

Equipment Service

Mr. Stevens—It's QUALITY.

Quality in the MOTIOGRAPH goes all the way through.

You never hear of a MOTIOGRAPH Gear wearing out.

The Sliding Disc has proven beyond a doubt that it can't wear out.

Other parts of the MOTIOGRAPH are made of the same material.

Can a user ask for better service?

The 600 actual, bona fide installations in the United States Army Cantonments are proof of its superiority.

Uncle Sam's thoroughness of doing things can't be overlooked.

We are returning sliding disc for which please issue credit. We find ours is not worn in the least notwithstanding the fact that we have used it 2 yrs. What do you make them out of?

MOTION PICTURE CARBONS

Standard for Alternating Current Projection

A product that is considered standard by the experts in any industry must meet the requirements of the service for which it is intended. White A. C. Special carbons were designed to fill the need of an efficient light source for alternating current projection. They have been tested by the experts in the motion picture industry, who are satisfied that they fill the bill in every particular.

White A. C. Special Carbons are standard. They give a pure white light of high intensity, noiseless and flickerless operation, and a rugged light source not affected by any slight changes in voltage. No new current consuming regulating devices required. Simply insert a trim of White A. C. Specials.

For Direct Current Projection
THE COLUMBIA-SILVERTIP COMBINATION GIVES A STRONG, PENETRATING LIGHT AND ABSOLUTELY STEADY SCREEN ILLUMINATION.

BETTER SATISFACTION

This notice is addressed to the minority of our subscribers who do not regularly answer advertisements. The service described is, however, open and free to all who wish our help.

We do not wish to discourage you from writing direct to our advertisers; in fact, you do not do enough of it for your own good, but we do want you to get the proper goods to fit your needs.

There are many, perhaps you, who are too busy to write each company separately; therefore we are offering our co-operation, which means that you will receive full information on any subject which you may designate by merely filling out the coupon, designating by numbers the goods in which you are interested.

Your inquiries thus received will be forwarded to reputable manufacturers, even though the goods on which you wish information are not advertised in the "News."

Unique Feature of Liberty Loan Drive

FOR the benefit of theatre men and exhibitors as well as for all others interested in raising the Fourth Liberty Loan, there is a feature which was used in New York City and Brooklyn which was worthy of comment.

The committee in charge of the work conceived the idea of erecting in New York City five permanent projection booths on the five principal transient corners in the city, where pictures were shown each night during the drive to attract crowds and arouse enthusiasm which would lead to the purchase of bonds.

Following each reel of film shown a speaker took his place on the platform below the screen, actually clinching the sales. In addition, in the same territory, eight motor trucks were used equipped with projectors and screens stretching between uprights so placed that the largest possible crowds could see the pictures and hear the speakers. These movable truck equipments, which are shown in the accompanying photographs, traveled all over New York City and Brooklyn each night.

This method of using motion pictures created no end of comment and proved conclusively to the Liberty Loan Committee the value of motion pictures in connection with street corner talks for the promotion of the Loan.

This One Was Mounted on an Open Truck and Hauled from Place to Place to Entertain the Crowds with Pictures to Boost the Fourth Loan

The films used in connection with these installations were composed of one subject produced by the leading film actors and actresses occupying about 300 feet and 600 feet of war film titled so as to show "Where money goes which is subscribed to Liberty Bonds."

* * *

The committee in charge is indebted to the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and the Mutual Film Company for the whole-hearted cooperation which they extended in supplying positive film from which to make up the reels. Assembling of pictures was in charge of Mr. E. M. Roskam, assisted by Mr. Jack Cohn. Both the permanent and movable projection equipment was taken care of by the Independent Company.

Ohm's Law and A. C. Circuits

By A. A. Kluge

[Reprinted from the Electrical Experimentor, October, 1918.]

A SUBJECT that is usually rather hazy in the mind of the practical electrical man who has never had the opportunity of engineering training is the application of Ohm's law to alternating current circuits. This may be traced to a total lack of literature of a concise nature on the matter, for in most text-books it is necessary to digest several chapters of non-essentials before the point is reached.

In alternating current practice we encounter three different kinds of paths or conductors of the current, and it is the method of computing their effective resistances in various combinations that this article has to deal with. The first kind is the simple straight wire, whose resistance, for low frequencies, at least, depends wholly upon its length, cross-section and material.

The second and third cases of paths are the condenser and the inductance coil, designated as capacity and inductance, respectively. Seldom if ever do we find these cases in a circuit alone, but usually in combination with one or both of the other two. For example, an inductance coil always has resistance associated with it, since it is impossible to obtain a perfect conductor.

We can then make a table for the equivalent ohmic resistance of each of these types, from the data we find in text-books, as follows:

Type	Equivalent Ohmic Resistance
Simple	R (Resistance of Conductor)
Capacity	$\frac{1}{CP}$ (C = Capacity in Farads)
Inductance	LP (L = Inductance in Henries)

In the above P represents the reactance factor of the current applied, being $P = 2\pi n$ (where n = frequency in cycles).

The difference in the value of these resistances is due to the differing effect which they have upon the voltage and current of our power supply. A condenser in the circuit causes the current to lead the voltage, while an inductive resistance causes the current to lag behind the voltage, the maximum possible limit in either case being 90 degrees, which represents a zero power factor, or a wattless current. This is graphically shown by Fig. 1.

Applying Ohm's law to the case of a simple non-inductive resistance, we find that the current is given by the expression:

$$I = \frac{E}{R}$$

with which the reader is already familiar. This is represented in Case 1, see diagram.

Extending our formula to the case of a pure capacity, we have

or the current which will flow in the circuit is the product of the voltage applied (voltage as measured by an A. C. voltmeter which gives the "effective value"), times the capacity (farads), and the reactance factor P. Case 2 shows this.

And for the case of a pure inductance, if such a thing were possible, we would then have

as shown by Case 3.

In addition to these simpler ones, Cases 4 to 11 illustrate various combinations of them, and by use of the formulæ attached the student is enabled to calculate the current which will flow in any possible circuit. It should be borne in mind, however, that while these formulæ will give the actual value of the current flowing in the circuit, we cannot then multiply this amperage by the impressed E. M. F. and obtain the power consumption of the circuit in watts. The latter is wholly dependent upon the power factor, i. e., the per cent lag or lead of the current, and it will be necessary to multiply the product by this factor to obtain the true wattage consumption of our circuit.

The power factor of an A. C. circuit is found by dividing the true watts as read off from a compensated indicating watt-meter by the apparent watts, which latter term is the voltage resultant from multiplying the effective or indicated volts by the effective or indicated (or calculated) amperes. Some A. C. installations are fitted with a direct reading power factor meter.

Literature for Projectionists

Mr. D. S. Vermilion, Los Angeles, Cal., inquires: "Will you please inform me if the Society of Motion Picture Engineers have an official organ where questions on projection are discussed, and if it is possible to obtain the same? I have Hawkins' 'Electrical Guides' and Gages' 'Optical Projection.' What other works would you suggest securing?"

In reply: As the Society of Motion Picture Engineers has, up to the present, only held on the average two meetings per year, the publication of a journal has not yet been attempted, but the papers (mostly on technical subjects relating to production and projection) which are read at the meetings of the Society are subsequently published in booklet form under the title "Transactions of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers." Discussions on the various papers are not printed, however, and the Transactions of the Society in their present form are not a medium for the presentation of correspondence from the industry at large, as is generally the case with a journal or frequently appearing publication.

Nevertheless, the Society aims to make available to the industry, through the medium of its Transactions, the most interesting, useful and accurate articles which it can secure or cause to be prepared, and copies of each issue of the Transactions of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers may be purchased by any one interested therein at 25 cents a copy. Six issues of the Transactions have appeared to date, all of which are still in print, and may be secured by addressing the Society, 712 11th street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

With regard to further important and interesting works worthy of acquisition by real students of projection, such as the correspondent appears to be, we recommend:

(1) "Elementary Lessons in Electricity and Magnetism," by Silvanus P. Thompson, F.R.S. Publisher, Macmillan & Co., 71 Fifth avenue, New York City. Price, $1.50.

(2) "The Electric Arc," by H. Ayrton. Publisher, D. Van Nostrand & Co., 25 Park Place, New York City. Price, $5.00.

The first of these volumes, Professor Thompson's work on Electricity and Magnetism, is a wonderfully complete, well written and finely illustrated work, which is naturally much more satisfactory for general reading than the Hawkins "Guides." The latter are of recognized utility in the solution of electrical questions, but their "question and answer" form spoils their continuity as reading matter. While the volume by Thompson is easily comprehensible by any electrical student, it is more than the "elementary" treatise which its title would imply. Necessary formulæ are interpolated for the mathematical treatment of all electrical phenomena and problems, and the work can easily rank as a useful physical treatment of its subject.

In Mrs. Ayrton's book, "The Electrical Arc," the student will find some of the most entertaining technical reading which could be conceived of. Important data is also supplied in abundance, and every optical projectionist will surely study the electric arc with increased interest after seeing that arc phenomena and characteristics can supply such an extensive amount of information as is contained in the Ayrton work.

Projectionists have still to be supplied with a suitable treatment of the optical phases of motion picture projection, as the optics of the cine projector in its customary and present form have not been dealt with in a specialized manner in any work on optics published to date. This is excusable on the part of the writers of modern works on optical theory, because the action of a projector optical system is so readily comprehensible to them as to apparently require no particularized treatment. For the average projectionist or student, however, it is necessary to translate the terms and conceptions of advanced theory into the language of everyday practice, and the attempts to do this in all existing works on motion picture projection are either woefully incomplete or painfully and absurdly inaccurate.

However, projectionists will not be deterred much longer from acquiring a thorough and accurate knowledge of projector optics, because a detailed paper on the condenser system of the motion picture projector will be read by Dr. H. Kellner, of the Bausch and Lomb Optical Company, at an early meeting of the S. M. P. E. This will be reprinted in the NEWS as soon as feasible after the forthcoming meeting, and will be followed by further data of an exhaustive nature which we have calculated and compiled for presentation to the readers in due course.

Heat of the Spot

Mr. P. Barber, Edmonton, Alberta, Can., makes the following inquiry:

"Can you tell me what percentage of heat radiated by an arc, or other source of light used in projection work, is actually focussed on the aperture plate?

"The Mazda C lamp for motion picture work using about 500 watts is rated at a temperature of 2100 degrees C—that is the rated temperature of the filament—is there much of this heat lost in passing through the condenser system?

"Would like an early reply as I wish to settle an argument."

In reply: As the question of the heat at the spot, expressed as a percentage of the heat of the light-source used in a projector, does not appear to have much practical significance we have never attempted to measure or to calculate it, and, so far as we are aware, no one else has published any information on the subject.

It is, however, very generally known that the temperature of the D. C. arc crater is 3,500° C., which is about the highest temperature known or measured, and it will be readily apparent to any projectionist or experimenter that the temperature at the spot on the cooling-plate of a motion picture projector is only a very small fraction indeed of the temperature of the boiling arc crater, and that similar considerations likewise apply to the radiating filament of an incandescent lamp used as a projection light source.

The problem of removing the heat from the condenser beam without extensively reducing its brightness is worthy of consideration, but the exact degree of heat at the spot is a question of minor importance, because as long as the heat exists there its effects upon the material to be projected can be easily studied.

Odd Frame-Lines

Mr. Robert F. Smith, Hospers, Iowa, writes as follows: "Will you please tell me through your Projection Department of a correct method of splicing films with different frame lines? I have tried again and again, but can't seem to make an efficient patch. In this respect the 'Allies' Official War Review' is particularly aggravating. In one of the earlier issues practically every splice was a misframe. I suppose this is due to the films of different nations being made different concerning frames.

"I have my bit to say concerning the condition of films. I am enclosing a 'sample' of film with the holes ripped off of one side. This is a small piece when compared to some that I regularly receive. Occasionally I get pieces a foot or so in length without any perforations on either side. This has happened so repeatedly that I wonder if the films are inspected at all. Concerning punch holes in the film, in this district they are becoming fewer, but rather slowly. A few nights ago one film had about 25 punch holes in two feet of film, of five different shapes. I think some operator should be satisfied in letting the producers put their trade mark on the film, and leave his individual one off."

In reply: The numerous misframes between successive scenes which the correspondent has noted when projecting war pictures, and sometimes in news films, are due to the various scenes having been taken on different cameras which had the frame line, or dividing line between successive pictures, arranged differently. Misframes of this character are more or less unavoidable in pictures of this class, the scenes in which have been taken in widely different localities and with a great variety of cameras.

Unfortunately, there is no method of joining scenes with noticeably different frame-lines so that one will follow the other exactly in frame when projected, and while the correspondent is to be commended upon having tried to "square the circle," we nevertheless recommend him to give it up as a useless piece of business—with the proviso that there is no harm in improving, if possible, the arrangement of the joint as sent out by the laboratory or the exchange.

It is gratifying to note that the evil of punching holes in the films near the end (for use as change-over signals) is on the wane in the correspondent's territory, and there has been a considerable abatement of this malpractice in other sections also, due to the efforts of the National Anti-Misframe League.

If the correspondent regularly receives films with the sprocket holes missing over considerable lengths he should bring the matter to the attention of the exchange supplying the service, and if relief is not thus secured the N. A. M. L. would take up the matter upon being apprised of the facts in the case.

E. M. Porter Back on Job After Influenza Attack

E. M. PORTER, general manager, the Precision Machine Company, Inc., 317 East 34th street, New York, N. Y., who for nearly three weeks was ill with Spanish influenza, has now fully recovered and has again assumed charge of the company's affairs.

Mr. Porter was on the verge of completing a number of important negotiations affecting the sale of Simplex products, and was about to complete organization plans in connection with the output of the factory, when he was suddenly stricken ill.

Now that he has fully recovered, members of the trade with whom Mr. Porter was in touch, previous to his illness, regarding the future plans of the Simplex Company, will be glad to learn of his complete recovery.

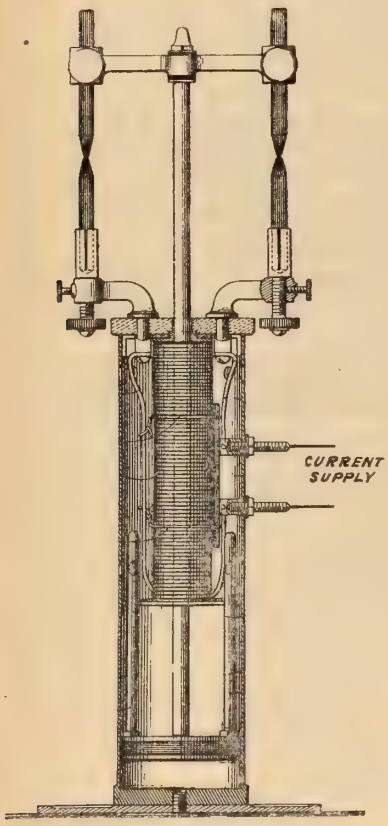
Allison and Hadaway Secure Important Patent on Portable Photographic Arc Lamp

NO item of mechanical apparatus has proved more important in facilitating the production of motion pictures than the portable photographic arc lamp, and it is gratifying to note that Messrs. Allison and Hadaway of 42 West Thirty-ninth street, New York City, are the assignees of a recently granted United States patent covering important features of the successful, portable photographic arc lamp, which they were the first to introduce, in 1914, under the name of the "Panchroma."



Mechanism of Panchroma Twin-Arc

Briefly stated, portability, in combination with high illuminating power, is secured in the modern portable photographic arc lamp by burning two or more arcs, or pairs of carbons, in series with one another and in series with one electro-magnet or solenoid, for feeding the carbons, the arcs and the solenoids being of course in series also with the current supply circuit. The feeding of the two or more arcs by one solenoid permits a light and simple construction of the entire lamp mechanism, as will readily be inferred, so it may prove of interest to describe the mechanism of the Panchroma twin-arc lamp in some detail.

The mechanical arrangements of the Panchroma lamp mechanism are shown in detail in the appended illustration, which forms part of Messrs. Allison and Hadaway's recent patent (U. S. Patent No. 1,281,745), and the special features and mode of operation of the lamp are described as follows in the patent specification.

The chief object of the invention is to provide a portable lamp which has provision for a plurality of arcs, but which is simple and durable in construction, so that it may be used by inexperienced persons and subjected to hard usage without danger of being put out of order.

In its commercial form the Panchroma lamp (see diagram) comprises two or more carbons carried by a movable plunger, or piston, and two or more carbons which are carried by stationary holders, the carbons carried by the piston being in series with the stationary carbons. A suitable electro-magnet, or solenoid, in series with the carbons, shifts the plunger (against gravity), thus providing for the separation of the carbons when the current is turned on, which of course is necessary to create the arcs between the respective sets of carbons. It is seen from the diagram that this solenoid surrounds the movable piston or plunger. The use of but one automatic feeding mechanism to regulate two or more arcs in series is considered to be the most important feature of the invention, as it makes the apparatus simpler and more compact than is ordinarily possible in multi-arc lamps.

Considering more in detail the mechanism of the Panchroma lamp, as shown in the accompanying diagram, the central rod, or plunger, is movable vertically through a central aperture in the insulating head of a hollow vertical cylinder, the lower portion of which serves as a dash-pot for a piston head fixed to the bottom of the central rod, or plunger. At opposite sides of the piston head, and fixed thereon, are two upright standards passing through openings in a plate attached to the bottom of the solenoid, which latter surrounds the plunger and is itself attached to a support carried by the inner ends of the terminals from which electric current is received. This support is of course insulated from the terminals so as not to form a short-circuit across them, and the upright standards, mentioned above, are intended to guide the central rod and prevent it from making any rotatory movements. The lower part of the central rod, or piston, and the piston head itself, are made of magnetic material, so that when the solenoid is energized the plunger rod will be drawn up, but the upper end of the central rod is made of non-magnetic materail. For example, the piston head and the lower part of the plunger rod may be made of iron, while the upper part of the rod may be of aluminum.

On the insulating head at the top of the cylinder enclosing the solenoid and the plunger are mounted two laterally extending brackets, having upwardly arranged open spring socket-pieces or holders for the lower carbons. These sockets, or carbon holders, are threaded in the brackets, as the diagram shows, so as to permit independent vertical adjustment of the carbons carried thereby.

At the upper end of the central rod, or plunger, and insulated thereon, is a transverse bracket lying in the same plane as the lower carbon-holder brackets and provided at its ends with vertically disposed openings to receive the upper carbons, the carbons being vertically adjustable by simply sliding them up and down in the openings, or holders, and securing them by the set screws provided for that purpose.

As is clearly shown by the drawing, the two arcs burn in series, and to bring this about the lower one of the terminals connecting with the current supply is attached to one end of the solenoid winding, and the other end of the latter is attached to the left-hand carbon-holder bracket, while the upper current supply terminal is connected directly by a wire to the right-hand carbon-holder bracket. The course of the current through the lamp being shown, its manner of operation will now be easily understood.

The two pairs of carbons being in place and in contact with each other, the two terminals are connected with the source of current, whereupon current will flow through the carbons and the solenoid, which are all in series, and thence back to the source of supply. Being thus energized, the solenoid raises the central rod, or plunger, thereby separating the two pairs of carbons and drawing arcs between each upper carbon and the co-operating lower carbon. As the carbons are consumed the arcs lengthen, thereby cutting down the current through the solenoid and weakening its field. When the field of the solenoid becomes too weak to support its load (the carbons and other parts lifted with the plunger) the plunger descends until the increased current due to the shortening of the arcs gives the solenoid field sufficient strength to prevent further descent. In this way the movable carbons (in the present case the upper carbons) are automatically fed downward as they are consumed, and arcs of substantially constant length are maintained.

To compensate for any inequality in the rate of burning of the two arcs it was originally proposed to elevate the lower carbon of the most rapidly burning arc by means of the thumb screws provided under the lower carbon-holders, as it is necessary to keep the lamp circuit intact in order that the lamp may be put into operation by simply switching on the current. This method of compensating for unequal burning of the two arcs was long ago replaced, on the Panchroma twin arc, by an entirely automatic method of extreme simplicity. Although not shown in the drawing this method of compensating the inequality of burning of the two arcs consists in pivoting the bracket carrying the upper carbon-holders at its center, and also pivoting each of the upper carbon holders at its point of junction with the bracket. This simple mechanical arrangement entirely satisfies the requirements of the case, and keeps the lamp circuit intact at all times.

Since the introduction, in 1914, of the Panchroma portable twin arc lamp, several other similar lamps embodying the principle of two arcs in series with one another and in series with one solenoid for feeding both have appeared upon the market. Messrs. Allson and Hadaway must, however, be given the credit of first developing a practical portable photographic arc lamp embodying the principle described above, as is recognized officially by the granting of their patent.

The makers of the Panchroma twin arc have made numerous judicious improvements over the basic form shown in the annexed diagram, and are now marketing their latest model, known as the "New Panchroma," which has the following important features. There are no projecting parts on the Panchroma to break off, catch in the clothing of the operator or tangle up the wires, and there are no detachable parts to be unscrewed, or mislaid, or forgotton. Two doors, which act as reflectors, close over the front of the lamp when it is not in use, thus protecting the mechanism and rendering it safe in transportation. The New Panchroma still remains the leader in portability, weighing only 18½ pounds and has the dependability which has always been associated with earlier Panchroma models.

New Catalog of X-Ray Direct Lighting

THE National X-Ray Reflector Company, 235 West Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, has recently published a new Catalog, No. 21, describing the direct lighting reflectors put out by that company. This catalog covers all the X-Ray reflectors for industrial, flood, show window and show case lighting. The flood lighting section features three new projectors and several new X-Ray reflectors for the projectors. This gives the X-Ray projectors an even wider range of adaptability than they had before.

The X-Ray silver mirrored reflectors are so universally known and used that it is hardly necessary to go into much detail about them here. It, however, will probably be of interest to the trade to know that with the publication of Catalog No. 21 the National X-Ray Reflector Company adopted the Goodwin Plan and has made allowance for recognition of the electrical contractor-dealer in its scale of discounts. To co-operate with the Government's regulations on paper conservation, there has been no general mailing of this catalog. It is being sent only upon request.

"What Is a Perfect Musical Theme?"

REPEATEDLY the question is asked, "What should a musical interpretation of the picture be?" and the answer logically is, "Music for the picture should be an interpretation and development of the subject matter, just as the symphony is a musical development of the original theme or motif.

What is a theme or motif? A musical theme in motion pictures is more or less based on the same principle as all famous composers introduced in opera. Massenet, Verdi, Puccini and others in their music scores always associated a certain music theme or motif with the appearance of the leading characters upon the stage. This effective musical device has great possibilities in the picture drama and is valuable in giving unity to music and dramatic action. The picture musician has wide freedom in choice of his "theme" material.

Most important to remember, however, is that the first requisite is a genuinely melodious theme, one which will bear repetition without becoming monotonous to the audience or performer in general.

A theme such as that described may be varied in tempo and played either ff. or pp. as the varying of the stage action may demand. It will make the role with which it is identified "stand out." The use of the "leading" theme is naturally best adaptable for the larger and more elaborate picture productions in which the appearance and stage action of principals is broken up to some degree by minor incidents. At all events the use of the theme is an idea on which the intelligent motion picture musician can ring his own variations.

Frankly, this cannot be carried out in every picture for the sole and only reason that few compositions can be manipulated in such a way as described in the above. By this I mean some beautiful andante movements which are suitable for love themes will absolutely lose their musical value if the tempo is changed or the character of the composition the least bit mutilated.

However, such an exceptional opportunity for the development of this idea has just arisen that the editor of these columns feels it should be brought to the attention of all readers.

The general idea of depicting a theme to the action of the screen is to select one composition and use it in the most appropriate spots, but in many pictures when the leading character is depicted in extremes of emotion, the ordinary selected motif is really inappropriate, because its orchestration is presented only in one definite form.

During my ten years of experience in playing for the picture, I must say in very few instances have I been able to adapt a music theme in an appropriate manner to the action of the screen. In every case I have found that a composition published for a certain purpose cannot be phrased or played in every possible way as demanded through the varied stages of emotions depicted by the leading character throughout the picture.

In a case of the picture mentioned below, entitled, "The One Woman," released by Select Pictures Corporation, I have found it impossible to find a composition which could depict all the emotions displayed by the leading character (Mr. Frank Gordon). In some scenes, Mr. Gordon is calm, in others, he is mentally excited and in still others, he reaches a climax of physical violence, where a dramatic agitato is needed.

In a case of this kind, to let his calm action predominate, an andante movement would be appropriate for a theme which cannot be brought up to an agitato. In a case where the climax should predominate, an agitato is the most suitable theme, but it can hardly be played as a melodious pp. without spoiling the entire effect of the musical number.

After visiting several publishers I have finally found an appropriate publication published by Belwin, Inc., of 701 Seventh avenue, New York City, and entitled "Symphonette Suite," by Irenee Berge, a composer of exceptional merit and ability. Herein is taken an original eight-bar motif, published in four distinct parts.

The first part is a lento dramatic movement, later changing to an allegro. The second part is a beautiful, broad adagietto movement, the third, a scherzetto movement, and the concluding part of this symphony is a vivace allegro movement. Readers will quickly see that here is an idealistic development of the "theme" thought because in this composition will be found one motif in almost every musical characteristic.

To give musicians a general idea of what this "Symyhonette Suite" means in playing a theme in the strictest sense of the word, I wish to call the attention of all those who intend playing this picture to the musical cue sheet, issued by Select Pictures Corporation on which a reproduction in thematic form of all four movements will be found. The musical suggestions of "The One Woman" follow herewith.

Review of Latest Compositions

1—Ballroom Chatter, valse, intermezzo, by A. Schmidt, an exceptionally fine composition, published by G. Schirmer. (3 East 43rd street, New York City.)

2—Military Waltz, a medley arrangement of Patriotic Songs, published by Forster Music Company, Chicago, Ill.

3—"Don't Leave Me Daddy," the latest one-step hit, published by Leo Feist, 44th street, New York City.

4—"The Magic of Your Eyes," a melodious valse lente, published by M. Witmark, 47th street & Broadway, New York.

5—"Adoration," by Felix Borowski; arrangement by Chas. J. Roberts; an orchestra arrangement of this world-famous violin solo; a number which will immediately appeal to your audience. (Carl Fischer edition.)

6—"Will You Be True," a new and beautiful medley waltz, composed and published by Chas. K. Harris, Columbia Theatre Bldg., New York City.

7—"In the Jungle," intermezzo, by Chas. Arthur. This is a real trombone sneeze; a real novelty number with very attractive melody. (Carl Fischer edition.)

8—"Toreador Humoresque," fox-trot, by M. L. Lake. A novel fox-trot, built on the well-known Toreador song (Carmen), with the original melody intact but cleverly worked against a complicated set of rag and countermelodies. The big dance hit of the year! (Carl Fischer edition.)

9—"Supplication," by McKee. An unusually interesting orchestra number in a splendidly effective arrangement—it opens with a melodious 4/4 "Andante Cantabile Introduction"—followed by a cello movement of exceptional musical treatment and ends as a violin solo orite, which always takes. Most appropriate for dramatic situations. (Published by M. Witmark.)

10—"Melody," by Charles Huerter. A number which will fit in well with any program. A sweet melody, a fine arrangement and a favorite, which always takes. Most appropriate for pathetic and dramatic situations. (Published by the Boston Music Co.)

Review of Late Compositions

12—Pathetic Andante, by Paul Vely. A rich, deep melodious composition that can be effectively worked out. Most appropriate for situations of a pathetic character. (Cinema Music Co., Columbia Theatre Bldg., New York City.)

13—"Impressions of the Orient," by Otto Langey. Three captivating numbers which will appeal to every orchestra leader: No. 1. "Among the Arabs"; No. 2. "A Chinese Tea Room"; No. 3. "Persian March." (G. Schirmer.)

14—"When Shadows Fall," a beautiful and melodious reverie, adapted from the concert ballad by Frost and Keithley. (McKinley edition.)

15—"Adagio Cantabile," from "Sonata Pathetique," by Beethoven, arranged by Irenee Berge. A wonderful orchestra arrangement of this fine work. It will add class to your program. (S. M. Berg edition.)

16—"A Russian Pansy" (a flower song), by Otto Langey. Once in a decade some composer is really inspired to write a wondrously beautiful melody but only once in years is such a beautiful theme born. "This is the one." "A Russian Pansy" is a most valuable addition to any musician's library and most appropriate for picture playing. (G. Schirmer edition.)

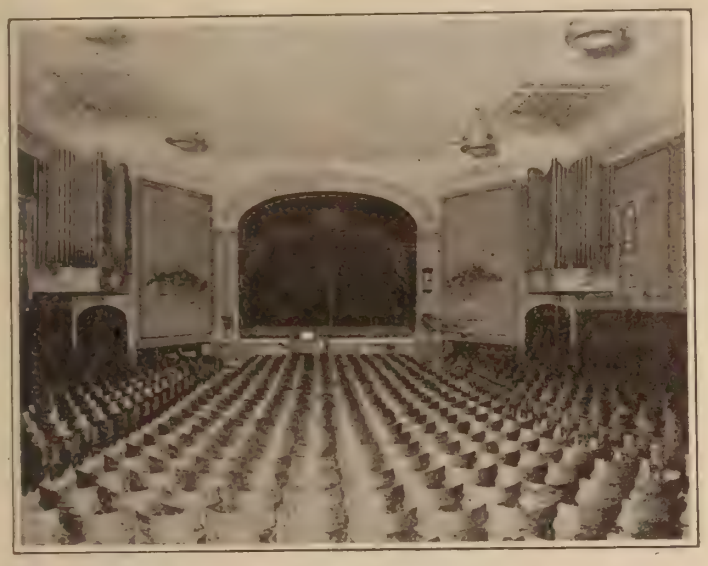
Theatres Worth While



Interior of Colonial Theatre, Tacoma, Wash., Under the Same Ownership as the Rialto Which Has Just Opened

Splendid Rialto Opens in Tacoma

SATURDAY, September 7, saw the opening of the newest and handsomest theatre in Tacoma, Wash., the Rialto. Governor Earl Lister, of the State of Oregon, Mayor C. M. Riddell, Gen. Cornelius Vanderbilt and the presidents of the Commercial and the Rotary clubs were among the notable guests on the opening evening.

The new house stands at the corner of Ninth and Market streets, in the center of the business section of the city. The exterior is in the Florentine period of the Italian Renaissance. The interior represents dignity and blended colors, but more than actual beauty, the thing that has been sought in this house is real comfort and perfect exhibition of the motion picture. The house seats 1,500, the far greater portion on the lower floor. In the balcony there is a double set of loges, furnished with upholstered wicker rocking chairs and seating from four to ten persons each.

Indirect lighting is used through the theatre and the arrangement of the screen results in complete elimination of the eye strain. The ventilating system is capable of driving through the house 1,800,000 cubic feet of air an hour. A complete vacuum cleaning system has been installed for use after each day's closing. Sanitary drinking fountains are installed on both floors.

One of the distinctive effects of the auditorium decoration is the brilliant treatment in tones of blue of the main cornice frieze in vivid contrast to the subdued color harmony of the wall and ceiling panels, the former treated in blended silk effect. The foyer treatment is carried out in the more subdued tones of the auditorium.

The hangings in the theatre are of blue and gold damask combined with soft shades of old blue silk, making graceful cascades. The trimmings are of blue and gold silk combined with metal gloom.

The floors are covered with a luxurious gray and blue plaid wilton carpet. The upholstering of the railings surrounding the boxes is in blue; the boxes themselves contain comfortable reed rocking chairs with cushions to match.

"A dream of daintiness" would be a fitting description of the women's rest room, just off the second floor balcony. No expense has been spared in making it a true place of rest and retirement, with every convenience for the rearrangement of a woman's toilette. Draperies of rich brocade in purple-black and gold unite with a floor covering of purple-black wilton carpet to bring out the beauties of the solid mahogany furniture.

In the man's smoking room the draperies are of English sundown in blue, yellow and gray. Blue and yellow wilton carpets match the draperies, while the masculine touch in the furniture is supplied by solid cathedral oak.

The main entrance feature, or rotunda, is in reality the keynote of the entire design both in form and color.

Its circular form lends itself most advantageously to the solution of the difficulties presented by the unusually steep grades of the sidewalk, but at the same time necessitated intricacies of workmanship. The warm tones of the decorative frieze rendered in such masterly abandon in the true Italian renaissance freedom of line and color afford full opportunity for the unlimited expression of the decorative art, and in conjunction with the soft glow of the cove illumination reflected from the shallow dome of the ceiling produce an effect at once unique and magnificent in its gorgeousness of color.

On the Ninth street side both on the main floor and balcony levels such of the space not required for theatre purposes is devoted to store space available in such units as the tenants may require. Owing to the exigency of war and the serious problems of transportation, two big features yet to be provided are the pipe organ, which is a duplicate of the largest organ installed in this country, and the dimmers by which the delicate gradations of the electric illumination is controlled.

H. T. Moore is president of the Moore Amusement Company, owner of the Rialto as well as the Colonial, and active manager of the two theatres.

Advance Reviews

"The Woman the Germans Shot"

(Joseph L. Plunkitt-Frank J. Carroll. Six reels. Release plans to be announced later)

TO begin with—the story in this picture has been constructed intelligently; and secondly, it has been produced with equal intelligence. Add to those factors the fact that the plot is based on an occurrence that has touched every human heart and you have summarized the strong case in favor of "The Woman the Germans Shot."

Based on the heroic conduct and martyr's death of Edith Cavell, the English nurse executed by the Germans in Belgium, this should not fail to be a good drawing card wherever properly handled. The picture is not gruesome, as one might be led to think by the nature of the subject. Even the shooting scene is devoid of repulsiveness, as all unnecessary details have been omitted.

The skilful construction of the story and careful handling of the direction have resulted in a production that is in keeping with the dignity of the subject—never yielding to the temptation to exaggerate and overplay the subject. Anthony Kelly wrote the story and John Adolfi directed.

The war will some day be over; the miseries it has brought upon mankind will in time sink into oblivion; the world will eventually adjust itself to the new order of things. But the unjust death of Edith Cavell, the Red Cross nurse, whose only crime was that she aided prisoners, shut up in dirt holes not fit even for animals to live in, will not be forgotten.

One more thing that will impress you deeply and make you feel somewhat proud is the revelation of the humanness of the American representative in Belgium. He and his staff fought desperately and until the last to save the nurse's life, although their efforts proved futile.—P. S. Harrison.

"Tongues of Flame," with Marie Walcamp

(Bluebird—Nov. 25. Directed by Colin Campbell)

FOR a logical blending of story and natural scenery, this picture could not be improved upon. One feels as having been transported in the woods, when looking at it.

Due to intelligent construction of story, which moves along at a good speed, the interest of the spectator is held steady throughout the picture. The element of heart appeal, contained in some of the situations, reaches the emotions, and contributes towards making the attraction entertaining.

The plot is based on the story, "In the Carquinez Woods," by Bret Harte. It deals with the love between a botanist and a dance hall girl. The girl had escaped from the hands of the sheriff, who had her arrested for stabbing one of her lovers. They marry in the end.

Some of the scenes show a multitude of light-shafts formed by the sun rays shining between the branches of the trees. It is a rare photographic feat, portraying an artistic skill of high degree. This is a sight of great grandeur, which will undoubtedly arouse admiration.

The forest fire is spectacular and realistic.

The picture is clean and should appeal more or less universally. —P. S. Harrison.

"Under the Greenwood Tree"

(Artcraft Production, with Elsie Ferguson)

IF your patrons don't get repaid for their investment in enjoyment, they will undoubtedly do so in a good sound sleep. It is as slow and uninteresting a picture as has ever been projected on the screen. It belongs to the days when the motion picture was a novelty, and when any moving object on the screen would draw the crowds and satisfy their curiosity.

Barring the first half reel, there is no action in the plot. It appears as if someone has nailed it down, the sub-titles becoming the chief motive power. The latter consist of phraseologies, written in classic style, resembling the poetic, with a touch of romance, uttered by the characters, with an appeal to the moon, waters, nature, etc.

The theme of the story is love, a principle that is considered as one of the basic elements in picture production as well as story writing. But love without the assistance of other elements, such as action of plot, heart interest, suspense, etc., does not make an entertaining picture.

The choosing of the story, for a particular player, is an art which has not been given a proper study, it seems. Many a good star has been hurt by unsuccessful selection of vehicles. This one will certainly not augment the drawing powers of such a capable actress as Miss Ferguson is.

"She Hires a Husband," with Priscilla Dean

(Bluebird—Dec. 2. Directed by Jack Dillon)

PRISCILLA DEAN has demonstrated in "Brazen Beauty" that she can act. All she now needs is story and director. She is provided with both in this offering, the result being an interesting and entertaining picture.

Rapid action of plot and suspense, due to intelligent construction of story, are the predominating features in this attraction. You can add the element of heart appeal, contained in a few of the situations.

The heroine becomes the object of your compassion, on account of the uncongeniality of her environment. You can't help sym-

"MIRANDY SMILES"—PARAMOUNT

Vivian Martin Upholds Tradition by Making Another Good One

SO far, no picture in which Vivian Martin appeared could conscientiously be called poor. This one is no exception to the rule.

"Mirandy Smiles" will, without any question, please your patrons, as it combines several of the emotion-affecting elements, the most predominating among them being comedy and pathos. It is the kind of a picture that puts people in happy mood and disposes them so as to be willing to tackle the most grim problems of life.

In a plot based on the book, "The Little Scrub Lady," by Belle Maniates, the heroine is introduced as a girl of poor circumstances, helping her mother and her little brothers by doing scrub work. Her beauty attracts the attention of a fine young man. Love springs between them, eventually becoming engaged.

No jealousies, or intrigues of any description, are introduced to mar the happy tone of the story, which is taken from a page in real life. Several little children and a dog have been employed instead, adding human touches, the kind that never fail to appeal.

The picture is clean and offers wholesome entertainment to all.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

Romance took charge of the organ stops and Teddy Lawrence, their master, could only play the one tune, "I love you."

Douglas MacLean, hero of "Johanna Enlists," in which Mary Pickford played, is seen opposite Miss Martin in this charming romance.

Tired of the war stuff? Of the melodramatic spy play; of the same old eternal triangle done in the same old way? If you are, see Vivian Martin in "Mirandy Smiles." Mirandy's smiles are as contagious as the influenza.

Of course a lot of weddings are held in churches, but is a church usually considered a romantic spot? Mirandy found it full of romance and she didn't fall in love with the minister either.

AD TALK

"Mirandy Smiles" will be the featured attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week and will remain for ——— days thereafter. This is a Paramount Picture and its star none other than Vivian Martin, the charming young actress who has achieved an enviable reputation through her long list of successes for this company. "Mirandy Smiles" is an adaptation from a novel by Belle K. Maniates which, in its printed form, was called "The Littlest Scrub Lady."

The story of "Mirandy Smiles" is refreshing and original in that none of the usual melodramatic or hackneyed devices are utilized to tell it. It is simplicity itself dealing with the life of Mirandy Judkins, who helps her mother as scrub girl in the Opera House in a small town of the middle West. Her love story and her activities through the day when she brings smiles and gladness into the hearts of all, make an entertainment that is unusual. That our patrons will appreciate it we haven't a doubt. There have been so many war plays, so many spy plays, so many heavy melodramas of late that a picture such as "Mirandy Smiles" is a welcome change as well as a treat.

Edith M. Kennedy, author of "Her Country First," which also starred Miss Martin, and "The Bravest Way," featuring the Japanese actor, Sessue Hayakawa, picturized "Mirandy Smiles" from the original novel. She has done yeoman work with the scenario, nor has William C. De Mille left anything undone that he should have done in the way of production. He is one of the most versatile directors at the Lasky studio in California and "Mirandy Smiles" gives ample proof of that statement. Douglas MacLean, leading man opposite Mary Pickford in a number of productions is so cast in this picture.

THE STORY

In a small middle western town, Mirandy Judkins works as scrub girl in the Opera House helping her mother, who has a large family to provide for. One day Mirandy meets Teddy Lawrence, the church organist, who invites her to come to St. Marks and hear him play. When she keeps her word and comes to the church Teddy asks Rose White, the Sunday school teacher who is engaged to John Kennedy, the rector, to take a personal interest in Mirandy. Rose is only too glad to do this. Mirandy is impressed with Kennedy's appeal to his congregation to save and give to their limit. As a consequence she asks that the church give her the choir surplices to wash in order that she may earn money. Rose gets this work for her. One day Kennedy is astonished to come upon Mirandy dressed in one of the surplices and giving a "sacred concert" before the children of the neighborhood. The proceeds net 37 cents, which she turns over to the church.

Kennedy proposes to Rose and she promises to send him a written reply. She writes a note of acceptance and pins it to the rector's surplice but it falls to the floor where it is found by Mrs. Judkin who pins it to Rose's waist and sends it home. Rose is disturbed at the minister's silence at first but is greatly delighted when the mystery is cleared by the return of the note.

Later Mrs. Judkins comes into a sum of money and she plans to take Mirandy to the country to live on a farm. Mirandy, who has grown to love Teddy, protests, because she has no liking for cows and pigs. Then Teddy tells her that the best thing for her to do is to go away to school and receive a proper education and that when she returns he will have something very important to tell her.

PAPER:—Two one-sheets (one scene, one pose of star); two three-sheets (two scenes from production between star and MacLeon); one six-sheet (picture of star in character); one rotogravure one-sheet.

LOBBY DISPLAY:—Eight 8 x 10 black and white photos; eight 11 x 14 sepia photos; one 22 x 28 sepia photo; 8 x 10 photos of star.

CUTS AND MATS ON PRODUCTION:—Five one-column; three two-column; two three-column. These indicate the humorous and human side of the production. There is a good scene between star and MacLean to be obtained in two and three-column size, while the other scenes in these sizes are unusually good. Four of the one-columns show star in character, the other is a line cut.

STOCK CUTS AND MATS OF STAR:—Five one-column; three two-column; two three-column.

ADVERTISING LAYOUTS:—The regular one, two and three-column advertisements can be secured from Paramount on this production.

SLIDE AND MUSIC CUE SHEET are among the other accessories obtainable on this production.

SUGGESTIONS

While Vivian Martin has not attained the popularity that has come to other stars of the Paramount constellation, none can say that her pictures have ever been anything but refreshing, clean and always dwelling on the happy side of life. If you are located in a family neighborhood where you think this type of picture goes well, be sure to play "Mirandy Smiles" up in this manner and dwell on the fact that Miss Martin is always to be associated with pictures of such a type. It will certainly help to popularize both the star and indirectly and incidentally your house, for if the people get on to her style of production they will be coming again when next you display her name.

In your advertisements it would be well to mention that the picture is an adaptation of Belle K. Maniates' novel, "The Littlest Scrub Lady." There is the usual stunt with books but as the picture bears another title it doesn't fit as an advertising suggestion on this picture as well as it does on others. Play up its lighter, brighter side, its only side in fact, and let it go at that.

"THE SHE-DEVIL"—FOX

This Is Not Theda Bara's Style, Says Harrison

EITHER there is a scarcity of stories, or some one has blundered in selecting this one for Theda Bara. Not only is it illogical, but unfitting her particular talents as well. It belongs to the fiction class in which absurdity, inconsistency and exaggeration are the fundamental features. It is well to picturize such a story provided no attempt is made to present it as a serious thing. The latter is exactly what takes place in this instance, resulting in a product that will hardly satisfy critical audiences.

Barring the fairly speedy action of the plot, there is hardly an element contained in any of the situations that will reach any particular kind of emotions. The whole picture depends on that one element to hold the interest, but the unconvincing construction of the story, handled in a serious manner, destroys all good effect.

The heroine is introduced as a Spanish Senorita, wooed by many a young man, owing to her personal charms and exquisite beauty. Their erotic arrows, however, cannot reach her heart, which she reserves for a Parisian artist whom she met in her home town, a little Spanish village.

Destiny brings her to Paris where, by accident, she gains fame as a great dancer. She weds the artist in the end.

The heroine's Parisian activities are the most unconvincing of all. Sometimes they border to burlesque.—Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

Theda Bara in her latest For super-production.

The story of a woman who raised havoc with a dozen lovers.

A woman without a conscience, without a heart, with sympathy toward none and malice toward all—the story of a "She-Devil" with Theda Bara playing the role with splendid abandon.

Produced under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards who staged such lavish productions as "Cleopatra" and "Salome."

A story of southern Europe offering Theda Bara a role which she handles splendidly. It will recall her excellent performance in Fox's "Carmen." You will enjoy this picture of Lolette—the girl who juggled with men's hearts.

AD TALK

"The She-Devil" is the title of the picture which the management of the ———— theatre will present on ———— of ———— week for a run of ———— days. As might be expected from the title this stars none other than Theda Bara. "The She-Devil" is her latest Fox Super-Production, and offers her a role quite different from anything she has undertaken of recent date. As Lolette, she appears as a girl of the mountains of Spain. She is a coquette, a siren, a veritable "she-devil," as the rest of the villagers dub her, and her various suitors squabble with one another over her affections in vain. She even takes delight in egging the men on to come to blows over her. Love never enters her heart.

At least it doesn't until the coming of Maurice Tabor, an artist of Paris, who paints her portrait and wins her affections. When he refuses to take her back to Paris with him she becomes furious, but a way soon presents itself to follow him. Another suitor, the Tiger, a notorious bandit, makes her an offering of stolen valuables thinking so to win her heart. Lolette accepts them, and then manages to evade the Tiger and make for Paris.

Here she again finds the artist and the manner in which she wins him and saves him from the bandit's wrath makes a rapid-moving story of the most interesting and unusual sort. Miss Bara puts all her energy into the playing of Lolette, and never for a moment does she suggest anything else but the coquette and siren. She is ably supported by Albert Roscoe as the artist, and by George A. McDaniel as the Tiger. J. Gordon Edwards, who directed such great Theda Bara productions as "Cleopatra" and "Salome," produced this feature and made a thoroughly artistic picture.

THE STORY

Lolette is a coquette in the lazy little village of Juanguera, Spain, and the lives of her several lovers are made miserable by her unfeeling attitude toward them. Her suitors often come to blows over her, but this only amuses Lolette. But one day she meets her Nemesis in the person of Maurice Tabor, an artist from Paris who paints her portrait. Tabor, however, departs after finishing his work, and she is infuriated when he refuses to take her with him. One on Lolette's particularly strenuous suitors is the Tiger, a bandit. He robs a treasure-laden coach, and makes an offering to her thinking to win her. She accepts the loot, but, contrary to his expectations, makes off for Paris in search of Tabor.

She creates a stir in Paris, and particularly in Tabor, who falls in love with her while she poses for another painting. The Tiger follows Lolette to Paris, and surprises her one night while she is in the theatre with the artist. To escape him she leaps to the stage and goes through a dance that soon earns her great notoriety. However, she elects to turn down all offers and departs again for Spain with Tabor.

While en route in a coach the Tiger holds them up, takes possession of Lolette's jewels, and makes Tabor a captive in his mountain retreat. For Lolette he prepares a sumptuous feast. The girl pretends to accept it all in good faith, and in so doing succeeds in getting the proud Tiger quite intoxicated. When he is powerless she binds him to his chair. She then releases Tabor, and the two make off together, leaving the enraged bandit behind.

ADVERTISING CUTS:—Fox has prepared a variety of one and two-column advertising cuts on this production, mats of which can be obtained free, electros at nominal price. The wording on these indicates the blase character of the production, and in some instances treats humorously on the star's character. There are four two-column and four one-column.

The Fox publicity department has also supplied a variety of one and two-column cuts in various display type which any newspaper will be able to reproduce or approach from their own stock of type. These are included in "The She-Devil" press book.

Slide and music cue sheets are also furnished on this production while the press book contains a variety of press notices and feature articles of interest. The Fox press books are all complete in every detail. If your local papers runs photoplay supplements they should take an interest in the material supplied, particularly on this production.

SUGGESTIONS

Let your public know that Miss Bara has a role different from the usual vampire part in this picture by making use of such lines as "The story of a mountain coquette who played with men's hearts until one man toyed with hers," and "The love story of a girl who scorned men." This will give a new angle on the picture, and will divide it from the others features in which Miss Bara has played the vampire.

In other respects the exhibitor is quite familiar of the best manner in which to advertise the star. The advertising suggestions in the Fox press book are worthy of notice, inasmuch as they treat the subject from a variety of angles, any one of which may be suited to the individual's theatre.

"WHEN DO WE EAT?"—PARAMOUNT

On the Whole, This Is Rated as a Very Pleasing Production

THIS is a pleasing little picture. It combines human element, action of plot, thrills and suspense, including a right amount of comedy, for a diversity.

There are one or two "jarring notes" in it, however, which could have been easily remedied had a resort been made to the plainest principles of common sense. For instance, the hero, a young bank clerk of strict principles, a person who had never in his life touched a card deck, is, with hardly any efforts on the part of the villain, induced to gamble. As is natural, he loses, and not having money to pay, steals from the bank. Now, how much more convincing it would have been had the villain been shown once or twice as tempting the hero!

As the picture is entertaining, the spectator will probably overlook this point. But why not make it right when hardly any extra expense is required, and thus disarm those who watch for opportunities to belittle this new art?

It is a clean attraction.—Released Oct. 13.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

An actress from a fourth-rate "Uncle Tom" show fools a pair of crooks and saves a young man from disgrace.

Enid Bennett, a star, whose youth and beauty are matchless, in her latest Paramount picture, "When Do We Eat?"

Directed by Fred Niblo, long one of the leading comedians of the stage, and now one of Thomas H. Ince's most skilled directors.

Written by C. Gardner Sullivan, the screen's most famous writer.

A joyous combination of comedy and drama of a little Mack Sennett farce and subtitles that fairly sparkle with brilliant lines—don't fail to see this new Paramount picture starring Enid Bennett.

The story of a second-rate actress in a fourth-rate road show who found home, friends, love and FOOD on a Texas farm.

"When Do We Eat?" We manage to tackle something about twice a day, but times are hard. Poor Nora who played both Little Eva and Eliza in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" hadn't looked a meal square in the face for months.

When Nora found out that they served three meals a day in jail she wanted a life sentence.

AD TALK

Thomas H. Ince will present the refreshing young star, Enid Bennett, in the Paramount picture, "When Do We Eat?" at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. "When Do We Eat?" is not a satire on Hooverizing as as the name might imply. The title is derived from the plight of Nora, an actress in a very poor road company, doing "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in the Texas tank towns. Nora does not know what one square meal a day looks like, much less three until through a series of startling circumstances, she is set down in the home of Ma Forbes. Farm life agrees with her, and three meals a day work wonders.

How Nora, using her ability as an actress, brings two crooks to justice and saves ma's son from jail makes a photoplay interesting from every angle. Miss Bennett is seen to unusual advantage in the role of Nora. Her youth and refreshing beauty were never more attractively displayed than in the five reels that comprise this picture. Gertrude Claire is seen in the congenial role of Ma Forbes, while Al Ray is the son, Robert McKim and Jack Nelson give a brace of clever performances as the crooks.

"When Do We Eat?" was written by C. Gardner Sullivan, than whom there is no better known nor more skilled screen writer. His story here is a deft combination of comedy, melodrama and a little Sennett farce, the whole being welded together with some of the cleverest subtitles ever flashed on the screen.

THE STORY

Nora thinks three square meals a day an impossibility. She would consider herself lucky if she could get one, square, round or even flat. But Nora's profession refuses to net her the required wherewithal of a meal. She is a member of an Uncle Tom's Cabin company touring the Texas tanks. She plays Eliza and doubles for Little Eva, but despite all her hard work the sheriff brings an attachment against the show. Nora incurs the good man's wrath when she rolls him up in one of the drops, and in order to escape it boards a freight train bound for nowhere. When she discovers that a tramp is also a passenger on the train she jumps off and lands in a hay field. Here is another sheriff who insists that she is a bad character and puts her in the town jail.

Nora likes this because she gets a square meal, but she is saved from prison bars by Ma Forbes, a kindly matron who runs a farm and takes in summer boarders. The good home and ma's kindness—and her cooking, too—work wonders with Nora. She is perfectly happy, and not the least part of her happiness are the moments she spends with James Forbes, the son of the house, cashier in the local bank. James is a likable fellow, but just a little too puritanical to be altogether human on the surface. "Soup" McCool and "Pug" Hennessy are boarders at Ma Forbes. These two gentlemen are from Chicago, and are awaiting orders from their boss to crack the safe in the local bank.

Through a coincidence they are led to believe that Nora has been sent to co-operate with them. Hennessy teaches James the fine art of poker, and exacts three hundred dollars payment which sum James takes from the cash drawer of the bank. Nora, acting her part of confederate, breaks into the bank with the crooks and opens the safe (James having given her the combination). She then gives the alarm, and the crooks are captured. The money is found on them, including the three hundred stolen by James. In this way does Nora repay Ma Forbes' kindness to her, and after this James is not slow to propose.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a combination of comedy and melodrama, although the former element predominates. In all advertising aim to bring out this lighter side of the production, as without doubt it is has the larger appeal. People seem to tire of a diet of serious and heavy plays, so when "When Do We Eat?" comes around make a little noise about its light and happy character. The story is such a clever combination of various elements that there will be no come-back.

Miss Bennett has been starring for a year now, and her youth, beauty and ability have carved for her a place of importance in the Paramount constellation. Feature her well and tie her name up with the picture by stating that it is typically her kind of story. She has done pictures accentuating the comedy angle quite regularly. You can popularize her if you drive this fact home on this production, and all others of a similar sort in which she appears. You always play Fairbanks up in his particular line, and Chaplin in his. Do this with Miss Bennett and other stars whose appearances are in a certain type of picture, or rather in a certain type of role, and you will benefit.

The name of the director, Fred Niblo, and the other members of the cast can be used to advantage.

They called her Velvet Mary because she was a soft worker!
VELVET MARY is due to pull off a little job at a small-town bank where they are so simple that they think a safe that's locked is a safe safe—but the cashier's sweetheart has been made very bright by Cupid, and the way she cans Velvet Mary's little game will tickle you silly.

"THE MAKE-BELIEVE WIFE"—PARAMOUNT

Fairly Good Picture, with Steady Action and Good Scenes

THIS is only a fairly good picture, nothing more. There are hardly any points in it that will startle one, but the fairly steady action of the plot, the comedy in some of the situations, the beautiful natural scenery, combined with the charms of the star make it entertaining.

The story belongs to the romantic class, the kind that please well, but never leave a lasting impression. Their entertaining values can usually be augmented by proper presentation. In other words, a cheerful atmosphere in a theatre can do a great deal to help it along.

The heroine is presented as the daughter of wealthy parents, who, in order to stop gossip, is compelled to marry a not much virtuous man, with whom she spent over night in a lonely cabin after losing the trail. It is the agreement that they should divorce immediately after the marriage, but it develops that they are much satisfied to leave things well enough alone, much to the disappointment of one fiance and one sweetheart, who are eagerly awaiting for the separation. The heroine finds out that she loves the hero, and that the prospects seemed to her he would make a good husband.

AD TALK

Charming and piquant Billie Burke will be the star at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in her latest Paramount photoplay, entitled "The Make-Believe Wife." This is an ideal picture for the star, suiting her talents to a nicety and giving her ample opportunity to display those abilities and charms that have made her such a favorite both on the screen and stage. "The Make-Believe Wife" was written by Edward Childs Carpenter, author of "The Cinderella Man," "The Three Bears" and other successes of the stage, and in it he has treated delicate situations with delightful humor and ingenuity.

Miss Burke has the role of Phyllis Ashbrook. Phyllis holds forth at a house party in the beautiful Adirondack Mountains when the picture first opens. While on a walking trip she is lost with John Manning, and when a storm comes up they are obliged to take refuge in a mountain lodge. And the storm keeps up all night so John stretches himself out by the fireplace, and Phyllis turns into the bunk. When morning comes they are found, and, oh! horror of horrors, in each others' arms! Explanations are to no avail. The truth of the matter was that Phyllis has been scared to death by a bear, and had flown to John for protection. But a minister is called in, and the two are married, even though each one happens to be engaged to some one else.

How Mr. Carpenter has developed his comedy from here on must be seen to be appreciated. Suffice it to say, that it winds up as humorously, as full of pep, as it starts, and Miss Burke is charming from first to last. Her support includes David Powell, one of the most prominent and capable leading man of the day.

THE STORY

Phyllis Ashbrook is hostess at a house party in the Adirondack Mountains. There are two engaged couples in the party. Phyllis herself has promised to become the wife of Roger Mason, while John Manning and Anita Webb have vowed to one another to go before the minister. But while climbing a mountain Phyllis and Manning are separated from the others and are soon lost. When a rainstorm comes up they take refuge in a cabin, and are forced to spend the night there. The next morning when a searching party flings open the door Phyllis and Manning are seen in each other's arms. They explain that Phyllis was frightened by a bear, but this is no use. The rest of the guests insist on a marriage to protect the name of Phyllis Ashbrook, and as a consequence the knot is tied.

Immediately afterward Manning determines to leave for China to permit his wife to obtain a divorce. But as luck would have it, he makes off with Phyllis' suitcase. And, of course, Phyllis has his. When she gets to the city she decides to stay at Manning's apartment, and her maid brings her wardrobe to the new home. Manning, while bound cross country, suddenly decides that he could desert Phyllis just as well in New York as in China, and as a consequence makes his way home. Phyllis is out when he enters, and the feminine lingerie scattered all over the place amazes him. When she returns he makes haste to hide it all. Phyllis realizing his predicament insists that she believes he has a woman concealed about the place somewhere.

Anita and Roger call to arrange for Phyllis' divorce, and it is then that the make-believe wife discovers that the two stranded fiancees love one another. In fact, she realizes, too, that she loves Manning, and that she doesn't want a divorce at all and so everything ends happily.

CATCH LINES

Caught in a rainstorm Phyllis Ashbrook and John Manning were obliged to spend the night alone in a little Adirondack lodge. When their friends found them in the morning they sent in a hurry call for a minister that Phyllis' name might be protected through marriage! A fine collection of friends to have!

A brilliant society comedy by Edward Childs Carpenter, author of "The Cinderella Man."

Billie Burke, than whom there is no more fetching star on either screen or stage in her latest and most amusing Paramount photoplay.

They found Phyllis in John's arms and were shocked. John explained that she had been afraid of a bear. But they laughed and suspected John of a lot of evil things. And as for Phyllis. Good gracious! She must marry him immediately in order to protect her name. But come to the ———— theatre, and see who laughed last and —best.

When John returned to his rooms he discovered the place strewn with feminine lingerie. Then he heard his wife coming. He made a futile effort to collect it all and hide it. How was poor John to know that the finery belonged to her—his wife? Poor John!

Sterling support is rendered Miss Burke by a cast headed by David Powell, Alfred Hickman, Wray Page, Ida Darling and Bigelow Cooper.

SUGGESTIONS

Aside from the drawing power of Miss Burke, the biggest thing in favor of this production is its light and amusing character. It is to be classed with the polite comedies that deal with domestic life in a highly polished and clever fashion. In your advertisements try to bring this out. Your artist will be able to dope you out some good newspaper advertisements and special cards for your lobby if you get a set of stills for him. Try to get him to do his drawings after the style of those old Bluebird inserts by Burton Rice. This, of course, isn't an easy matter, but if the style can even be approached it will help. This type of stuff is unusually attractive, and if the scenes selected for reproduction in this way contain spice or pep, or whatever you will, the showing will be striking.

Edward Childs Carpenter, author of "The Make-Believe Wife" is a playright of note, his most notable recent success being "The Cinderella Man," which was subsequently made into a picture. If you are in a big city use his name. You have a popular supporting cast to boost along in this feature, too. David Powell has appeared in many pictures, and you might do well to mention his name in the billing.

"THREE X GORDON"—HODKINSON

Comedy and Action Are the Motive Power of This Picture

AS it was stated in the advance page of last week's issue, this is a picture that will offer your patrons good entertainment.

It is the light kind of an offering, comedy and plenty of action being the principal elements upon which it has been based.

The story introduces the hero as the son of a rich father. He is cut off from any further allowance and told to go and make his own living. He accepts the challenge, goes away, gets a job on a farm along with his friend, and makes good. They then decide to utilize their own experience to make money. They open a school for such kind of worthless sons of rich men as they themselves used to be, eventually making a great success. On their return home they are received with open arms by their sweethearts, who had never lost faith in them.

It is a clean attraction and should have a universal appeal.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

Harold Chester Winthrop Gordon had too much money, too much spare time, too much sleep, too much wine and too much of a name. How he got rid of all these unnecessaries is attractively told in J. Warren Kerrigan's latest photoplay, "Three X Gordon."

J. Warren Kerrigan stars in an interesting story by Kenneth B. Clarke, and is again supported by pretty Lois Wilson.

Harold Chester Winthrop Gordon awoke one day, or more explicitly, one afternoon, to the bare facts that his father had turned him out minus a bank roll, that the stern parent of the girl he loved had forbidden him to call, and that his club had closed and barred its doors to him. It meant just one thing to Harold Chester Winthrop. That thing was WORK, something he had never tackled in his life.

AD TALK

J. Warren Kerrigan will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest picture, "Three X Gordon." Although the title of this feature might suggest another story of the Wild and Woolly West, such is not the cast. "Three X Gordon" is the story of the regeneration of a young millionaire who has wasted his time and money on fast living. When his father refuses further funds, when he is forbidden to see the girl he loves, and when his favorite club closes its doors to him, Harold Chester Winthrop Gordon is obliged to search for employment. Being a wise young fellow when he takes the trouble to think, the first thing he undertakes is to rid himself of his superfluous means. He x's out the first three, and thereafter makes it known that he wishes to be called Three X Gordon.

With another young fellow from his set Three X secures employment on a farm, and gradually learns to know what work—and the joy of it—means. Later he conceives the idea of establishing a farm for the making over of rich men's sons who previously spent their time in the hotel lobbies, cafes and cabarets. His plan is successful, and he soon has a thriving establishment. When the war breaks out he hies to a recruiting station and presents himself at the head of his charges, ready and fit for military duty.

There are two charming love stories running through this picture, the main one being between Three X Gordon and Dorie Webster. Lois Wilson who has appeared in all of Mr. Kerrigan's recent pictures appears to charming advantage as the girl. Kenneth B. Clarke is the author of this picture, which the management of the ——— theatre considers a distinct novelty.

THE STORY

Harold Chester Winthrop Gordon, a young man of leisure, a spendthrift, patron of the gilded cafes of Broadway, awakes to three unpleasantly commonplace facts one particular afternoon. Mr. Webster, father of Dorie, the girl to whom he things himself engaged, forbids him the freedom of his house that he has had before, Mr. Gordon, his exasperated parent, stops paying his bills and supplying pocket-money, and his club lets it be known that it won't complain at all if he resigns. Harold Chester Winthrop Gordon doesn't know what to do. He has never worked, either honestly or dishonestly, but being a good fellow at heart he resolves to search for some means by which to earn a livelihood. His first act is to cancel the Harold Chester Winthrop from his name. Henceforth, he declares, he shall be known as Three X Gordon.

In company with another young man of his own type he starts West, but only gets as far as a little town in New Jersey. Here the two young men secure employment on a farm, and for the first time in his life Three X Gordon arises before noon—very much before noon, in fact. His muscles, untried, develop a terrible soreness at first, but it is not long before they become hardened, and Three X begins to enjoy his work. When the summer ends Gordon and his friend resent the idea of going back to the city. So they conceive the idea of establishing a farm for lazy sons of rich men. The idea is a great success, and shortly afterward Gordon is busy molding useless spendthrifts into real men.

Finally when war is declared against Germany, Gordon is able to present himself at the recruiting office at the head of a dozen or so young men all in the best condition to serve their country in the field.

SUGGESTIONS

This is in no sense a war picture—there are no battle scenes, etc. You might, therefore, inject a different appeal into your advertisements by terming the production a "picture of war time in which a waster becomes a man." Let it be known that the story deals with conditions here at home and not in Europe, and you will awaken a new interest.

While, of course, you will feature Kerrigan, don't forget Lois Wilson, who has been his leading woman in many pictures and who possesses a distant appeal.

"THE VANITY POOL"—UNIVERSAL SPECIAL

Here's One That Will Go Different in Various Localities

OWING to the nature of the subject—scandals and intrigues among married people, chiefly to satisfy personal spite—this picture will have a rather narrow appeal. Some people revel in this sort of topics, others, again, object to them sternly. On that account, the satisfaction it will give depends entirely on the taste of the audience to which you cater.

The fundamental idea of the story is a married man and prominent citizen's love for a poor but charmful young lady, whom he assisted financially. His enemies attempt to make a capital case out of it, but his wife, in order to save her own reputation, steps in and extricates her husband out of an uncomfortable situation.

The scene showing the woman losing her balance and starting to fall off the window, is repelling. To a great number of people, especially to the women, such a sight is sickening.

The picture is not unclean. It has been produced artistically.

CATCH LINES

A picture of the high and the low in society—of the high and the low in politics—affording a contrast that has been utilized to its fullest dramatic extent.

A powerful drama of social and political life interpreted by a cast that includes five proven stars—Mary MacLaren, Thomas Holding, Anna Q. Nilsson, Franklyn Farnum and Marin Sais.

Beware the Vanity Pool! Its waters are deep and he who goes beneath the surface may never rise again!

Innocent facts contorted into a gross scandal ruined Gerald Harper's chances of becoming governor of the state—but he gained a lesson that brought him more than the executive chair.

Franklyn Farnum—Mary MacLaren—Anna Nilsson—Marin Sais—Thomas Holding. That's quite an array of talent for a single picture, isn't it? You will see them all—five stars—in the special attraction, "The Vanity Pool," now at the ———— theatre.

AD TALK

The Universal Special feature, "The Vanity Pool," will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. The management feels confident that this offering will prove of unusual interest to ———— patrons, for all of a picture's essential elements are, in "The Vanity Pool," of extraordinary merit. The story, bearing the name of Nalbro Bartley as author, concerns the social and domestic relations of a group of really interesting people, in which the principal figures are the candidate for governor, his wife and the other woman. It cannot be said, however, that this "eternal triangle" is developed in anything but an original manner. It gives rise to a succession of dramatic situations that sustain the interest from beginning to end.

Secondly, the cast assembled to interpret the various roles of "The Vanity Pool" really deserves the term "all star." Headed by Mary MacLaren, long a favorite in Universal pictures, the cast includes such well known talent of the screen as Thomas Holding, Anna Q. Nilsson, Franklyn Farnum, Marin Sais and Winter Hall. These popular players are ably assisted by Frank Brownlee, Virginia Chester, Willis Marks and May Talbot. There is no denying the fact that this list of names is one of the most imposing ever awarded the roles in a single picture. At least five of these players have long been stars in their own right. Their union in "The Vanity Pool" only goes to show to what extent the Universal company goes in securing the best for the public.

The story was produced under the direction of Ida May Park, one of the three successful women directors in the business, and her work on this subject stamps her as possessing infinite talent and resourcefulness.

THE STORY

Gerald Harper and his wife, Carol, have been married for twenty years and their love for each other has grown cold. The only thing that holds them together is Gerald's candidacy for the governor's seat, for Carol's ambitions are to be "the governor's lady." With this more or less vain ambition, Carol works for Gerald's election by persuading her friend, Diana Casper, to use her influence with Jarvis Flint, a politician. This work consumes considerable of her time, and in return Gerald undertakes to make a few trips for her into the settlements. On one of these occasions he meets Marna Royal, the flower of an unlovely family of the tenements. She is apparently only a child, but a strong attachment springs up between the two. One day Gerald sees her in woman's clothes and, unable to resist her beauty, kisses her. She believes that this is a promise of marriage.

Diana is unsuccessful in her attempts to secure Flint's support because the politician makes unwelcome advances toward her. She learns of Gerald's innocent affair with Marna and, going to Garret, Gerald's intimate friend, says that she will expose the candidate unless he (Garret) marry her. Garret refuses and as a rseult Diana spreads the scandal. To counteract it, Garret brings Marna to the Harper household. She then learns that Gerald is married and is very unhappy. Flint lies to Marna regarding Gerald's character and, in sorrow, she returns home.

The unscrupulous Flint and the spiteful Diana meet death in a struggle. Gerald, contemplating suicide, is saved by Garret, who urges him to go away and begin over. Garret himself seems destined to look after Marna.

SUGGESTIONS

The all-star cast is the strong selling point with respect to "The Vanity Pool," although again has the Universal company stepped forward with a title that contains numerous possibilities for striking advertising. For your newspaper announcement you might dress your advertisement with a large black star, each point containing a picture of one of the five principal players—MacLaren, Holding, Nilsson, Farnum and Sais. Such a display is possible if you make use of the stills furnished on this production. In the center run the name of the picture, although the dressing of the rest of the advertisement can best be determined upon by the man who knows how much space he has to use.

Another advertisement of effective design would be produced if a swirling pool formed the background. On this you could build either a sensational or a moderate display by using figures clutching wildly and being swept around by the waters, or else again the faces of the players. This idea, or both of them, can also be carried out for lobby display in the picture line. If you have a good artist he could no doubt design you some telling displays in colors, using the two suggestions above as a basis.

But don't forget your cast, particularly if you have been in the habit of playing Universal pictures before for here you have both Mary MacLaren and Farnum to boost. Don't forget either that Holding was long leading man for Petrova, that Marin Sais was a Kalem favorite last doing the series "The Social Pirates," and that Anna Nilsson is perhaps one of the best known leading women on the screen today. In publicity stories play up these stars and you will attract attention to your attraction.

pathizing with her, however obstinate and unruly she may be portrayed, because, underneath the surface, you discern the kind nature of the girl. She simply becomes contrary when antagonized, as she possesses a strong will power, causing her individualism to assert itself. You are rather inclined to blame her aunt for not knowing how to handle her.

"Friction arises between the heroine and her aunt. In order to get rid of her, the latter conspires to entangle the girl in matrimony.

"The heroine breaks off relations with the hero, whom she loves, because of her aunt's overpraises of him. In order to succeed in her purpose, the elderly lady adopts a different attitude. She now speaks unfavorably of the man the heroine keeps company with. The scheme succeeds, as the heroine determines to marry him, in spite of her aunt's apparent objections.

"At the day of the wedding the heroine discovers the plot. Infuriated, she runs away. She asks the first man she meets in the street to marry her for a money consideration.

"After the wedding, the husband prefers to have her instead of the money. When she reminds him of their premarriage agreement, he abducts her to the lumber camp, of which he is the superintendent. He determines to tame her, eventually succeeding, although the task proves somewhat hard. In the end it develops that her husband is none other than her first lover. The long beard was the result of his having lost the razor."

Of course there are several improbabilities in the story. For instance, to quote one of them, it seems incredible that the heroine should not recognize the familiar voice of her former sweetheart especially after the kidnapping. But picture goers invariably overlook such weak points when the picture is entertaining.

It is a clean offering and should have universal appeal. Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

"Woman"

(Produced by Maurice Tourneur. Release date to be announced later)

THE artistic side of this production is beautifully developed in every detail, with realistic results. But the degree of satisfaction it will give depends almost wholly on the mode of presentation.

If presented along the lines adopted by Manager Rothapfel there is little doubt but what the picture will be a complete success.

This production is based not on a single story, but on five individual episodes, or fragmentary stories, preceded by a short Prologue and followed by an Epilogue.

The picture opens showing a lady in bad temper. Her calm husband then refers to a dictionary for a definition of the word Woman. The five stories treated in this offering represent definitions.

No. 1 deals with the downfall of Adam and Eve, as related in Genesis, a subject picturized many times in the past; No. 2, with Claudious, the Roman Emperor, and Messalina, his wife; No. 3, with the mediaeval love affair of Abelard, the great Monk Rhetorician, and Heloise; No. 4, with a Fable of Brittany, while No. 5 deals with a story of the Civil War days, in which a woman, allured by a Gold Watch, betrays the whereabouts of a Confederate soldier to a Northern officer, although she knew he would be shot.

Except that all these episodes are based on a common, fundamental idea—the downfall of Man caused by the wiles of Woman—they have no relation with one another. They are separate stories, each one treating the same theme under a different garb, the object of all being to strengthen the common theory. The function of the Epilogue, to which they are joined, is to disprove, by contrast, that theory.

Whether the object of the Epilogue succeeds or not is questionable. For my part, I am inclined to doubt it, for the reason that the argument advanced in favor—the part Woman has played in the present war as a Red Cross Nurse, etc., is, although strong, hardly able to offset the equally strong opposing arguments already imbedded deeply in the mind of the spectator.

Again, whether the present day picture goes will accept an entertainment built up on a group of stories treating the same subject, as if they were single reels, is also problematical. A similar theory has been employed at numerous times in the past, with hardly any satisfactory results.

But the greatest weakness of the picture lies in the fact that the spectator, being conversant with the main idea, knows exactly how each story will end. This results in the elimination of the suspense, which is almost indispensable in a picture.

Closed Theatres Hurt Other Businesses

SPRINGFIELD theatres were still closed on October 25 due to the wave of influenza sweeping over the country. And one of the most surprising things about the affair is that every merchant in the city is willing to admit that the closing of the playhouses has ruined business. For the past ten days business in Springfield stores has been practically at a standstill. The shutting down of the amusement houses has demonstrated to the satisfaction of shop and store owners that the theatre is a boon to business, instead of a detriment. Before the influenza scare it was nothing uncommon to hear a merchant say that people were spending all their money for picture shows and other amusements, and they were not buying his goods. Now he will admit that people who come downtown to picture shows also come around and buy things. Street-car motormen and conductors also report a falling off in transportation since the closing of the theatres. All evidence points—and conclusively so—that when theatres are running full blast and doing business, every other line is profiting also.

Exhibitors Dislike Overruling of Local Boards

DETROIT exhibitors did not object because they were closed by the Governor and the State Board of Health, but they did dislike, it is reported, for the state officials to overrule the local health authorities who had made a thorough investigation of affairs. Dr. James W. Inches, the health officer in Detroit, had found by investigating that in every large city where the theatres were closed the number of influenza cases increased. Furthermore, Dr. Inches, who was backed up by the other members of the Detroit Board of Health and twenty-five leading prominent physicians, declared to the governor that the theatres were of more value in an educational way by keeping open than they stopped the epidemic by being closed. The exhibitors were very careful in keeping out "sneezers" and those with coughs, were throwing slides on the screens, were co-operating in every way with the board of health, and that to close them would be an injustice to the industry, especially in view of the further fact that Detroit had not been seriously invaded with the epidemic. Regardless of all these arguments, however, the governor over-ruled the Detroit health authorities and declared all theatres must close.

It is not a case of not willing to co-operate, but it is a case with the exhibitors in Detroit—why not let us take care of ourselves? Had Governor Sleeper left the closing optional with the local health authorities it would have permitted hundreds of theatres to be open where there was no epidemic, or where it was very slight.

"We pay three or four different taxes, city and state, an annual fire inspection fee, get hit with all kinds of bad weather, and yet we are always the first to suffer," said Phil J. Gleichman, managing director of the Broadway-Strand theatre, Detroit. "I sincerely feel that the theatres were discriminated against. There was no more reason for closing the theatres than the department and five-and-ten-cent stores—yet these places were allowed to remain open and the theatres closed."

Milwaukee Managers Optimistic Over the "Closed Period"

E. C. BOSTICK, manager of the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, is a real optimist. When interviewed as to the prolonged closing of the theatres due to the epidemic, he said, "The 'flu' epidemic has given us a chance to do a thorough house cleaning, and when the ban is lifted we will be in fine shape to entertain the movie lovers of Milwaukee. All my employees of the theatre have been given employment in the theatre, doing general cleaning and repairing. Since we took over the Strand theatre the employees have been divided between both houses."

The Merrill management retained, on full pay, the eight girl ushers, cashier and stenographer, during the closing period.

Leo Landau, manager of the Butterfly theatre, Milwaukee, is also in accord with Health Commissioner Ruhland's closing rules in checking the epidemic.

Mr. Landau has offered to secure between 100 and 150 men of executive ability to act as deputy health officers, and aid in preventing crowds to gather, not only at the movie theatres, in case they are opened, but in stores, elevators, street cars and other places. This proposition is pending the sanction of the Health Commissioner.

No Premature Opening in Milwaukee

"HEALTH COMMISSIONER RUHLAND'S (of Milwaukee) announcement on October 25 that the closing ban would not be lifted October 27 and that schools, churches and places of amusement would not be allowed to open until reports show new cases of influenza are far below the daily record, makes it inadvisable to figure on opening for at least ten days," said Alfred Tanzer, of the Theatre Managers' Circuit, Milwaukee.

"The Milwaukee exhibitors have offered personal help to the Health Commissioner during the epidemic in whatever capacity they could be of use. They also feel that it is preferable to gain the complete confidence of the public rather than open prematurely and have a relapse later. Milwaukee is in the hands of an internationally-known bacteriologist and we feel he is in authority."

Michigan Expects Theatres to Open in November

DESPITE a great falling off of new cases of Spanish influenza throughout Michigan, there is little probability that the state-wide closing order hitting hundreds of theatres in the state will be lifted before the middle of November.

This view of the "flu" situation is held out to the theatre managers who daily call the offices of the Michigan State Board of Health for some encouragement as to the lifting of the ban which is costing thousands of dollars daily.

"There is a falling off of new cases," declared Dr. R. M. Olin, state health officer, who holds the authority for the rescinding of the order. "However, the death rate has not shown a corresponding drop and single day's records are not considered indicative of true conditions.

"In some sparsely-settled places in Michigan, the disease seems to have run its course but the metropolis of the state must be considered. I do not believe the crest of the pandemic has been reached in these larger communities. Theatremen will be hard hit for some time to come. I can hold out little encouragement for them."

Any sudden lifting of the closing order would avail little momentary relief to the thousands whose only amusement has been watching stories on a screen. Theatremen by the hundred would make a rush for Detroit, where are located most of the booking offices.

Claude Cady, manager of the Colonial theatre, Lansing's leading "movie" house, was particularly hard hit by the closing order which came to Michigan theatremen with a less than ten-hour warning. He had paid for five days' features and had bookings arranged for five weeks ahead. "I believe many Michigan theatremen were in about the same fix," said Mr. Cady. "When the order is lifted it will mean that theatremen will not be able to serve their patrons for a few days unless we get more warning on the reopening than we did on the closing. Detroit exchanges and booking houses are making arrangements to make the great adjustment in bookings which will follow the lifting of the ban, I am told."

Detroit Expected Ban Raised November 2

THE outlook in Detroit on October 28 was that Governor A. E. Sleeper and the State Board of Health will remove the ban on theatres, churches and public gatherings, on and after midnight, November 2. However, this is not official because whatever action is to be taken will depend on the epidemic situation throughout the state as it exists by November 1. The exhibitors are expecting some official announcement almost hourly, despite reports that Michigan would get the same long dose of remaining closed as prevailed in Boston and the state of Pennsylvania. It so happens that Michigan was hit less than any other state in the union, and at Camp Custer the conditions are back to normal. There are dozens of towns in Michigan that did not have a single case nor a single death. Exhibitors have sent telegrams to the state capitol urging the removal of the ban not later than November 2 and are confident that they will be able to resume business after that date.

Michigan exhibitors are not complaining but are taking their medicine like patriots. They want to do their full share in wiping out the epidemic so that when they are permitted to reopen they can feel assured of their former full patronage. Up to the time of closing very few houses were doing much business and most of them were open at a loss to their owners.

In traveling around the writer found any number of theatres taking advantage of the closing by having their exteriors and interiors renovated and remodeled and general improvements made.

The exchange managers sent out a notice to all exhibitors that their bookings would start from where they left off, so that in this way no exchange will be the loser and bookings will proceed in the regular way. This plan seems to have met with the unanimous approval of exhibitors.

The Majestic theatre, Detroit, will reopen with "America's Answer," the Adams will open with "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots," the Washington will reopen with a Fox-Standard-William Farnum picture and the Madison with Norma Talmadge in "The Forbidden City."

Rothacker Booth Popular at Metal Congress

WHEN the Allied Metals Congress convened at the Auditorium Building in Milwaukee week beginning October 8, the booth of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago was declared to be the most popular one there.

The Allied Metals Congress is composed of the American Foundrymen's Association, the American Institute of Mining Engineers, and the American Malleable Castings Association. The Rothacker Company had exclusive motion picture privileges and maintained a continuous exhibition of industrial, educational and sales film from 9 a. m. to 5 p. m. daily.

The Rothacker booth was handled by Messrs. S. Calvert, C. P. Tobin, G. S. Anderson and H. W. Mehnke.

O. F. Mr. Spahr says that never in the history of the motion picture business has one house been so swamped with orders. They are on the point of shipping seventeen machines to British India and twenty to the English Government. They have just shipped twenty machines to South Africa.

DR. A. ZILLIGAN, JR., owner of the Rosewood theatre, Chicago, has just purchased a large Bartola, which will be installed immediately, to take the place of the five-piece orchestra which has furnished the music in this house.

CARL LAEMMLE, who has just stopped in Chicago on his way from the Coast to New York, wants to sponsor a movement among motion picture exhibitors for the donation of 10 per cent of one day's box office receipts each month to buy smileage books for the boys in the service, a movement that should meet with the hearty co-operation of every exhibitor in the country.

HARRY COHEN, originator of the song hits in photoplays who has been in California for the past six weeks, has just stopped over in Chicago on his way back to New York.

THE UNIVERSAL COMPANY has just completed a new war picture featuring Dorothy Phillips, which may be called "Carry On." They have material for a fifteen-reel picture, which they expect eventually to boil into eight reels.

R. LEO CRUME, publicity manager of the Canadian Universal Film Exchange, has been a visitor in Chicago. Mr. Crume is a Chicagoan and came here to bury his father, who died from the Spanish influenza.

SIG. SAMUELS, owner of the Criterion, Savoy and Alpha theatres, Atlanta, Ga., has been in Chicago arranging for the installing of an organ in the Criterion theatre.

E. W. RIEBER of the Grand theatre, Warsaw, Ind., has made a contract to operate the Auditorium at Winona Lake, as a photoplay house to accommodate the soldiers now stationed there, to be trained for handling motor trucks "overseas." Between 1,200 and 1,400 recruits have just arrived there.

RALPH H. FULTON, manager of United Theatre Equipment Company in Chicago, who handles the velvet gold fibre screen, reports that L. J. Gardiner, the manufacturer of it, in a recent drive for business, installed the screen in the following houses: Palace theatre, Danville, Ill., Thomas P. Ronan, manager; Gem theatre, Centralia, Ill., H. M. Ferguson, manager; Applebaum & Kahn, Argmore and Prairie theatres, Chicago; the Savoy, Milwaukee, Wis.; the Modjeska, Maysville, Wis.; Strand theatre, Rockford, Ill.; the Capital theatre, Pekin, Ill.

PALACE THEATRE of Montpelier, Ind., at a recent showing of "Over the Top," Vitagraph special patriotic propaganda production with Guy Empey himself, had to continue their performance far after midnight to enable patrons of the theatre to gain admission.

C. V. DARROW has purchased the Mystic theatre of Warren, Ind., from J. B. Walters. Mr. Walters has moved with his family to Montpelier and will take immediate management of the Palace theatre there.

MYREL SMITH, the genial general manager of the George Kleine System, reports that while the bulk of the territory is closed, their mail covering inquiries is as large as ever. The enforced idleness of the exhibitors all over the country affords them more time to lay plans for future booking.

FRED C. AITKEN, Chicago manager for Select Pictures Corporation, announces that they have just passed their first anniversary, and will move into new quarters on the nineteenth floor of the Consumers building, October 28, at which time President Louis J. Selznick is expected to grace the occasion and personally meet the Chicago exhibitors.

W. S. HART has been in Chicago for the past week to take scenes for a forthcoming picture which will have Chicago for its background. The stockyards will figure in the film. Hart and his associates will journey there for a number of scenes.

THE ORPHEUM THEATRE of Hartford City, Ind., has been sold to F. D. Walters. Mr. Walters will move to Hartford City. Upon the raising of the closing ban the Orpheum will immediately re-open.

Strand in Milwaukee Changes Management

WHEN the closing ban is lifted in Detroit the Strand theatre will be opened under new management, it was announced last week.

The Strand theatre was opened three years ago under the management of Phillip Gross, and Charles C. Perry of Minneapolis later took charge. Mr. Perry entered the service in July, going first to Camp Upton, and later to Camp Cody to manage the Liberty theatres at those places. A change at the Strand has been contemplated since he left.

Arthur Weaver, chief operator at the Merrill for the past several years will be house-manager at the New Strand. Both houses will be under the management of Mr. Bostick and will be run on open booking plan.

Mr. Bostick, the new manager of the Strand, is also a native of Minneapolis, coming here two years ago to "set" the Merrill on its feet.

Versatility Crops Out in Milwaukee Musicians

DURING the "flu" epidemic in Milwaukee the musicians of the Merrill theatre helped to lay the tile floor. Anyone who has sat through an evening at this theatre and listened to the tones of the Xylophone soloist could never have placed him in the role of floor laying. But this is what he and the remaining members of the Merrill orchestra did rather than be idle during the period of the closing of the theatre.

News and Gossip of Springfield Theatres

EVERY manager in the city is utilizing the idle days to fix up his playhouse. Cleaning, painting, decorating, adjusting, and a general overhauling has been going on at all the theatres, and when opening day comes, patrons of the various palaces will find everything spick and span for them.

W. W. WATTS has had his giant pipe organ repaired and put in shape by an expert organ builder. It has been over a year since the pipes were heard at the Vaudette, and this will be one of the features that patrons can expect when things get running again.

LOUIS AND GUS KERASOTES, owners of the Royal and Savoy theatres, are spinning around the country in their big machine these days. Louie has booked "The Iron Test," the new Vitagraph serial for the Savoy, and Gus has hooked the Universal chapter play, "The Lure of the Circus" for the Royal.

JULIUS SCHWARTZ, for five years violinist at the Gaiety theatre, but now of Miller's, Milwaukee, was in the city visiting friends October 17. Schwartz expects to be called for service in a few days. He is considered one of the finest violinists in this part of the country, and is a splendid conductor.

IT was expected by all theatres that the closing down order would be rescinded about October 26, thereby allowing the theatres to open for business Sunday, October 27. And every show house in the city expects good business to result from the enforced idleness. There is no denying that every theatre in the city would have played to poor patronage on the week of October 13-20, for this city was scared stiff by the influenza spread. But now that the crisis seems to have been passed, and everyone is breathing easier again, the playhouses look to be in for some extra good business. It is easy to understand that when a theatre is closed, money is lost with big rents and other expenses that cannot be eliminated, but it also is easy to figure that with big film rentals, light, heat, employes pay, advertising and other things, much money is necessary for the maintenance of an even ledger.

IT is reasonable to suppose that if theatres in this city are closed two weeks, the theatres will make up what is lost before the end of the year. But if they are forced to stay closed longer, as much cannot be said. Employes are big losers, also. Operators, musicians, helpers and attaches are thrown upon their own resources, and most of them are dependent on their week's pay every week.

THE Illinois State Journal had a very fine editorial the morning after the closing down of the playhouses, lauding the managers for their patriotism, and for their willingness to cooperate with the board of health, regardless of the big loss to which they were subjected.

HARRY LOPER, after putting in a week fixing up the Lyric theatre, expects to take a drive around the country until opening time comes.

THE GAIETY THEATRE ORCHESTRA is hunting and fishing. Every member is a knight of the rod and gun.

EVERY manager in town is praying the order to open up does not come as late at night as the one to close did. If it does there will be some tall scurrying around for pictures, and to tell the help. It was almost closing time when the edict for shutting down arrived. As luck would have it the papers were able to kill advertising and press matter, thereby saving a little for the M. P. men.

MANAGER HARRY LOPER, of the Lyric, is planning on surprising his patrons when the theatres are reopened. The entire playhouse has been decorated in old rose and mahogany, the latter color harmonizing with the chairs, which gives a rich, soft and restful effect throughout. So eager was Mr. Loper to have the job done right, in case there should be an early order to open, he had the entire crew of decorators work all day Sunday. The lobby will be done over in white, and the Lyric will take a back seat from no house in the city when all the work is done.

MAJOR H. T. LOPER and Mrs. Loper, owners of the Kimbark theatre, Chicago, are visiting at the home of their son, Harry Loper, while the influenza scare is on.

LOUIS KERASOTES is planning on having the painters and decorators go to work on the Savoy this week. Gus Kerasotes, of the Royal, has had extensive improvements made on his theatre.

ISADOR BURNSTINE, once owner of the Capitol and Casino theatres of this city, but now the theatrical magnate of Lincoln, Ill., was called here by the death of his brother, who was a victim of influenza.

THE consensus of opinion among the theatre owners of this city at this writing, Monday, October 21, is that the playhouses will be closed at least for a week longer. A rumor has been afloat that the theatres will be allowed to open on Sunday, October 27, but no foundation could be found for it. Most of the owners figure that to be open now would be a losing proposition, as the public is too afraid to venture into crowds at this time. It will take a few days longer to remove the timidity, and much newspaper assurance will be needed before folks will again flock to the theatres as in the days before the epidemic.

MANAGER GEORGE RIORDAN, of the Majestic, announces that Finn and Heiman, Chicago vaudeville men, have secured Charlie Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms" for the whole circuit which they control, and plan on having the picture here at the same time it is shown at the Gaiety. This will be the first time a new Chaplin picture has been shown at the Majestic, and the first time that there has been competition between the motion picture theatres and vaudeville house.

AS far as can be learned no one connected with the picture industry in this city has yet been attacked by the "flu."

MAJOR FUNKHOUSER, former censor czar of Chicago, was in the city this week. There was nothing here to censor.

Interesting Items of Elgin

PRACTICALLY exempt from the "flu," Elgin is considering itself the most fortunate city of the state during the country-wide epidemic.

While state board of health and local commissioners' orders closed the moving picture theatres October 16, it was only as a preventive measure and not one made necessary by prevailing conditions. While the blow of the sudden closing hit hard at first, as "wind" came back managers began to see the situation from an optimistic viewpoint.

MANAGER RALPH W. CROCKER of the Star theatre, who had not had a vacation in years, and who only recently gave up a cashier's position to devote his entire time to the theatre business, turned the key in the door of his show house, cranked up his Ford sedan and with his family and friends began a series of woods and waters jaunts. As a result his roof is thatched with walnuts, his cellar filled with apples gathered from countrysides, and he is telling the most "magnolius" of fish stories. One of these is of a tremendous haul of bass and blue gills at Pistakee Bay, the exact number being censored in deference to state game laws.

MANAGER GUS COOK of the Crystal, Dundee, and the Strand, St. Charles, left with Mrs. Cook for a trip and visit to former haunts and business locations in Green bay and vicinity, visiting former contemporaries in the show business and thoroughly enjoying reunions.

MANAGER WILLIAM P. FAY of the Temple, who took immediate possession of his playhouse after purchasing it from Frank Vanston, upon coming here from Huron, S. D., in midsummer, took the first opportunity afforded him to "get acquainted" again with friends made here before his location in the West.

MANAGER WILLIAM B. NEWMAN of the Grand and Manager Henry Rorig of the Orpheum, passed up the more strenuous life for a cooling of heels on home doorsteps to wait "'till the clouds roll by."

LATER managers took second wind and went after the dust and dirt with the vacuum cleaner and the paint brush. All conducted a house-cleaning and some a thorough renovation. As the cleaning progressed the smiles came back, and by the first of the week following managers were considering the closing heaven-sent favor.

MANAGER CROCKER on Tuesday, October 21, made the following statement: There is certainly a philosophical way to look at the closing ruling. I figure that the public was due for some such situation in the picture business anyway. The public has been overfed on pictures. Theatres have been open seven days a week and always there for the pleasure of the patron. It's just a case of "too much cake." Deprivation of sweets for a while makes the one deprived crave them the more. I honestly believe that the reaction will prove a greater benefit in the end than we may foresee now. It will create a new appetite for pictures in general. It will make the public less critical. They had reached the point where every possible sort of a picture was being handed out to them.

"They were being spoiled with a surfeit of pictures and depreciating some of the best bookings. I believe the closing will be the biggest sort of a boom and boost to late fall and winter patronage."

MANAGER FAY of the Temple expressed himself as considering the enforced vacation a godsend. He reported that so many tasks, big and little, had been piling about him since his acquiring the show house, that he gratefully welcomed the opportunity to get caught up on them.

THE closing of the theatres put about thirty-five Elgin people out of a job for a while—inclusive of managers, orchestras, operators, ushers and advertising people. Of the number not a single one was reported ill by the middle of the second week when hope began to loom on the horizon that the ban would be lifted by the first of the week following.

COMMISSIONER OF PUBLIC HEALTH AND SAFETY, John C. Kohn, promised managers in mid-week that the local lid would be lifted the minute the state ban came off.

In and Around Detroit

DAVE PRINCE, for the past year manager of the Triangle exchange in Detroit, left very suddenly on October 24 for Chicago, having been accepted for service in the ambulance corps of the American Red Cross. Mr. Prince is at Camp Scott, Company C, Chicago, where he will have a four-weeks' training course prior to going overseas. During his regime as Triangle manager, he had built up the business to a point where it had increased 100 per cent. The day he left General Manager Freeman called him up by long distance from New York, wished him Godspeed and told him that he could always come back and find a good job waiting for him. No successor has yet been appointed to succeed Mr. Prince. Prior to going to the Triangle, Mr. Prince was manager for the General Flm Co. in Detroit and Dallas.

MANY Detroit exhibitors are taking the lay-off as occasion for vacationing. M. W. McGee, of the Majestic theatre, is on a motor trip to remain away until the theatre reopens. George Hoffman, of the Home theatre, left October 28 for a motor trip to Chicago. John Niebes, of the Dawn theatre, motored to Cleveland and back.

PAUL C. MOONEY, for the past four years central division manager for the Fox Film Corporation, with residence in Cleveland, left October 25th for Los Angeles, accompanied by his family. Mr. Mooney has been appointed special representative on the Pacific Coast for Fox and will make his home in Los Angeles. During his stay in the middle west, he made many warm friends both for himself and the Fox Film Corporation, and he will be sadly missed in the central west territory. Clayton Sheehan, brother of W. R. Sheehan, succeeds Mr. Mooney as central division manager. He has been acting as special representative for the general manager's office, and made his first trip over the territory last week accompanied by Mr. Mooney.

GOLDWYN PICTURES are booked first-run as follows in the principal cities of the state: Regent, Detroit; Majestic-Garden, Grand Rapids; Franklin, Saginaw; Lipp & Cross, Battle Creek; Elite, Kalamazoo; Herb Weil, Port Huron; Orpheum, Flint, and Regent, Bay City.

H. N. DUFF, of the Michigan War Preparedness Board, Lansing, has notified the Michigan exhibitors outside of Detroit, that the release date on "America's Answer" is set back indefinitely because of the influenza epidemic.

H. S. GALLUP, of the Delft Theatres, Inc., Marquette, Mich., and L. J. Jacobs, of the Delft theatre, Escanaba, were recently in Minneapolis arranging future bookings. The Delft corporation, by the way, has just taken over the Strand theatre in Escanaba, giving them two houses in that town, or a total of five houses in their circuit. Mr. Gallup is general manager.

UP to the time of writing, George W. Trendle, general manager of the John H. Kunsky Enterprises, was confined to his home with Spanish influenza with every likelihood of recovery.

AL LICHTMAN, general manager for Artcraft-Paramount, was in Detroit on October 26 and 27, being on a trip to the various mid-west exchanges. Al had nothing new to report except that up to the time of the closing the Detroit exchange was one of the best conducted of the company's 28 offices, which speaks very well for H. A. Ross, Detroit manager.

BERT WEDDIGE, of the Michigan Motion Picture Supply Co., Detroit, and Max Ruben, business agent of the Motion Picture Operators Union, returned October 24 from a ten days' auto trip to New York City.

Watterson Rothacker, of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, of Chicago

Watterson R. Rothacker, Head of the Rothacker Film Co., Strikes a Keynote

DR. ROTHACKER has again demonstrated his creative ability by originating and carrying through to success what is known in Chicago as the "Smile Movies," which he is making in co-operation with the Chicago Herald Examiner, and involves the taking of moving pictures of the families and friends of the Illinois Regiments and Divisions, which are to be sent abroad and shown to the boys "over there" about Christmas time.

The plan originated with Mr. Rothacker and started with the filming of some friends and families of the 149th Field Artillery. At the suggestion of the paper the plan was enlarged and extended to cover all other regiments. There is no question but what Mr. Rothacker's idea can well be extended to cover all parts of this country.

As never before in the history of the world, during any conflict, has it been possible for those on the firing line to receive an actual smile of encouragement from the dear one's at home.

Happenings in Madison

THE unusual position the moving picture industry of Wisconsin was placed in because of the closing order in effect owing to the epidemic of influenza was typified by the situation in the state capital. Moving picture managers of Madison have varying ideas as to the effect of the closing order and its ultimate outcome. State Health Officer Harper intended to open public places in Wisconsin with the opening of the week of the 27th.

The closing order sounded the knell of many moving picture theatres in the state of the smaller type who have been playing the game on a shoestring basis and have been fighting from hand to mouth to keep in existence with hopes for a future. They have been forced to close and will not open—at least for the duration of the war. Many cases of this nature have come to the attention of film men in the state.

The plague drew its toll among the moving picture employees and managers as well as other industries. Possibly one of the best known managers to succumb was Flossie Jones of Waukesha. This popular manager was an example of what an enterprising woman can do. She developed the theatres of Waukesha and was on a trip to the convention at Madison Square when she was stricken.

The closing order in Wisconsin came at the height of the "fall" season for the managers. The autumn months are considered the best of the year and during this period picture promoters aim to clean up on their program for the year. During this time they hope to make up for dull summer days and for the bitter winter days that prevent large attendances. In this respect the closing order came at the worst time in the entire year.

There is another phase of the situation that has been brought about by the war and that is the question of employees. War times make many openings for both skilled and unskilled help. Employees can not afford to remain idle and managers can not afford to pay their employees during this period. The result has been that the employees have gone into different lucrative fields and will not resume their positions in the theatres. The larger theatres will experience difficulty in obtaining men and the probability is that women will again solve the problem in many cases.

There is also the bright side of the situation for the moviegoer as well as the manager. The majority of the theatres have been given much needed cleanings. In Madison practically every house has been renovated and refurnished. This could not have been done had this opportunity not presented itself.

More than one manager has stated that owing to the Liberty Loan drive business was due for a falling off. This period of depression will be past when the order is lifted.

Madison promoters are making ready for an intensive advertising campaign the moment the ban is lifted and will make a strong effort to develop the habit of movie going if it has waned during the epidemic. Stellar programs are being contemplated that will compel the attention of the public.

F. J. McWILLIAMS, manager of the Grand theatre, pioneer house of Madison, stated that he was not depressed in any way by the closing edict and took it in an optimistical way. He has installed shadow boxes and partitioned off his stage in order to conserve coal. He has redecorated to a considerable extent and will be ready for the opening day. McWilliams believes that slow business will feature the first two weeks after the opening, but feels that in no way will the industry at large be materially affected.

HUGH FLANNERY at the Fuller opera house has hung new draperies throughout his large house, besides redecorating and improving his front. He could not foretell what the next few weeks would bring, but believed that it would all turn out for the best.

MUCH work remained to complete the New Strand and during this period A. P. Desormeaux added many new features to his playhouse which is regarded as the finest theatre built exclusively for photoplays in the state. A covering of gutta percha has been placed on the floor, the canopy over the front and several other features needed completion. Desormeaux has ordered a $1,000 lot of furniture for his beautiful lobby. He has placed a victrola in his lobby for the convenience and enjoyment of his patrons.

THROUGHOUT the state this spirit of co-operation has been evidenced and house promoters have done their best to profit through the edict to the greatest possible degree.

Schaeffer Sees Trouble Ahead for Chicago Exhibitors

ACCORDING to Peter J. Schaeffer, of Jones, Linick & Schaeffer, Chicagoans are facing 25c. and 35c. movies in the near future if Congress passes the proposed twenty per cent admission tax on theatres and the ten per cent tax on the sales.

Mr. Schaeffer figures that the increase in the price of admission to picture theatres from 17c. to 25c. and 30c. will result in cutting the attendance to one-half and work a hardship on many theatres, perhaps, to the extent of forcing some of them out of business.

He claims the Government received, during the last year in war taxes from theatres in the United States, about $56,000,000, and figures this amount will be reduced to $32,000,000 if Congress increases the war tax as proposed.

Mr. Schaeffer explains that the proposed tax would fall entirely upon the exhibitors, many of whom would be forced into bankruptcy. The tax, therefore, must be passed on to the patrons of the theatre.

Coupled with the proposed increased war tax is the fact that the influenza epidemic has closed about 75 per cent of the theatres throughout the nation, thus cutting the receipts materially. It will take months to counterbalance these losses alone.

Allender of Spokane Out For Legislature

MOTION picture interests will be well taken care of by the Washington state legislature, if J. W. Allender, manager of two Spokane houses, wins out in the coming election. Allender is a candidate to the state legislature on the democratic ticket. He is a native son of Washington, born in 1886. Mr. Allender went to Alaska in the gold rush days and after that thrilling experience, returned to Spokane and entered the motion picture business. His first experience in this line was to learn the electrical branch. He was operator for the various theatres offering that line of amusement during its infancy here, finally entering the business himself, purchasing the lease of the Lyric theatre in 1915.

In the motion picture business Mr. Allender has looked ahead to the future possibilities of Spokane and during June leased the Majestic theatre, which he operates in conjunction with the Lyric. In offering himself as a candidate for the office of state legislator Mr. Allender states that his platform should be based upon his standing in the community, business reputation, progressive and energetic policies used in civic enterprises, his clear and unreserved judgment used in the office of civil service commissioner and an advocate of good highways.

Coast Exchanges Prepare for Resumption of Business

THE first week in the history of Los Angeles film exchanges when they were not called upon to supply pictures to the exhibitors, due to the closing of nearly all theatres in Southern California, was spent in preparing for the big business rush that is certain to follow the closing order, according to the consensus of opinion of exchange managers.

Programs were arranged, and are being arranged to supply the exhibitors instantly upon word that the closing ban has been lifted. Some of the managers took inventory of stock on hand, and others brought their books up to date. Efforts were made by some to balance all past due accounts with exhibitors.

Among the exchanges that believe a land office business awaits the film industry with the passing of the influenza epidemic are David Bershon, Universal; W. H. Hepburn, Vitagraph; C. J. Marley, Triangle; B. E. Loper, Select; Guy C. Gunderson, Kleine System; Nick Steele, William L. Sherry; Ben Fish, Goldwyn; Harry Ballance, Paramount-Artcraft; Arthur Lamb, Metro; A. H. Hancock, World Film; A. R. Patten, Mutual; E. D. Tate, Pathe, and many others.

Goldwyn Prepares for Move to the Coast

ANNOUNCEMENT of the early arrival of Goldwyn stars in Los Angeles, despite rumors to the effect that the Goldwyn migration to the West might be postponed indefinitely, were received Monday night from the Goldwyn headquarters in New York. According to the announcement, Mae Marsh and her director are already on the way, and they are expected to reach the film capital the latter part of this week. Mabel Normand and Pauline Frederick, two other Goldwyn stars, are expected to follow within ten days. Madge Kennedy and her director will leave for Los Angeles about November 10, it is understood.

Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, will arrive on the Coast on November 15, according to the announcement received here this week. He will be followed by Rex Beach and Mrs. Beach, who will arrive about December 1. Abraham Lehr, general manager, who was expected to arrive about November 1, will not return to the coast until the latter part of November, it is understood.

A number of receptions are being planned for Mae Marsh, Mabel Normand and Madge Kennedy by their friends, and these stars will no doubt find it very homelike when they reach Los Angeles.

Announcement is also made that the equipment and properties of Goldwyn Eastern studios, comprising five freight cars, has already started on its Westward journey. The first carload left New York last Saturday.

It was also announced that Geraldine Farrar may not come to the Pacific Coast until next spring, as her operatic and concert engagements will keep her in the East until that time.

Dalton Inspiration for Message Abroad

DOROTHY DALTON, the Thomas H. Ince star, is said to be the inspiration for one of the most unique messages ever sent to loving mothers, sisters and sweethearts to the boys "over there."

A large photographic enlargement of her pose in the picture "Vive La France!" printed on satin, was presented by Photographer N. S. Evans to the Friday Morning Club division of the Red Cross in Los Angeles. This proved an inspiration and with it as centerpiece the women have pieced a quilt with hundreds of little blocks on which they have embroidered messages of love to which they affixed their signatures in threads of silk.

Denver Awaits Permit to Open the Theatres

DENVER distributors and exhibitors throughout this territory are anxiously awaiting the canceling of the orders that closed all theatres and public places in the Rocky Mountain district on account of the influenza epidemic. In Denver on Wednesday there was a decided improvement in the situation, both in the number of deaths and the number of new cases, reported at fifteen and one hundred and forty-nine respectively for the twenty-four-hour period. These figures brought the total number of deaths in Denver to 211 and the total number of cases officially reported to 2,922. There is some talk of reopening the Denver theatres perhaps within a week or ten days, but the health department is anxious to avoid the error of Kansas City, where the theatres were opened too soon and had to be closed again.

Out in the state conditions show little improvement and in many towns the disease is raging unchecked. There is a great shortage of doctors and nurses. More than five thousand cases have been reported to the state authorities. In the town of Silverton there are at present six hundred cases.

Health authorities of New Mexico state that the epidemic in that state is beyond control. State officials have issued a call for doctors and nurses, the wages being $200 per month in addition to traveling expenses and $4 a day maintenance, to be paid by the state.

"The motion picture industry has sustained an enormous loss on account of the epidemic in territory tributary to Denver," said Manager A. E. Fair of the Triangle Distributing Corporation. It is hard to estimate even approximately the total loss by reason of the closing order.

"When the closing order is finally lifted, I do not anticipate any big rush on the part of the fans. I believe that the exhibitors will get back their business gradually and that within a week or two after the ban is lifted they will be showing to big crowds.

"I watched the night crowds in the downtown district last Sunday night on Curtis street, where the usually brilliantly-lighted picture houses could only be distinguished in the darkness by their familiar outlines. Part of the big crowds paraded up and down the darkened "Great White Way," seemingly lost, and then by common impulse joined the larger crowds in the lighted streets in the shopping district. All of them paraded for hours before the attractive show windows, simply because they had no place else to go. And the crowd was always the biggest before the windows which were exhibiting war pictures, proving conclusively the ever-present longing for some form of amusement."

Mr. Fair originated a plan adopted by the local board of trade, which will prevent any confusion when business is started again. The Board of Trade has sent out a letter to every exhibitor in the territory, in which he is advised that service will be started again on the same day of the week as before. For instance, if an exhibitor in Cheyenne was running a Triangle picture Sunday, a Pathe picture on Tuesday and a Mutual production Thursday, it would only be necessary for him to wire one of the exchanges above mentioned to set in motion his whole program. If he sent his telegram to the Denver Triangle exchange, Mr. Fair would immediately telephone every other exchange, and the Cheyenne exhibitor would be saved the cost of sending additional telegrams. Ward E. Scott of Pathe is chairman of the Denver Board of Trade and H. D. Cassidy of Mutual is secretary.

With the taking over of Sherry Service by the General Film Corporation, the local exchange at 1723 Welton street has been closed, and Manager Canagy has returned to Los Angeles.

Denver exchange circles are shocked and grieved to learn of the recent death in San Francisco of R. K. Lynch, special representative of Triangle. Mr. Lynch visited Denver two weeks ago on his way to the coast. Telegrams of condolence have been sent to the New York office and to the family.

Employes of local exchanges have been heavy losers on account of the closing order, but not all of them. In several instances several have found temporary employment where they have made good. H. S. Slie, former manager of the Edison theatre at Newcastle, Wyo., is one of them. He had just completed his initial trip as a road salesman for Vitagraph when the "floo" hit Denver and everything was shut down. The order didn't bother Slie a little bit. He is also an expert undertaker and business has been mighty good in that line. He hasn't lost a day but will be ready to return when the picture business is on again.

J. M. Hayden, another Vitagraph road man, is a former tool maker. He got busy with a local company which has a big war contract, and is knocking out $8 a day.

Duffy Postpones Trip Along the Coast

FRANK DUFFY, special representative to General Manager and Vice-President Paul Brunet of the Pathe Company, because of the spread of Spanish influenza on the Pacific Coast last week, postponed his visit to San Francisco and Seattle for one week. He is making his first trip to all the Pathe exchanges in the United States since he was made special representative of the company.

After a week in Los Angeles he was favorably impressed with the way the exchanges are handling the picture business in this territory, and he remarked particularly on the close co-operation of theatres and exchanges.

"I am firmly convinced," he said, "that when the ban on all public gatherings is lifted and the theatres are again open to the public, they will play to such big business that any losses sustained during the closing period will be speedily wiped out.

"Likewise the exchangemen will benefit. It is an ill wind that blows nobody any good, and what appears to be an ill wind at the present time will, in my opinion, prove a great blessing."

After visiting in San Francisco and Seattle, Mr. Duffy will return to the East, when he will begin a tour of all the Southern Pathe exchanges, ending his trip by a swing through the Middle West.

Latest News Around Seattle

ALTHOUGH the picture houses are closed at Camp Lewis, Wash., the 40,000 men stationed there are treated with outdoor movies. On pleasant evenings they see Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford and the rest of the stars.

Film Row and all the theatres in Tacoma, Seattle and the Northwest are quiet, but a good many of the theatres are taking advantage of this Spanish flu season to paint up their houses. Film Row, Seattle, has lost a few of its men who used to swing around in office chairs. Among them are Nave, Beale, Todd, Goldman, Koerpel and Bories. They have gone to work in the famous Seattle shipyards. They have done it for patriotic reasons, although they get paid for it and they have a little time now. Some work a half day and the balance of the day they spend on Film Row watching some of the others trying to catch up with their work. The ban is about to be lifted and everything will be O. K. again.

The picture men are gaining a good reputation with the public as a whole on account of their willingness to co-operate with the government in bond drives and in showing patriotic pictures. The men in charge of the drives always place H. G. Rosebaum, J. A. Koerpel or James Clemmer of "Clemmer's theatre" on their committees.

MANAGER TALLY of the Vitagraph office in Seattle, has been made manager of Clemmer's theatre, Seattle.

FILM ROW was proud when some of her men were sent "over there," and she was just as glad to hear from a couple of them the other day. They were Sergt. Mandel Nieder, who formerly was with H. A. Johnson Supply Company, and was later on the road with a few films of his own. He seems to be getting along with bells, for when he left he was only a film man, and now he is a sergeant in a medical detachment. H. A. Johnson also hears from his son quite frequently, who has been in France for three years, and who writes that while he likes home, he wants to stay there till he brings a few Kaiserlets with him or is able to do so.

MANAGER W. A. MEAD of the Universal in Seattle, in a very short time has rolled up a large "Smileage Honor Roll." The names of some follow: W. S. Quimby, "Liberty" and "Bell," Bellingham; Jack Barbour, "Liberty," Ketchikan, Alaska; C. P. Merwin, "Broadway," Everett; J. Q. Clemmer, "Clemmer," Seattle; C. M. Biggs, "Madison," Seattle; John Hammrick, "Rex," Seattle; W. H. Thompson, "Circuit," Seattle; Ed. Dolan, "Weir" and "Dream," Aberdeen, Wash.; L. A.Drinkwine, "Palace," Tacoma; D. P. McRae, "Gem," Seattle; G. H. Reizner, "Lyric," Raymond, Wash., and "Lyric," South Bend, Wash.; G. Heyfron, "Isis" and "Empress," Missoula, Mont.; L. D. Kenworthy, "Aloha," Tacoma.

MANAGER WETHSTONE has bought the Grand at Meaderville, Mont., and expects to use Universal files.

DONALD McDONALD, son of A. H. McDonald, is managing the Eugene theatre, Eugene, Ore.

HARRY JOHNSON has re-opened the "Rex" at Logan, Utah.

E. B. LAWSON of Sutherlin, Ore., has opened a theatre there.

C. H. CHETFORD has bought the theatre in Cheney, Wash.

Lewistown House Last to Close

"THEATRE closed on account of the flu," was the brief message sent from the Judith theatre to one of the owners at Butte, this being the last theatre in Montana to close, along with the Myrtle, another Lewistown house. Lewistown was free from the "flu" until a few days ago and even now the situation is far from serious there. Helena and Bozeman were two other towns that remained open until the past week.

Brentwood Company Gets Under Way

THE BRENTWOOD FILM CORPORATION, a new producing corporation, began work in Hollywood the week before the four weeks' shutdown went into effect.

The company has leased the studios of the Mena Film Corporation at 4811 Fountain avenue, Hollywood, and the first picture is under way. It is being directed by King W. Vidor. The new concern plans to do a series of feature pictures with all-star casts. Among some of the players appearing in the first Brentwood offering, "The Turn of the Road," will be Helen Jerome Eddy, formerly with George Beban; Pauline Curley, who has played with Douglas Fairbanks and Harold Lockwood; Winter Hall, who has appeared in Cecil B. De Mille productions; George Nichols, Lloyd Hughes and others. "The Turn of the Road" is an original story without a war angle. Some of the most beautiful homes in the fashionable Wilshire district will be used in some of the exterior scenes.

Studying the Stars

A Tip or So by Howard Hickman, Author and Director of the Latest Barriscale Feature, on Writing for Stars

HOWARD HICKMAN, motion picture director, leading man, film villain, and photoplay author, was asked by an interviewer the other day to give a few "tips" about writing for Bessie Barriscale, whose latest production, "Two-Gun Betty," was written and directed by Mr. Hickman. His brief statement, Mr. Hickman observes, applies to all stars as well as to Miss Barriscale.

"Of course the opportunities of the outside author to study the personality of the star are not usually so as mine," he began with a smile. "Being her director and having before that played opposite Miss Barriscale, or having the villain's part in some of her photoplays, gave me an opportunity to study her wide dramatic possibilities very closely. But I believe this—that with all of my seeing her act and directing her screen plays, it would have done me no good as an author if I had not studied her work on the screen. There, in my opinion, is the place to study when one wishes to write for the screen, and there is the place to learn to know each individual star. Moreover, it is within the reach of everyone, at their picture theatre.

"The off-stage personality of the star need not concern the author. The screen work of the star is the thing to study, and not any one picture—unless you intend to deliberately imitate the style of this picture, which would then be hard to sell to that star, who is probably seeking something different from the previous productions. The thing to do is to study as many different pictures of the star as possible; from the ensemble of which, form your own conception of her screen personality, and then write the story, as original a one as possible, bearing the screen personality of the star in mind."

Pickford Goes East to Attend to Legal Matters

MARY PICKFORD made a hurried trip to Los Angeles last week from Omaha, where she had been halted by a telegram that her sister, Lottie Pickford, was dangerously ill in the Sisters' hospital. She was met at Omaha by her mother, Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, and they rushed westward as fast as the trains could bring them.

Arriving in Los Angeles they found that Lottie was slightly improved. Two days later Mary started East again, and she is expected to reach New York Thursday of this week. She has gone to New York to defend herself in a suit brought by Mrs. C. C. Wilkenning, who is suing for $103,750, which she alleges is due for three years' of service as Miss Pickford's advisor, promoter and manager.

Before Miss Pickford left for the East she said that only recently Mrs. Wilkenning made an offer to compromise the case for $800. This offer was refused, however, upon the ground that there was absolutely no foundation for Mrs. Wilkenning's claim.

Miss Pickford says that she has never had a manager other than her mother, Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, who has always, and even now, handles all her business affairs. Mary further states that she was ably represented by a paid legal adviser and a personal representative during the period when Mrs. Wilkenning claims to have been her adviser, promoter and manager.

The suit will come to trial on November 15. After it is over Miss Pickford expects to be in New York about two weeks before returning to Los Angeles. In the meantime, if Sister Lottie improves rapidly enough, Mrs. Pickford expects to take her to some quiet resort for her convalescence, and she will return to New York to complete the details of Miss Pickford's new company now in course of organization.

Mrs. Pickford was called away from this work last week because of the illness of Lottie. The process of organization was also held up on account of the illness of Dennis O'Brien, Miss Pickford's attorney.

Miss Pickford stated this week that already twelve different releasing companies have approached her for contracts for any pictures that she may produce in the future. Up to the time she left Los Angeles she had not closed any contracts.

SID GRAUMAN and Rothwell Browne are preparing for a big week when Mr. Browne's first Paramount-Mack Sennett photoplay, "Yankee Doodle," is shown at Grauman's theatre when the amusement houses of Los Angeles are re-opened. The picture will be shown early in November, it is announced, unless the present epidemic causes a further postponement.

KATHLEEN KIRKHAM, who has just completed her work in Douglas Fairbanks' latest Artcraft release, "Arizona," left Los Angeles last week for Chicago upon receipt of a telegram from her sister, who is seriously ill in that city.

ACCORDING to advices received in Los Angeles this week the case of Anthony Paul Kelly, former Los Angeles scenario writer, against Henry Walthall, the motion picture actor, will come up for trial in the New York supreme court this week. The litigation concerns the recovery of $5,000, which Kelly alleges he paid Walthall to bind an option on the latter's services for a film.

D. W. GRIFFITH on a recent Monday began work on his new war drama, a stupendous propaganda production, which is yet unnamed. Robert Harron and Richard Barthelmess are to play the leading male roles. The remainder of the cast has not been announced. This new film by Mr. Griffith will be a story of the draft, and its theme will be along lines heretofore forbidden by the government, it is understood. Some of the scenes were made some time ago by government photographers at the various cantonments, and these will be woven into the story. One particularly striking feature of the production will be a scene in which huge artillery, snapped at one of Uncle Sam's best known artillery schools, will be shown. The picture will be produced under the supervision of the War Department. It is understood that it will cost approximately $50,000.

LILA LEE, one of the newest Paramount-Artcraft stars, left this week for an indefinite stay in New York. She took advantage of the four weeks' production suspension to make the trip. She had just finished a picture called "Puppy Love."

NEWS of the death of Harold Lockwood in New York last Saturday was received with much sorrow in the Los Angeles film colony. He had worked in many pictures in the film capital, and was known personally to a majority of the leading film people of the Southland. Fred Balshofer, who for many months was his manager and personal friend, and who is now directing the destinies of Julian Eltinge's new production, "Over the Rhine," was very much affected when he heard of Lockwood's death. Balshofer said he knew of no finer actor in the industry than Lockwood.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN has engaged as his assistant in directing his new comedy, Carter de Haven, well known in vaudeville circles, and who has also made some reputation for himself in pictures. Chaplin, after several weeks of painstaking study as to the proper theme for a new comedy, started work on the forthcoming release last Monday. Its setting, according to confidential information dispensed by Sid Chaplin, will be far removed from the inferno of the world war. It will be placed in a quiet village. Sid also intimates that the village may be wrecked before the production is finished, but that is a minor consideration.

Shipman-Curwood Company Is Formed

THE SHIPMAN-CURWOOD PRODUCING COMPANY, with Nell Shipman as the star, and James Oliver Curwood as the author of her stories, has been formed in Los Angeles, the contract between star and writer becoming effective Sunday, October 27. Mr. Curwood authorized the announcement that he believes Miss Shipman can interpret outdoor parts better than any star he has seen on the screen. He will write original stories, it is announced, in which he plans to create for Miss Shipman characters of tremendous scope and power. Under the new arrangement Mr. Curwood's screen releases, which now average ten releases per year, will be reduced to four or five. The announcement of the Shipman-Curwood affiliation was made this week by Ernest Shipman, president of Shipman Sales, Inc.

He's Certainly a Useful Actor!

ROBERT McKIM, the city slicker in Thomas H. Ince's photoplay, "Greased Lightning," was called upon in one scene to sell an actor banker some stock in an adding machine company. McKim had been making four minute bond speeches at theatres evenings, and the script providing no argument, he proceeded to make his Liberty Loan talk with the result he actually sold the actor a bond.

What Exchanges and Theatres Are Doing

A FISHING party, organized by David Bershon, Los Angeles branch manager of the Universal Exchange, went on a cruise just outside San Pedro last week and a mighty catch was reported. Other members of the party were Chris Glimm, manager of the Garrick theatre; Harvey Gausman, salesman for Goldwyn; Arthur B. Lamb, Metro branch manager; Roy Turney, Metro salesman, and Louis Bard, owner of the College theatre. Mr. Bershon said that aside from two cases of seasickness, the catch consisted of one bonita, one barracuda, a skipjack and several hundred deep sea trout.

ALL Los Angeles exchangemen will hold a second meeting the latter part of this week, according to announcement by Harry Lustig, Pacific Coast representative of Metro, and temporary chairman of the Exchangemen Board of Trade in process of reorganization. The meeting will be called this week, he said, in order to perfect the organization and elect permanent officers.

LOUIS HYMAN, branch manager of the All-Star Features Exchange, left last week for an indefinite stay in San Francisco. He will return to Los Angeles when the theatres are re-opened.

MEMBERS of the All-Star Features force who received an attack of influenza last week were E. R. Williams, salesman; E. R. Van Pelt, advance manager of "Hearts of the World," and Miss Hilda Ambruster, booker.

L. FRANCK, owner of the Oasis theatre at Oja, Ariz., was a caller at the Mutual Exchange last Saturday. He announced that his house was the last theatre in Arizona to close. It is located in a mining town. There were no influenza cases in the town, and he was allowed to remain open until the state health authorities requested him to close up shop.

J. L. MERRICK, Pacific Coast supervisor of Mutual exchanges, is this week recovering from a severe attack of Spanish influenza.

H. A. ASHLEY, an exhibitor of Astoria, Ore., was a visitor in Los Angeles this week. He took advantage of an opportunity to spend his vacation in the Southland.

CARL RAY, manager of the Miller theatre on Main street, announced this week that he will re-open that house with the Fox production, "On the Jump," starring George Walsh. He expects to "get the jump" on rival exhibitors by showing this picture, and as a result, he is planning for his box office receipts to "take an extra jump." All this he told confidentially to M. A. Walsh, branch manager of the Fox Exchange.

CARL RAY, manager of the Miller theatre, returned this week from a ten days' vacation at Kernville, where he says he killed one deer and caught several hundred mountain trout.

W. G. MEAGHER, auditor of the Greater Theatres Company of Seattle, spent his vacation this fall in Los Angeles, arriving in the Southern California city last week. He called upon E. D. Tate of the Pathe Exchange, who is an old acquaintance.

M. A. WALSH, branch manager of the Fox Exchange, this week announced a new plan of film inspection. Beginning next week every print returned from the exhibitor will be inspected upon its return, instead of the former plan of inspecting it when it was being prepared for shipment. In this way, Mr. Walsh says, the exchange will be enabled to determine what exhibitors have damaged the film, and such exhibitor will be called upon to pay for the damage thus discovered. "I believe that through this system we shall be protected better than ever before," Mr. Walsh said.

THE Fox Exchange is taking advantage of the few weeks of inactivity owing to the closing of the theatres in this territory, to inspect every film in the exchange, and to take an inventory of all advertising matter and posters in stock.

JOHAN JOHNSON, an exhibitor of Yuma, Ariz., was a visitor in Los Angeles last week.

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, left Los Angeles Saturday morning for New York. After spending nearly three weeks on the Pacific Coast, he returned to New York with an optimistic farewell. He said that the public will grow hungry for pictures during the present influenza epidemic, and when the houses throughout the country are once more thrown open, they will play to bigger business than ever before.

THE Norma Talmadge company this week went to Idlewild to film some exteriors in her first Pacific Coast production on her present trip to Los Angeles.

ARTHUR RINGER, shipping clerk of Triangle Exchange, and Frances Longo, secretary to Branch Manager Marley, were ill this week with influenza. Both were reported out of danger on last Saturday.

"THE ONLY WOMAN," by Thomas Dixon, with Clara Williams as the star, was given a preview in Los Angeles this week by Select Pictures. Fifty or more exhibitors were in attendance. They were unanimous in the expression that the picture is one of the biggest and most dramatic productions of the season. Select is anticipating solid booking on this subject.

CLAUDE HALSELL, owner of the American and Victor theatres, appeared on film row on the closing day of the Fourth Liberty Loan campaign and announced that if some exchange manager, or company of managers, would rustle $1,000 in subscriptions he would double his own $2,000 contribution to the loan. B. E. Loper of Select, and David Bershon of Universal, accepted the challenge. Thirty minutes later Mr. Halsell's check for $2,000, and subscriptions for an additional $1,000 from exchangemen and their employees, were turned over to the Liberty Loan campaign committee.

LOUIS W. THOMPSON, special representative of the Los Angeles office of the Kleine System, adopted a novel plan of securing contracts this week. When he arrived at Lompoc he learned that Manager Calvert of the Lompoc theatre, had gone fishing at Surf, a seaport village nearby. Rushing over to Surf he commandeered a small boat, went out on the bay where Calvert was fishing, secured papers for a new account and returned to Lompoc in time to catch his train for Los Angeles.

MR. AND MRS. JACK McDONALD, owners of the McDonald theatre at La Jolla, were visitors in Los Angeles this week. They signed contracts for Vitagraph's "Fight for Millions," and renewed contracts for the Select program.

WILLIAM MARTIN, well known exhibitor at San Jacinto and Hemet, two towns made famous by the recent earthquake, was in Los Angeles this week en route to Catalina Island, where he will spend his vacation until allowed to re-open his houses at San Jacinto and Hemet.

WHEN Frank Duffy, special representative of Pathe, told B. E. Loper, branch manager of Select Pictures that he would make an additional subscription of $500 to the Fourth Liberty Loan if twenty-five men on film row would also make additional subscriptions, Mr. Loper went on the war path and in one hour last Saturday secured nearly $6,000 in additional subscriptions on film row. Incidentally he located twenty-five men who were willing to subscribe again. At the end of the hour he called upon Mr. Duffy and received his check for $500.

Complete San Francisco News Condensed

ON October 18 the State Board of Health ordered all the motion picture houses in California to close as a precautionary measure against the spread of Spanish influenza. The result has been that nearly every town at once closed its theatres. However, a few have continued to run and are calling on the San Francisco exchanges to continue sending films. Those which have not yet closed are Grass Valley, Bay Point, Porterville, Lemore, Williams, Madera, Jackson and Nevada City. A peculiar situation has arisen in the case of the state prison at Folsom. The prison is still showing pictures to its inmates and these convicts shut off from all contact from the outside world are getting the full Pathe news, while free Californians are not now allowed to have their news events visualized.

THE theatres of San Francisco, with their army of stage hands, musicians, ushers, "front-of-the-house-men," and their players have accepted the situation with a philosophical smile, and the managements generally agree with Eugene Roth, manager of the California theatre, in this expression: "Since the unsettled state of the public mind had reduced audiences to a minimum, I believe that it is better that the theatres be closed, permitting the authorities to come to quarters with the influenza and clean it out; and since the closing of the theatres seems to be a necessary part of this work, I am glad it has been done. We will the sooner return to the normality of existence again."

ALL the theatres operating "combination" attractions assert that they will resume their offerings as soon as the health authorities permit. The general impression among theatrical folk is that two weeks will be required to fight the influenza to a finish. In this prediction the managers of the various film exchanges are inclined to agree.

L. REICHERT, manager of the Metro Pictures Corporation, expresses the hope that the theatres will be allowed to reopen on Sunday, November 3. He believes that the progress of the influenza will be sufficiently checked by that time to allow the theatres to resume business. San Francisco has always been a liberal town, he says, and also a strong union town. By this closing the members of several unions of considerable influence are out of jobs, and this will have its influence on bringing about an early reopening.

M. E. CORY, assistant manager of the Universal Film Exchange, Inc., says of the situation: "Everybody is hoping now that the disease is at its peak, and that it will decrease so rapidly that the theatres may re-open on November 3. Encouraging news comes from Fresno and other southern points. The affliction broke out first in the southern part of the state and it now shows abatement there. At Camp Fremont, only a comparatively short distance south of here the commandant reports that the trouble is about over. The Universal Exchange is maintaining its entire organization in order to render prompt service when the theatres are ready to resume. It is getting its books and records in first-class condition, sorting its advertising matter, repairing its lobby frames, and every reel of film (there are thousands in the exchange) is being given a thorough inspection. They are then being repaired and put through our new cleaning machine so that we will be able to give the best possible service. The theatres are utilizing the period in giving their houses an overhauling and thorough cleaning, and many of the country exhibitors are seizing upon the opportunity to take a vacation or are coming up to the city and lining up for future pictures or rearranging their service."

NEWTON E. LEVI, branch manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, says: "I believe that after this scare is over the theatres will have an era of prosperity such as they never had before. The people never before realized how important motion pictures were to their happiness nor how much they entered into the daily routine of their lives. Now as they wander by the closed motion picture house they pause to read the posters with an interest not displayed since the earliest days of this form of amusement. Some of the theatres are taking advantage of this hunger on the part of their former patrons and are changing their posters every day or two. The people are beginning to look for these changes and to read every word of the displays. I am advising all places to keep their lobbies bright with new paper."

H. F. MOORE, assistant manager of the George Kleine System, says that he and Major M. J. Cohen, the manager of the exchange, are holding down the business together. Every one else connected with the firm has been laid off temporarily. They are busy "cleaning house," catching up on back work, and cleaning up posters and films. Mr. Moore says that since the shut-down his exchange has received a number of inquiries for new bookings. The situation looks particularly bright to him after the theatres resume. In fact, he looks for business to "go ahead with a spurt once the theatres re-open."

upon the let-up in business to clean up, not only the films, but also the accumulation of more or less "junk."

C. POST MASON, who came to the All-Star from Denver a couple of weeks ago to act as publicity man, especially in exploiting the important pictures handled by Sol Lesser, found very little need of his activities at present and he has secured a position with the Union Iron Works of this city. It is said he is timekeeper for that corporation, but he expects to return to the motion picture game as soon as it again becomes normal.

FLOYD ST. JOHN, manager of the World Film Corporation, says that he is tempted to close up the exchange until the present frame of the public mind is changed. He expresses the opinion in very vigorous language that the worst part of the scare has been brought about by auto-suggestion and that the newspapers have been in the main responsible for the number of cases of influenza and the serious results therefrom. The papers are literally scaring people to death, he says. Unless a decided change of method is employed he thinks it may be as much as four weeks before the theatres will be allowed to re-open. However, he thinks that strong pressure will be brought to bear to re-open in about two weeks, but he has little expectation that it will be successful in overcoming the scare under which the people are now suffering.

HARRY LEE KNAPP, manager of Select Pictures Corporation says: "I believe that about two weeks of energetic measures will combat the influenza and that the theatres will be able to re-open. Our organization is being kept intact, including the road service, ready to resume at a moment's notice. In the meantime we are taking it easy. The theatres are facing the situation with equanimity and some of them are recognizing that it is a blessing in disguise. The theatres are cleaning house and some of the small ones are going to be in a more sanitary condition than ever before in their history. One thing the managers feel is that their patrons are going to find out how much the motion picture means in their life. Out of this present situation a new condition may arise, which may make for longer runs in the smaller theatres. If this occurs the fans will not become satuated by going to the theatres too often and their interest may be kept at a keener edge. It seems to me there is an opportunity for exhibitors to experiment on some pictures which should have longer runs in their houses. If they can develop their business along this line they will reduce their expense, and increase their profits through the advertising value of those who have enjoyed the show."

THE PATHE EXCHANGE, INC., has retained its entire force at full pay, and while there is little to do, Manager E. O. Child feels that he cannot afford to lose any of his organization for the lively times that are bound to follow the present shutdown.

R. W. LYNCH, vice-president of the Triangle, died of pneumonia in this city following an attack of influenza, on October 21. Mrs. Lynch was with her husband during the past week, and his brother, S. A. Lynch, received hourly reports in New York from the bedside by telegraph. During the last few days of his illness S. A. Lynch talked with the sick man's physician twice daily over the long distance telephone. While the death of W. W. Lynch was not unexpected during the past few days, his great vitality made such a gallant fight that hope was not entirely abandoned until just before the end.

THE VITAGRAPH EXCHANGE this week forwarded a five-reel feature and a one or two-reel comedy to nearly every exhibitor in Arizona served by the Vitagraph as a precautionary measure for the exhibitor, in the event the closing ban is suddenly lifted. The plan was conceived by Branch Manager W. H. Hepburn, and already a number of letters have been received by him from the exhibitors thanking him for his foresight. "I felt that if the ban was lifted suddenly this plan would allow the exhibitor to open his house thirty-six to forty-eight hours earlier than he otherwise would if he was compelled to wire the exchange for a show. The plan will likewise allow him to get his house open sooner, perhaps, than a competitor, thus making him a friend of Vitagraph and the Vitagraph idea of protective co-operation.

What Butte Is Doing

EVERY theatre in Montana is now closed upon orders of local boards of health, due to the prevalence of Spanish influenza. About 2,000 cases are reported in Butte. In Stanford, Livingston and a few other cities it is reported that the crest has been passed and the disease is on the wane. It is hoped that re-opening will come before long. In order to better combat the disease in Butte orders are being considered this week to close every possible place of business in addition to the theatres and churches, such as dry goods stores, saloons, pool halls, shoe stores, etc.

NEAT little signs in front of Butte theatres tell the public of the temporary close-down. At the American one reads the following: "Closed temporarily on account of the flu. We are renovating our theatre and when we re-open you will find the American all dolled up. We are saving up the best features possible."

THE closing of the theatres has apparently affected the general business life of Butte and the situation shows what an important part the picture theatre plays in America today. There being no shows in operation there are fewer people on the streets. The restaurants are doing less business and so are the confectionery houses and ice cream parlors. In fact, it looks like a different Butte today.

W. M. HAIGHT, manager of the Orpheum at Livingston, is in the city this week on business.

GEORGE CALLADAY of the Vitagraph, is back in Butte after a trip to Bozeman and other cities in Southern Montana. He reports very good business in the way of new bookings, although of course, there is "nothing doing" just at present. He has been booking "The Iron Test" with great success, exhibitors being eager to get this new serial.

OVER in Great Falls there is a man who looks and acts the part of Bill Hart. He is Cherry Brown, and is not in the profession. When attired in cowboy regalia, with a revolver strapped to his person, he bears a striking resemblance to the star. In fact, during the recent Liberty Loan drive at a big theatre meeting Brown was said to have been introduced to the audience of film fans as the original Bill. He was given a great ovation and every one thought that the Western man who bowed to them from the stage was the genuine star. The next day they read about the "camouflage" in the press. When Brown was introduced the chairman stated that Bill Hart would next appear on the stage, but that he would not make a speech, that being the condition upon which he promised to appear.

HARRY SELIG, a towering personality in the moving picture world, was in Lewistown last week on a short business call. After spending a day there he left for New York. He will stop off at Chicago to attend to the closing of the Selig studios there and a few months later he will take charge of the Greater Selig Company, which will operate from Los Angeles. His brother, Col. Selig, is the principal spirit back of the Selig Polyscope Company. Another distinction which Harry Selig has is that he is the father of Baby Marie Osborne. She is not, however, a Selig star.

Realism Comes High—But We Must Have It

MARY MacLAREN spent three days on the private exchange switchboard at Universal City recently in order to learn the correct maneuvers of the plugs and wires. She did so in order to make realistic her part of a metropolitan telephone girl in "Dearie," her newest Universal special attraction now being produced under Rupert Julian's direction. Margaret Bassett and Jessie Mitchell, the two Universal operators, acted as tutors in telephony for the star.

San Francisco reports:

"ONE MORE WEEK!"

"America's Answer," the Government's own war film, was booked for a week at the Rialto Theatre in San Francisco.

It drew such big crowds that the Rialto management "decided to continue the engagement one more week"—so as to let everybody see it.

"America's Answer" is making attendance records wherever it is being shown.

Make arrangements to secure this thrilling war feature, now, if you have not done so already. It is one of the war films produced by the U. S. Government for the people of this country and our Allies.

War features so far produced under the Government's auspices are:

Government's Own Great War Pictures Holds Public Enthralled

BECAUSE of the large demand for seats at the Rialto this week, it has been decided to continue the engagement of "America's Answer" for one more week. The engagement positively will end Saturday night, October 5.

Few pictures have drawn the praise that has been heaped up on this, the Government's own official feature No production has ever brought the fund of information about "our boys" that has come with this picture from battle-scarred France.

It carries thrills in very episode and a story in every scene. "America's Answer" is a comprehensive survey both of what Uncle Sam has done with "your money," and the adventures that have befallen "that boy" since he set foot on the soil of France.

The picture tells more of the great magnitude of Uncle Sam's efforts—the greatest undertaking of all time—than could be carried in reams of printed columns. It is drama in which the actors are the stalwart sons of America and the theme is the story of their daily life.

WHAT THE BIG CRITICS SAY:

MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

Exchange men and exhibitors better be sure to look this over, for a more promising state rights feature has not been put on the market in some time. The settings and photographic work will come as a revelation.

MOTION PICTURE WORLD:
The story is strongly dramatic. Mary Boland plays with convincing skill.

BILLBOARD:
Elaborate production—intense interest of story.

VARIETY:
The action is fast.

NEW YORK REVIEW:
It is so strong—so logical in its theme.

DRAMATIC MIRROR:
Offers exceptional possibilities to the exhibitor.

EXHIBITORS' TRADE REVIEW:
Gripping as anything presented in some time.

TELEGRAPH:
Production superb.

EXHIBITORS' HERALD:
Offers an exceptionally strong state right's feature.

Booked It Immediately After Seeing

Immediately after seeing your latest serial, "The Iron Test," in your projection room, I booked it, and have good reason to believe that the business on it will be even greater than the record-breaking business of "The Fighting Trail," "Vengeance and the Woman," "The Woman in the Web," and "A Fight For Millions."

You may also book me up for "A Man of Might," the new Duncan serial that I understand is to follow "The Iron Test."

"The Best One So Far!"

I have found that all Vitagraph serials, commencing with "The Fighting Trail," have meant crowded houses, but your newest one, "The Iron Test," was a most pleasant surprise to me. I found it the best one so far, with an attractive and different sort of story and strong episode endings, of the sort that will bring back serial fans.

I have booked it for my three theatres.

Really the most interesting movies of our month weren't dramatic at all—but Martin Johnson's fascinating tour of the Cannibal isles of the South Pacific. Aside from being an intelligently photographed study of the various races of the remote Pacific isles, where meatless days aren't observed, the pictures have the lure of a Joseph Conrad tale. Here romance and adventure stood beside the camera-man. Johnson and his wife cruised alone among the islands, once almost meeting their death and finally getting away with a remarkable series of films. Mrs. Johnson, by the way, can go 'round to the movie studios any day and get a regular position. She is the dramatic suspense of the series, which we guarantee to have ten times the grip of an average photoplay.

MANAGING DIRECTOR

Mr. Martin Johnson,
345 W. 40th St.,
New York City.

My dear Mr. Johnson:

It has just come to my attention that you are about to release your Cannibal Island pictures of the South Sea as a whole feature instead of serially.

I want to assure you that I think this is a very wise move, first because it is really a feature in itself and will be welcomed by any intelligent exhibitor as a break in the terrible rut and routine of the so-called dramatic or comedy feature and besides will be a good tonic for any first class theatre, and if properly exhibited will bring a big financial return and furthermore will do a great deal for the exhibitors institution. The possibilities that lend itself for both publicity and general interest have not been surpassed by any offering in the past year.

Wishing you every good luck, I am

Very sincerely yours,

Managing Director.

TEN PARTS

An impressive presentation of the life story of England's great statesman.

Written by SIR SIDNEY LOW

Produced under the sole direction of MAURICE ELVEY

THE IDEAL FILM
76-78 WARDOUR ST.

Cable Address: IDEFILM, TELEW, LONDON

¶ More than an authentic life of England's greatest statesman—a year was spent in preparation of the picture—a highly dramatic story as well and one which will interest every live American.

¶ Each chapter is clear cut and complete in itself and replete with tense moments and the interest never lags.

¶ The publicity and exploitation possibilities for the American market are unlimited and in the proper hands valuable government endorsements could easily be obtained.

Pictures That Appeal To Everyone

Every person has his or her own individual taste when it comes to drama. The feature that charms many will fail to interest others, and the same is true of comedy. But there is one series of one-reel pictures that everyone likes —— containing weekly the latest, most interesting pictures taken by the official cameramen of the French, British, Italian and American Governments.

Official War Review

What person in this country today but what has relatives or friends in France or in Italy, fighting for Freedom? Can you conceive of anything that has a greater appeal to the people of the United States than these pictures—right now? Millions of persons look forward to each weekly Official War Review for a chance glimpse of their loved ones!

Maurice Tourneur Triumphantly Achieves Another Success

FROM THE NEW YORK MAIL

One of the faults of the prevailing system of exhibiting photo-plays is the restriction it places on the length of their "runs." Good, mediocre and bad pictures all come under the inelastic rule that limits their display from a minimum of one day to a maximum of one week, according to the custom of the theatres in which they are exhibited. It is when such a photo-play as Maurice Tourneur's "Woman" comes along that one realizes the injustice this rule sometimes visits upon the producer.

"Woman," for instance, which Director Rothapfel is presenting at the Rivoli Theatre this week, cannot possibly exhaust, during an engagement of one week's duration, the patronage that is due it. It ought to be housed in a theatre where it could be shown continuously until every devotee of the screen drama has had the opportunity to see it. Perhaps the resourceful Mr. Rothapfel can devise a way for this to be done.

"Woman" adds another artistic accomplishment to its producer's credit.

FROM THE NEW YORK EVENING JOURNAL

At the Rivoli Maurice Tourneur's superproduction, "Woman," holds first place. In the novelty of its subject, the composition of its scenes and the exquisite artistry with which the plot is unfolded the picture promises to create much laudatory comment.

FROM EXHIBITOR'S TRADE REVIEW

Hats off to Maurice Tourneur! Once again he has made a picture that, for downright artistic value, has never been equalled. The picture ranks among the very finest that have ever been made. "Woman" should be a box office attraction of the highest class.

FROM THE MOTION PICTURE WORLD

"WOMAN"

Notable Production by Tourneur From Whittaker's Tribbute to Modern Womanhood

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison

Remarkable contribution to the aesthetic movement in motion picture production, "Woman," is so entrancing to the eye and so beguiling to the thoughts and sentiments of the spectator that it lures him into a state of dreamy forgetfulness of himself and the little world in which he has been living. It can thus do without dramatic suspense, but that value is present, along with logical development, power of construction and, above all things, an atmosphere so convincing that events seem to take place instead of being presented in illustration of the final purpose.

It thus becomes one of the finest products of the year.

FROM THE MORNING TELEGRAPH

NOVELTY KEYNOTE OF "WOMAN" FILM

By FRANCES AGNEW

Novelty is the keynote of Maurice Tourneur's newest photo-play, "Woman," which is attracting the attention and inviting the argumentative comment of patrons of the Rivoli Theatre this week.

The film is unlike any other production which has ever been unfolded on the silver sheet. Its title will convey to every one a fair idea of its theme, but it could not even suggest the unique development accorded the subject by Charles Whittaker's scenario and Maurice Tourneur's direction.

In filming "Woman" the author and producer have disregarded the usual scenario form and, except for the revelations made in introductory subtitles concerning the source of their idea, have presented their theme by implication and suggestion rather than by a connected story.

FROM THE NEW YORK GLOBE

"Woman," which is featured at the Rivoli this week, might better have been titled "Woman, Etc," for the action involves almost everything from the Garden of Eden down to the present war.

It is a Tourneur picture, which means that the scenes have an imaginative quality that is created by no other director. All of the episodes are steeped in poetry, and the haunting little story of Cyrene and the fisherman is perhaps the loveliest thing of its kind ever done on the screen.

FROM THE EVENING SUN

Maurice Tourneur's latest film production, entitled "Woman," is the featured photo-play at the Rivoli Theatre this week. It deals with woman's effect on history, and the idea is conveyed in a series of episodes in which Adam and Eve, Claudius and Messalina, Abelard and Heloise, a Civil War heroine, and the women war workers of the present day are the characters. The picture abounds in beautiful scenes and good acting by a large company.

FROM VARIETY

It's the kind of a super-picture people will talk about after they leave the theatre—and comment on most favorably. The production is not only massive, but artistic.

Maurice Tourneur's Film Play Eloquent of Emancipation for Those Serving in War

The ability of Maurice Tourneur to create pictures, not just single scenes without meaning or connection, but eloquent, beautiful pictures in motion that make a poetic story come true for the time being, has never revealed itself more fully than in "Woman," the principal offering at the Rivoli this week. The magical Mr. Tourneur has taken a series of episodes from history and tradition and brought them to life on a screen.

Volme 18. No. 20 November 16, 1918

We Dare You To—

WE dare you—one and all—manufacturer, distributor and exhibitor to take ten minutes off right now and read every word of the article on page 2925 of this issue by J. A. Quinn, of Quinn's Rialto, Los Angeles.

And then we dare you to—

Take five minutes more off and write or dictate a brief letter to us regarding J. A. Quinn's views.

Come on—it's a dare.

Let's start something!

We warn you right here that the article is a loud explosion from a real live bunch of dynamite. It is well worth reading.

And if you want "to start something"; if you want to dissipate the ennui of a five weeks' shut down; if you want to get things roaring and humming again—

It is well worth the five minutes to write that letter.

Come on—we'll publish them all.

Let's start something!

An "All-Star" Number

SPEAKING of J. A. Quinn's article reminds us that we have something of an all-star bill for MOTION PICTURE NEWS readers this week.

In addition to the Los Angeles showman there are signed and exclusive articles by Eugene Roth, of the California and Portola Theatres, San Francisco; George L. Carpenter, of the Paramount-Empress, Salt Lake City; Frank L. Newman, of the Regent and Royal Theatres, Kansas City; and Harold Franklin, of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo.

But then, this issue is no exception to the fifty-one others in a year. Last week, for example, there were S. Barret McCormick, of the Circle, Indianapolis; Sam W. B. Cohen, of the Liberty, Spokane; H. C. Horater, of the Alhambra, Toledo.

If the roster of big exhibitors who swear by MOTION PICTURE NEWS and cooperate with it were to write to Mr. Goldfish or Mr. Zukor or Mr. Fox declaring that their pictures were the greatest on the market there would be oodles of advertising and forty-eleven handsprings over the fact.

And these showmen say more of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Which is why the executives are learning to say, "Use the NEWS alone for the big advertising splash."

The Cheerful Days Are Here

REPORTS from our correspondents given on pages 2926 and 2927 would indicate that the industry may once more breathe freely. Unless all signs fail Monday, November 11th, should find a little short of seventy-five per cent of the theatres open for business once more.

One of the peculiar incidents of the situation is the city of St. Paul, where the theatres were kept open during all the white heat of the epidemic, only to be closed now when the air is clearing elsewhere.

Another interesting phase of the reports during the past few weeks has been the fact that the closing of the theatres has caused a loss to merchants in the various cities that must reach into the millions.

There's a tip to live exhibitors in this result. Give it some real hard thought. Now that merchants realize that open theatres mean business for all see if you can't work out some plans for future cooperation.

Another tip to exhibitors will be found in the experience of Thomas D. Soriero in Boston and Lowell.

Exhibitor Soriero knew that his patrons would be "influenza shy" when the ban was lifted. So he just took prominent medical authorities through his theatres from cellar to roof, got their endorsement of his ventilation and sanitary safeguards, and advertised their statements—

To the tune of packed houses.

The News of the Week

JUST when the wise boys were counting Hearst out, and wondering where he would get a news pictorial release, C. F. Zittel places his name on the dotted line of a contract that gives Hearst the popular Universal Animated Weekly and Current events.

Thus making the first of two real news event of a comparatively dull week and beating the Kaiser's surrender by two days.

There isn't much else in the way of news.

The United War Drive is in full swing, New York's exhibitors have sent a tax protest to the Senate Finance Committee, W. W. Hodkinson has written an open letter, Herbert Lubin and A. H. Sawyer have thrown their hat in the ring with S-L Pictures, the Film Clearing House is alive and kicking.

Perhaps there is also news that General Film didn't take over any distribution system this week. But, at the last minute comes the news that Affiliated has taken over Mutual.

Our Service Department

A CONTEMPORARY wants to know why the ban on new releases has been extended for another week.

He gets very heated over the fact—one might be led to think that he thought the advertising ban had been extended.

But a sincere desire for knowledge should not go unanswered. So we say:

The ban was extended another week because it was plain good business to do so.

The manufacturers have stood a terrible loss for several weeks; some are not in very good shape to stand it. The only prospect for relief is in continuing with decreased overhead while older pictures bring in some money.

And if the committee had listened to some of the producers the ban would have been extended, not one more week, but four more weeks!

Our Old Friend "Anonymous"

DO you remember that anonymous letter we published a few weeks ago from a film salesman who protested against the laying off of exchange employees during this crisis?

We have received an anonymous letter of thanks for publishing the letter, and also another anonymous communication, saying:

"Read the letter of 'Anonymous' and agree with him. But please say a good word for Goldwyn. They kept us all on the payroll here and working as hard as we could. And believe me, we'll work harder than ever now."

About "The Complete Plan Book"

WHY don't you talk more about your "Complete Plan Book" idea, boost it, ballyhoo it?" said an advertising manager to us the other day. "It's the best thing I've seen yet, and you must have two score of letters from exhibitors there."

He was sitting in our office and had just glanced over a few letters of praise that happened to be on the desk.

Then we told him:

We are trying an experiment in salesmanship. For a year we let you see in our columns some of the letters we received from exhibitors, big and little, about our Exhibitor Service Bureau; we printed scores of the testimonials that came after we started the Harrison Exhibitor-to-Exhibitor Reviews; we published many of the communications that praised our enterprise in starting the Box Office Reports; we let you read what exhibitors in the Central States and on the West Coast thought of our sub-editions—trade papers in themselves—for those sections.

Of course these words "from the firing line" had their effect—or else MOTION PICTURE NEWS would not be publishing several hundred pages more of advertising in the year than its nearest competitor.

But still many of the companies keep on handing out their copy as though it were charity, with little thought to the relative value of the mediums.

So we have tried an experiment in salesmanship.

We knew you all had four weeks off to read—so we have let The Complete Plan Book sell itself, along with the rest of the NEWS.

And though we are not supposed to say anything for a few weeks, we can almost tell you now that it has succeeded.

Dealing in Personalities

"Call me Dick"

"We'd vote for him"

"From Politics to Filllums"

Robert Hustler Cochrane

IT happened at one of the Monday meetings of the Producers' and Distributors' Committee.

All our most important presidents, general managers and treasurers were comparing notes on the rental collections received that morning from the various exchanges.

Off in one corner sat Richard A. Rowland, president of Screen Classics and Metro. A worried look was in his eye—a frown on his face.

"Why so solemn, Dick?" asked one of the others.

"Oh, nothing. Only the Bufadelphia exchange sent in $700 this morning and I'm wondering whether it was for rental collections or whether they sold out the whole blame exchange, lock, stock and barrel."

WE hasten to print this picture. For a cancelation is threatened. Here it is:

"Dear Editors: Please to cancel my subscription and do it damn quick. I all times thought you were friend of picture industrious and now I read in Houston paper where 'Al' Smith is running for Governor, New York, and I ain't never seen it in NEWS. I think if Albert Smith run for Governor you and all film industrious should support him and do it big and stronger. Both because he is a picture man from start of game and because his Vitagraph pictures always make money for me. Yours truly.—Grand Hippodrome theatre, Delhop, Texas.

"P. s.—Please be sure to continue cancelling my subscription every week."

A STROLL along Broadway rewarded us. We met James E. McBride, former New York Civil Service Commissioner and now assistant to General Manager Sheehan of Fox.

"Why the hurry," we asked. "We thought all you film men were doing the loafing act these days—with the business shut down for five weeks!

"Loafing nothing!" snorted Mr. McBride. "Not while there is a charity drive and William Fox is alive and kicking. We're working like beavers on this United War Work drive—and just watch the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Committee go over the top.

"So long! Got to meet Theodore Mitchell at four o'clock. He's handling the publicity. Just watch us."

But all we could watch was his smoke.

R. H. COCHRANE gave us a solid hour of his time last week just to talk the weather and general film conditions.

And, as we left the Universal office, he was kind enough to say, "Call again!"

Earlier in the day we had dropped in for a talk with Fred Warren of Goldwyn, and had the good luck to meet Gabriel Hess, the likeable treasurer of that organization.

"Say," interrupted R. H., "there is one regular fellow. I like that man Hess, immensely."

From one film executive to another!!!

Quinn Comments On Kleine Stand

[Editor's Note—J. A. Quinn, of Quinn's Rialto, read the following article at a recent meeting of the Southern California Theatre Owners' Association. The large attendance present endorsed evry word, and at a later meeting, Monday, November 4, adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas, the exhibitors of this Association have in the past felt the burden of overproduction and excessive waste in the motion picture industry, and

"Whereas, J. A. Quinn, a recognized authority on production and exploitation with a wide and varied experience as a successful exhibitor has propounded to us a movement for the regulation of production and elimination of waste, and

"Whereas, said movement has been found to possess merit worthy of the support of all exhibitors throughout the country,

"Therefore, be it resolved that this Association extend to him its enthusiastic endorsement and full support of his plan for the betterment of conditions now existing."]

Editor Motion Picture News:

I READ with great interest in your issue of October 19 the letter of George Kleine, suggesting certain radical changes in the Film industry and also the reply by Mr. Johnson, which, to say the least, was very apropos and I am quite sure that everyone in the industry that really knows and appreciates conditions will agree with Mr. Johnston's criticisms.

For my part I am at a loss to figure out how a man who has been in the business as long as Mr. Kleine, could make suggestions that are not only impractical but, to a great extent, absurd.

The business was never more—and I do not believe as much—in need of good pictures as it is now. As picture critics, the patrons have become very keen and discerning and are getting more and more so every day and while they will liberally patronize a good picture they refuse to stand for the tiresome and unreasonable pictures that are unfortunately appearing, many, many times too often in the business these days.

When it comes to prescribing a remedy for the bad conditions that exist, I believe that I am in a better position to "hit the nail on the head" than most men in the business, for the reason that I have had a more general experience.

I left the management of one of New York's largest mercantile concerns about fifteen years ago with my mind made up to enter the theatrical field; and remembering my dad's advice that "when a man went into a business, he should start at the botton rung of the ladder," I decided to follow it; and with the aid of a fair voice I landed a chorus man's job in a big musical stock company, soon got small parts to play, and later, by sticking close to my knitting and incidentally the director, I became assistant director and finally director and in a comparatively short space of time, by sheer sticktoitiveness and persistency and with the co-operation of some of the best directors in the country, I acquired the art of selecting casts and putting over first class dramatic and musical stock.

Noting the rapid development of the motion picture business, I decided to swing into the exhibition end of it and since doing so I have operated nearly fifty theatres throughout the West, and have played to all classes of people, broken all records for attendance, played all night shows to packed houses, put on advertising campaigns that are known the world over; and I believe the boys in the game give me credit for being a "live exhibitor" and a worker from the drop of the hat.

AT my own expense I launched and conducted the campaign here that wiped out censorship, and my hat is in the ring NOW to start a movement to eliminate the rottenness in the producing system. I have expressed my views to a large gathering of Southern California exhibitors and they are all with me, and before I get through I believe I will have every exhibitor in the country with me in my efforts to cause a thorough "House Cleaning."

During the several years that I have been an exhibitor I have kept close tab on my audiences' likes and dislikes, also, as my headquarters is in Los Angeles and close to the studios, I have kept in touch with the producing end of the game and have been a constant visitor at the studios and reviewed film after film while in the rough before it was sent East.

I have also become closely acquainted with the working conditions at the studios and have had many long talks about conditions with producers, directors and stars, from the highest to the lowest, and have also become familiar with the conditions in the selling end; and I believe I am today fully conversant with the facts as they really exist and also fully awake to the necessary remedy required in the business. I am sure that those that really know the business will agree with me when I state the following facts and suggest the following remedies:

NOW in the first place I agree, and I am sure that the public agrees with Mr. Johnson, which he disputes Mr. Kleine's statement that out of 1,300 features released in 1917 there were 1,000 good ones. I think that you could hit the right figure nearer by dividing that 1,000 by ten.

Just stop and think—how many program pictures have you heard especial mention of in the past few years?

We heard a lot about "The Cheat," a five-reeler featuring Fannie Ward, that was released about three years ago, and they are still talking about it. You heard special mention of Mary Pickford's "Tess of the Storm Country" and recently of her "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" and "Stella Maris." We heard a lot of favorable comment on "Revelation" with Nazimova.

These pictures not only caused favorable comment but were big box office winners and had more than enough return and extra bookings to offset the original cost of production.

Of course there are other pictures with these and other stars that have stood out and these mentioned are a few that just happened to come especially to the writer's mind at this moment.

Now in the pictures mentioned were, as we all know, artists of unquestioned ability who possess not only personality but the art of interpreting parts in an artistic manner, and it has not been their lack of ability to deliver the goods that has been at fault—it has been poor stories, bad direction, and other rank mismanagement that accounts for the fact that a comparatively small number of their pictures receive special praise.

A very striking example of how people are starving for good pictures was illustrated in the showing of "Hearts of the World"—this picture has been going over in a tremendous way with record runs with prices up to $2.00, and although it has been shown for about fourteen weeks at Clune's Auditorium in Los Angeles, a 3,000-seat house, to big crowds, it has not finished its drawing power in the city yet, especially at popular prices, so that the masses could see it. The business representative approached me a short time ago to negotiate for a second run on Broadway in my Rialto theatre, insisting, however, that I should raise my prices to scale from 25 cents to $1.50. This I declined to do.

NOW let us analyze "Hearts of the World" as a production—and ask ourselves if there is any reason the "poor public," who has been so patiently standing for the many mediocre pictures that have been inflicted on it, should be held up every time a good picture is made?

"Hearts of the World" is a pleasing, well timed, sweet love story, taking in the present war, with a tremendous publicity start on account of having some of the scenes taken in France—and a lot of trench scenes taken in Hollywood.

It was a well directed, well timed picture and D. W. Griffith is justly entitled to all the praise he is getting for it, but with all due credit to the cast, headed by Bobby Herron, whom I like very much, on and off the screen, and the public does also—just think of that picture without the characterization as portrayed by Dorothy Gish. This little lady will never be forgotten for her work in "Hearts of the World," and if you take her personality and characterization out of this picture there would be an irreparable gap.

Now I contend that we should get more pictures of an equal calibre to "Hearts of the World," not necessarily taken in France (?), and the masses, whom motion pictures depend upon

Theatres Emerge from Dark Period

Stop, Look and Listen Still the Watchword, But Exhibitors Look for Normal Business Within Short Time— Theatres Present New Appearance

WHILE caution is the standard by which the theatres of the country are gradually emerging from their Rip Van Winkle period occasioned by the influenza, reports from the four corners of the States this week indicate that exhibitors are looking for normal business within a short time. Health boards have issued many permits to theatres to reopen, from Maine to the West Coast and the South. St. Paul appears to be the only city running contrary to form, the theatres of that city being ordered to close the week of November 4 after remaining open while the rest of the country was closed. It is reported St. Paul was the last city to close.

Reports from other cities carry the unanimous message that the conditions are rapidly coming around to normal. Theatres which have been closed, for the most part, have been redecorated and fixed up anew during the inactive period.

Richmond and Vicinity in Ring Again

After it had been reported from Richmond, Va., that the theatres there would remain closed at least another week, after being closed since October 5, it was decided upon by the authorities to lift the Richmond ban November 5. On that date all theatres were permitted to reopen and the taboo mark was taken off public gatherings. Regular performances were being given, at last reports, to large and enthusiastic audiences, which would tend to show that the exhibitors of the United States can expect to come back much stronger than they "went away."

Ogden, Utah, on November 8 expected to get back in harness November 10, but up to press time no definite announcement had been made from that city in regard to the reopenings. It was reported that the influenza situation was greatly improved, and exhibitors felt sure they would not be required to keep their theatres closed longer.

San Francisco, Cal., although optimistic, did not expect the exhibitors to reopen their theatres before November 16, and possibly not until a week later than that.

The ban on theatres in Indianapolis was lifted November 1, and practically all the houses in the state were in operation by November 6. This places Indiana in the class to resume business first, and from all indications the exhibitors expect to make up for lost time.

Milwaukee Cautious as Theatres Reopen

Reports from Milwaukee carry the news that the influenza ban was lifted in that city November 4 with prospects of big business. All exhibitors, however, have been warned against overcrowding, as has also the public. Despite this precaution it was expected that the fans would turn out big.

Most of the Milwaukee theatres have been redecorated and many alterations made, with the result that the health commissioner is said to have announced that health and sanitary conditions in the theatres are excellent. Exhibitors are of the opinion that the enforced close was a good thing for the theatres, and that business will be greatly increased.

The health department of Harrisburg, Pa., gave its permission to reopen the motion picture theatres of that place November 9. Pittsburgh and surrounding territory also reopened the same day. No reports have been received as to how the public is receiving the pictures since the shutdown, but it is not thought likely that Pennsylvania will be different from the other states in boosting business considerably.

From Wisconsin it was reported that the lifting of the influenza ban was left entirely to municipalities. Many had reopened November 8, according to advices from Madison, and it was expected the whole state would be well under way by this week. Influenza conditions are greatly improved. Lacrosse motion picture theatres were among the first in the state to reopen, getting under way November 1.

But one report was received of a city closing, and that was St. Paul, which withstood the epidemic for several weeks while other cities were closed. There has been no indication as to when the theatres of St. Paul will be reopened.

TAX ON FILM

Exhibitor Is Not to Be Taxed on Positive Film

THE distributer and not the exhibitor must bear the excise tax of 10 per cent on film rentals.

On October 31 the Senate Finance Committee in Washington changed the basis of taxation on film as carried in the Revenue Bill when passed by the House.

The House had fixed the tax on the aggregate value of the film but the Senate Committee made it "10 per cent on moving picture films containing a picture ready for projection." The distributor is responsible and the tax is based and levied on the collections received.

Section Reports

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.—Theatres of Springfield reopened Friday, November 8.

CLEVELAND, O.—The epidemic here is receding. Commissioner Rothner offered hopes of opening all theatres November 5, but disfavored zone openings. Reports indicate that the local houses cannot survive prolonged closing.

SEATTLE, WASH.—The influenza situation in Seattle is reported as much better. It was expected the shows would reopen November 9 or 10. People are still wearing their gas masks.

BUTTE, MONT.—Indications are that the influenza situation is well under control. It was the opinion of the authorities that the ban placed on theatres and public assemblages would be lifted during the week of November 10.

SAN DIEGO, CAL.—Conditions here are improving daily. The City Council conferred November 6 with military medical officers, looking to an early lifting of the ban on amusements and motion picture theatres.

SPOKANE, WASH.—The Spokane situation on November 6 remained doubtful in so far as the theatres are concerned. It was predicted the houses would not be permitted to reopen within three or four weeks from that date. Every person in the state has been ordered to wear a mask. Schools are not figuring on reopening for another month.

MADISON, WIS.—The ban has been lifted in practically all sections of Wisconsin with the exception of a few. Madison was permitted to reopen November 7. People are hesitant in a measure to enter public places, but exhibitors are striving to offset this feeling by making improvements in the way of ventilation that will remove all fears.

DETROIT, MICH.—Detroit motion picture theatres reopened November 6 by special permission of Governor Sleeper. The balance of the state reopened November 8.

CINCINNATI, O.—The complex influenza situation was the cause of postponing the reopening of the Cincinnati theatres until November 10. Kentucky suburbs will reopen this week. Dayton houses were permitted to reopen November 3.

Optimistic Reports Received From All Sections

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.—The influenza crisis has passed, is the opinion here, and the state ban was expected to be lifted November 10. Local theatres were prepared to reopen November 8.

ELGIN, ILL.—Theatres opened here November, 5.

FOND DU LAC, WIS.—The ban on motion picture theatres was lifted at noon on November 4.

LANSING, MICH.—The ban on public meetings and theatres in Michigan was lifted the week of November 5.

Rochester Reopens After Four Weeks Off

After earnest pressure on the part of theatrical men of Rochester, N. Y., the health authorities of that city lifted the ban against theatrical entertainments, to take effect on Election Night, November 5. The theatres had been closed for four weeks, lacking one day, the closing order coming from Commissioner of Public Safety Hamilton as soon as the influenza epidemic showed its head in the city. The prompt action is believed to have been chiefly responsible for keeping the epidemic well within bounds, so that Rochester escaped much more lightly than most other cities. The total number of cases recorded up to Monday, November 4, was 1,886, and the total deaths were 604. With the disease showing unmistakable signs of abating, orders for the reopening of all schools, theatres, churches, saloons, and other public places were issued.

It is understood that action of the commissioner was hastened by a visit that a delegation of theatrical men paid him last week, in which the situation was presented to him strongly and the serious loss that the theatres were facing was emphasized. Martin E. Wolff, manager of the Lyceum theatre, headed the delegation, and explained that theatres of the city were facing a weekly financial loss of well above $40,000 and that great hardship was worked upon members of theatrical companies booked to play the city. It was pointed out further that other cities, including Syracuse and Philadelphia, which had suffered far more heavily than Rochester, were allowed to re-open a week sooner than Rochester and without fatal results.

Buffalo in Full Swing Once More

BUFFALO.—The influenza ban is off and all Buffalo theatres have reopened to tremendous business, proving the statement of one leading exhibitor that it was just as well to close the house during the epidemic. It is expected that the increased business will soon make up for the losses suffered during the closing period. Health Commissioner Franklin Gram opened the town two days earlier than was expected, with the result that exhibitors had to do some tall hustling to book pictures for Friday, the opening day. Most houses opened with the films which they had been showing on the Thursday that the ban was clamped down. The motion picture houses of course, got the jump on the legitimate houses, the larger of which did not open until Monday, November 4. The two burlesque houses, the Gayety and the Garden, opened on Friday, because their attractions had been laying over in town during the closing period. The Academy, which as a rule offers stock, musical comedy and pictures, opened with pictures only, showing for three days "Italy's Flaming Front," to capacity audiences. The Palace theatre opened with first run Paramount features and for the first time in several years advertised in the local amusement sections. Manager Ira M. Mosher also boosted his admission prices from 15 to 20 cents, including the war tax.

During the closing period local houses have been thoroughly renovated and redecorated and it seems just like the reopening of a new season. All is bright and glistening and Shea's vaudeville house when it opens Monday night will unveil a new interior, consisting of new hangings, new curtain, new decorations and new carpetings.

Pennsylvania Names Counties Now Open

HARRISBURG, PA., Nov. 4.—Announcement was made by State Health Commissioner Royer today of the dates on which the influenza ban will be lifted in nineteen additional counties of Pennsylvania. With the addition of these counties, orders lifting the restrictions have now been made in 53 of the 64 counties, 34 counties having previously been notified.

Today's announcement states that beginning on Thursday noon, November 7, the closing order will cease to be effective in Bradford, Potter, Warren, Wenango and Tioga counties. Beginning on Friday, November 8, at noon, the following counties will be freed from the quarantine: Beaver, Bedford, Butler, Cameron, Clearfield, Crawford, Erie, Huntingdon, Lawrence, Mercer, Mifflin, Somerset, Susquehanna and Wayne.

There are a few of these counties, however, in which the ban remains in certain sections, namely, Hyndman borough, Broadtop and Liberty townships, Bedford county; Osceola Mills, Clearfield county; Robertsdale and Three Springs, Huntingdon county; Forest City, Susquehanna county, and Blossburg and Arnot, Tioga county.

Tampa Reopens

The epidemic conditions in Tampa, Fla., show such great improvements that the mayor issued a statement that all restrictions would be removed on Monday, November 4, unless there should be a change for the worse.

Theatres have been closed tight since October 8, and stores have been allowed to operate only between the hours of 9 a. m. and 4 p. m.

St. Paul Takes the Count at Last Minute

ST. PAUL, MINN.—The last of the big cities of the Middle West and West to keep its theatres open despite influenza has succumbed to the cause and on Sunday, November 3, Mayor L. C. Hodgson, City Health Commissioner Simon met with representatives of the Citizens Committee and decided to check the spread of the malady within the city by drafting drastic measures. For three weeks St. Paul has kept up a spirit of hopefulness that closing theatres would not be necessary and Dr. Simon published notices warning people against influenza, telling them how to protect themselves and stating that the city was "open" only because he believed St. Paulites realized the seriousness of the situation and would help themselves. During the past week, however, influenza cases and deaths caused by the malady have greatly increased in number, hence Dr. Simon's suggestion that the closing order be considered by the Citizens' body was adopted.

Sunday's meeting brought out the decision to close theatres, saloons, soda fountains, dance halls, billiard halls, bowling alleys and various other places where people might mingle and contract the disease. Monday, November 4, the mayor, health commissioner and Citizens' committeemen were scheduled to meet again and decide when the closing order should go into effect. Theatremen voluntarily offered to close their doors immediately and it is expected that "the Lid" will go on Tuesday, November 5.

It was expected that Minneapolis theatres and other places of amusement might open Sunday, November 10, but it is possible that the placing the "lid" on St. Paul's show houses may give Minneapolis health officials reason for postponing the Minneapolis "lid lifting."

Fairbanks Gets Into War Work Campaign

It was announced last week that Douglas Fairbanks, the Artcraft star, has been appointed Special Publicity Representative for National Activities in the United War Work Campaign. With ceremonies befitting a star and publicity man, Fairbanks pledged himself to raise $25,000,000 of the $170,500,000 scheduled for the drive, which opened November 11th.

In his tour in behalf of this cause, Fairbanks will cover Washington, D. C.; Charlotte, N. C.; Spartanburg, S. C., Greenville, S. C.; Atlanta, Ga.; New Orleans, San Antonio, El Paso, Tucson and Los Angeles.

St. John Puts New Tax on Exchanges

Exchange managers of St. John, N. B., have been having a wild time on account of a move on the part of the authorities of St. John to impose various new forms of special taxation. The immediate result of the proposals has been the ordering of the exchange branches to move to Moncton, N. B., where the civic officials have already secured a suitable building to accommodate the offices and have guaranteed a fixed assessment for the next ten years. The decision to order the removal of exchange branches to Moncton was reached at a conference of exchange men in Toronto, who acted on reports from their respective branch managers.

St. John wants to collect a special license fee from the exchanges and to charge a fee of $1 on all reels censored by the Province when the reels belong to a corporation or person not represented in the Province of New Brunswick. No other city in Canada now requires a special license fee from exchanges, and it is feared that if St. John were allowed to gain the point many other cities of the Dominion would see the necessity of imposing an annual tax on film exchange branches in their cities.

Pathe Releases First "Win War" Film

Arrangements were made some time ago by the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, with Pathe for a production of a series of one-reel pictures from scenarios furnished by the committee to be known as "Winning the War" series, showing the tremendous home activities directed to this purpose. The first of the series was scheduled for release the week of November 10 and is called "The United States Boys Working Reserve Solves the Great Farm Problem."

Sliter Chosen Foreign Film Commissioner—Goes Abroad Shortly

Fred G. Sliter, manager of the New York branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, has been appointed foreign film commissioner by the Committee on Public Information and sails in November for his new post abroad. His resignation as branch manager for the Mutual became effective November 1.

Mr. Sliter came to New York August 1 of this year as manager of the Mutual exchange from Albany where he had been branch manager for two years. He has been in the Mutual organization since 1914, when he became a salesman in the Albany territory. In two years he became the branch manager.

Washington Favors Picture Industry

The campaign instituted by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to obtain an expression of opinion from the candidates for the House of Representatives and the U. S. Senate relative to their feeling toward the motion picture industry is meeting with an enthusiastic response.

Letters are pouring in with every mail and up to the present time every expression of opinion received has been favorable. The replies received state positively and unequivocally that the writers are opposed to any legislation that would prove detrimental to the motion picture or to the motion picture industry.

These replies show conclusively the strides that have been made by the business during the last two years. When a campaign of like nature was carried on at the Congressional election two years ago numerous replies were received which were exceedingly strenuous in their opposition to the motion picture. This year the reverse is true and the replies are enthusiastically favorable.

Every Little Bit Helps a Lot in Tobacco Fund

Though the amount be small, our boys across the water will appreciate the smokes just as much as though each gift originated from a thousand dollars.

Motion Picture News this week is in receipt of a check for $1.02 which is to be added to "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund." The following names, with their individual donations, accompanied the check: Nels Anderson, Olson and Anderson, Oakland, Neb., 25 cents; Miss Henrietta Delaterre, Oakland, 25 cents; Miss Anna Larson, Oakland, 25 cents, and the Majestic theatre, Oakland, 27 cents.

H. A. Larson is proprietor of the Majestic theatre in Oakland, Neb.

Hearst-Universal-Mutual in Big Deal

Hearst's International News Purchases Animated Weekly and Current Events from Universal and Buys Screen Telegram from Mutual—Universal Will Distribute

A COMBINATION of four of the greatest news reels in the world was effected when Hearst's International purchased Universal Animated Weekly and Universal Current Events from the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and bought the Screen Telegram from the Mutual Film Corporation.

The four will be combined and released under the title of "Hearst International News" beginning December 25th, at which time the name Pathe will be dropped from the Hearst organization as the old arrangement expires on that date.

Universal exchanges will do the distributing for Hearst's new amalgamation of news services, while the increased array of camera men will be augmented by the news gathering facilities of the Hearst newspapers and staff throughout the world.

First Issue Christmas Day

"The first issue of the 'Hearst International News' under its newly christened old name, will come on Christmas Day," said C. F. Zittel, vice-president and general manager of the International News Service Company. "The wonderful news gathering facilities of the Hearst newspapers and film organization has always been responsible, in my opinion, for the news in the news reel, and, during the time of its affiliation with Pathe, all the negatives have been supplied by the Hearst company."

The Universal Animated Weekly and Current Events and the Screen Telegram of the Mutual Company have long held their place in the highest rank in the news pictorial field. Under the guidance of Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Mfg. Company, the Animated Weekly was established six years ago and was probably the first news subject to be organized in America. Current Events was founded soon after the Animated Weekly had gained its foothold and soon became equally popular.

Carl Laemmle, one of the most noted figures in the industry, since he became the president of the Universal when it was founded back in 1912, has made of it one of the biggest releasing and distributing organization in the country, with exchanges in about forty of the leading cities of the country, so from a distributing standpoint the Hearst International News will be in a very excellent position.

Jack Cohn Was Active

Jack Cohn, generally regarded as one of the foremost editors of such service, and who in point of continuous record, is the oldest news pictorial director in the business, developed the two Universal weeklies from their infancy six years ago to the position they now hold. It is said that Mr. Cohn received a flattering offer from Hearst's International News, in connection with the transfer, to join the purchasing organization, but up to now has not decided what his future arrangements will be. It was understood that he might continue with the Universal, and devote his talents to direction of subjects for the Screen Magazine.

The Universal Screen Magazine will not be affected in any way by the purchase. It is announced that efforts will be made to greatly extend the circulation of this subject.

Its character will remain unchanged, except for the natural development of quality. The Screen Magazine is devoted to visualization of educational, industrial and scientific subjects.

Established Good Record

From the inception of Animated Weekly and Current Events it is declared that they grew very fast and soon spread their influence over the whole country. Cameramen and correspondents became established at important locations the world over, to provide the grist that filtered into the subjects. The staff at present is said to number more than two hundred expert photographers.

Not a single news event of importance has escaped the clicking shutters of the Universal men since the service got under headway. Great achievements, feats of daring and "scoops" punctuate the history of the weeklies.

The record of these exploits in many cases reads like fiction. Cameras that served Universal poked their noses into the first scenes of the war, and later dared all its hurricane of hail, according to report.

A Universal cameraman recorded the burial of the Archduke Francis Ferdinand and his consort, which was the very first spark of the world conflict. Others in the weekly service shouldered their instruments among the invaders of Belgium, France and Russia. They registered on celluloid the bombardment of Liege, Namur and Verdun, and afterwards shouldered their way back over the shell-wrecked, blood-soaked ground and wrote the visual history of the Hun's defeat.

And at home, these scouts for the Universal turned cranks in the glare of flames that painted the sky over many a munition plant torched by spies. Fires, wrecks, pageants, parades, funerals, celebrations, weddings and burials have poured in the spirit form of photography on screens for the Animated Weekly and Current Events.

It was the Animated Weekly which is said to have performed for the first time in the history of such service, the feat of putting a news event on the screen the same day it happened. Since then that achievement has often been accomplished, and the public interest has been educated to expect scenes within a few hours of their occurrence.

Screen Telegram Passes

The Screen Telegram was started by Mutual after the Gaumont franchise had terminated. It developed quite a staff of cameramen and was issued twice a week by the Mutual exchanges.

E. B. Hatrick, the man who knows more about the news reel game than any other man in the business, according to a Hearst official, and who is said to be directly responsible for the building up of the camera forces that made the Hearst-Selig and the Hearst-Pathe such potent factors in the field, will be in full charge of the new Hearst International News and he is said to be now busily engaged in planning a campaign and placing his lieutenants in a manner that will assure every little corner of the earth being covered.

This news reel, according to Mr. Zittel, will be treated from a newspaper rather than a showman's standpoint and it will be the endeavor of the International to give the people the world's most engrossing, up-to-the-minute news in an appealing, "newsy" way.

It will also contain, in animated form, the cartoons of the Hearst newspaper artists such as Hal Coffman, Tom A. Powers, Winsor McCay and Harry Murphy. It will have behind it the tremendous publicity power of the Hearst newspapers and magazines.

While in the beginning it will only be issued semi-weekly, owing to present market conditions, in the very near future, the officials declare, that it will develop into a daily.

Don't Want to Miss a Single Issue

The following letter should interest you, for it expresses the opinion of the majority of exhibitors:

"We would like to state that we do not want to miss one copy of your paper, as we think that an up to date exhibitor cannot afford to be without it. It has been the cause of our securing some first class up to date plays that we have made big money out of, and it keeps you in touch with all current and coming releases."

Yours very truly,

Affiliated Interests Control Mutual!

Chicago, Ill. (Special).—Messrs. Brink and Clark, who organized and represent the capital interested in Affiliated Distributors Corporation, have announced here that they completed the purchase on Wednesday of the Mutual Film Corporation. The deal carries with it the financial control of the distributing organization and will mean that all Affiliated productions will be distributed to its members through the Mutual offices.

No announcement has been made as yet concerning the policy to be followed on other Mutual productions now being distributed through that organization.

OTHER LAST MINUTE NEWS

Reports current Thursday stated that The Film Clearing House, of which Frank Hall is now the general manager, had taken over the George Kleine offices in all cities where they have been established. George Kleine last week announced that the distribution of his subjects would in future be through General Film, with Kleine representatives in each office.

The Film Clearing House deal apparently takes the discontinued offices from George Kleine's hands.

Another Thursday report declared that Col. William N. Selig had completed the sale to Exclusive Features of the negatives on Tom Mix subjects. The purchase included short subjects and two five-reelers.

War Review One-Sheets for All Post Offices

One million of the new one sheets of the Official War Review, distributed by Pathe, will be given a most thorough posting.

It will carry its message to the remotest hamlet and will be displayed in the 40,000 post offices of the United States and its possessions, in every public building, city, state and federal, and in railroad stations.

Rothapfel Engages Youths

Managing Director Rothapfel of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres in New York, has set a precedent in New York theatres by engaging forty young men without previous experience for positions as ushers. Classes of instruction are held each day, and the boys who make good are raised as their ability warrants it.

Lustig in Bridgeport

David J. Lustig of Bridgeport, Conn., is now manager of the Empire theatre in that city.

In conjunction with his managerial position he also holds the photoplay and dramatic editorship of the Bridgeport Evening Post, the leading evening paper in Connecticut.

Another Liberty Theatre

It was announced this week that Fort Benjamin Harrison, near Indianapolis, is to have a Liberty theatre seating 2,000. The building will be similar in construction to Liberty theatres in other large camps.

Turner Also Victim

It was reported by wire from San Francisco on November 5 that Mr. Turner, of Turner and Dahnken, died November 4.

Influenza Takes Toll of Many in Industry

During the past week two World Pictures salesmen passed away with the influenza. They were Arthur Thompson, Chicago, and Dale P. Hill, Kansas City. Under the group insurance plan recently adopted by World Pictures each family will receive a substantial sum of money from the Aetna Life Insurance Company with whom the World insured all of its employees, free of charge to the employees themselves.

Henry Lubben, mailing clerk at the headquarters office of General Film Company in New York City, was doubly bereaved during the height of the influenza epidemic by the loss of his father and mother within six days. Both parents died in the last week of October.

The funeral of Miss Christy Walker, well known in the motion picture profession as an actress of ability and promise, who died from influenza, was held from her home 601 West 137th street.

Besides her husband, Capt. H. N. Walker of the U. S. Chemical Warfare Service, stationed at the American University, Washington, and her two-year-old son, Carter Walker, Miss Walker is survived by her mother, who came on from Birmingham to attend the funeral.

One of the most recent deaths within the industry, although pneumonia is not blamed, is that of Wm. J. Shea on November 6. He was a Vitagraph player and was said to be the oldest actor in films, in point of service.

Darling Expected Home

Joseph R. Darling, representative of the Fox Film Corporation in the Far East, is expected home next month, according to word received from him this week.

Mr. Darling, who has made an extended stay in the Orient, recently left Shanghai on his way to Batavia in the interests of the Fox organization.

Harold Edel Dies of Pneumonia

Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand theatre in New York, died at 7 o'clock Saturday evening, November 2, at his home in Manhattan, a victim of influenza. His death came as a distinct shock to the motion picture industry, as it was not supposed his condition was serious.

Mr. Edel was born in Greenville, S. C., and was twenty-nine years old. He succeeded S. L. Rothapfel at the Strand when the latter left to assume the management of the Rialto theatre.

Mr. Edel is survived by a wife and child, the former of whom was ill of influenza at the time of her husband's death.

Labor Department Boosts Pictures

To encourage and promote the exhibition of motion pictures in an educational way in the schools throughout the country, the U. S. Department of Labor is sending out from its New York office a letter and questionnaire to superintendents of schools.

In regard to the work the department has undertaken, a part of the letter reads as follows: "This attempt to develop the educational possibilities of the motion picture in class-room work is under the supervision of your government. Too long has this valuable aid in the field of Americanization been neglected. The motion picture industry is ready. The next step is up to you."

Simone at Albany

Charles Simone, General Film Company branch manager at New Haven, Conn., has just been transferred to a larger office of the company at Albany, N. Y., which he will manage. Mr. Simone had been in charge of the New Haven branch several months, and is a film man of much experience in and about New York City.

Cleveland Exchanges Form Civic Committee

At a recent meeting of the Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce, a standing committee was appointed called the Civic Committee. This committee will cooperate with any civic body or organization in the territory, whereby any municipal activity may be benefited by reaching the public directly via the screen. Inasmuch as the Board of Exchange Managers is affiliated with the Chamber of Commerce, and is in close touch with all exhibitors, all public matters are certain of receiving careful consideration if properly presented to this committee. W. E. Lusk, secretary of the First National Exhibitors' Company, was appointed chairman of the committee. His associates are H. A. Bandy, Goldwyn manager; George W. Erdmann, Famous Players manager; Jack Conant, General manager; C. E. Thompson, World manager, and Sam E. Morris, who, as president of the board, will act as a member in an ex-officio capacity.

Film Division Names Special Representatives

A number of special representatives of the Division of Films, of the Committee on Public Information, have been named, and have assumed their duties in connection with the Bureau of Domestic Distribution. They are: H. J. Marshall, Atlanta, Ga.; J. L. Roth, Boston; M. F. Lasker, Buffalo; M. J. Sullivan, Chicago; J. G. Conner, Indianapolis; J. P. Taylor, Salt Lake City; Ned Thatcher, New Orleans; Russell Shanihan and Sydney Spedon, New York City; Ellis A. Woolf, Pittsburg; J. F. McLoughlin, St. Louis; Frank Coffenberry, Seattle; Lee Crandall, Washington, D. C.; J. A. Needham, Cleveland.

All the cities named are centers of districts which the special representatives will cover for the picture output of the Division of Films.

Directors Host to Cinema Camera Club

The Motion Picture Directors' Association gave a chicken dinner November 5, in the evening, to the members of the Cinema Camera Club, at Castle Cave, in Seventh avenue, New York. Charles Giblyn was toastmaster. J. Searle Dawley responded for the directors and Lewis Physioc for the cameramen.

The affair was very much of a novelty in the way of decorations and favors, the surprises being many.

Sherry Service on Broadway

Sherry Service is getting to be a frequent and apparently welcome visitor on Broadway.

In one week two Broadway theatres were showing films that came through the Sherry Service. The Broadway theatre had the Keeney picture, "Marriage," and the Strand had a G. M. Anderson drama and the Burlingham travel pictures.

Hodkinson Writes a Letter

EDITOR'S NOTE—W. W. Hodkinson comes forward this week to assert that the industry is not suffering so much from the influenza epidemic as from the so-called uneconomic conditions which have been cited by various persons within the industry from time to time.

Although Mr. Hodkinson does not say anything wholly new, he nevertheless presents it in a new way, and the letter will no doubt be of interest to every producer and distributor in the business.

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation,
527 Fifth Avenue,
New York City, October 25, 1918.

Mr. E. K. Gillett, Treasurer,
Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Gillett:

OPEN LETTER TO THE ENTIRE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY.

I wish to take this opportunity of presenting the following open letter to the trade through the medium of your journal:

"The motion picture industry, particularly the producing and distributing ends, are not suffering so much from the influenza epidemic as they are from the uneconomic basis on which they are operating.

"The epidemic is merely serving to bring about readjustments which the operation of economic laws would automatically bring about at a later date and probably in a less drastic and spectacular manner than any resulting from a continuation of the shutdown.

"It is economically impossible for a dozen producer concerns to give their adequate attention to production, and as a side line to efficiently run a distributing organization that is supplied solely by their own product or such other product as is daring enough to place itself in the hands of a rival producer-distributor.

"This uneconomic condition results from two causes. First, pride of the producers who would prefer to fail trying to be "the whole industry" rather than succeed as part of some really constructive organization; and, second, even when necessity, such as the present conditions, proves the inconsistency of their methods, they do not trust each other enough to enable them to co-operate in any adequate manner.

"It is useless to offer constructive advice and criticism to this class. They want none of it. All they want is quick profits, in many cases at the expense of the other fellow, instead of being willing to co-operate and make a dollar in a constructive manner, to be divided later.

"As a student of conditions in this business over a period of ten or eleven years, it is my opinion that the business only works together under pressure, and unless the present pressure is sufficient to force the distribution of the product of a half dozen or so producers into some responsible hands where there is an absolute control as to methods under which the product is presented to exhibitors, rather than by the peculiar forcing tactics of the producers themselves, it is only a question of time until natural laws and the competition of larger and more powerful interests in the business will cause the disintegration and failure of some dozen and more concerns or will cause a co-ordination of their interests according to some sane plan, so that they may exist."

Seek Extension for Film Cases

National Association Asks Bureau of Explosives to Set Time Ahead Six Months Before New Regulations Go Into Effect

FREDERICK H. ELLIOTT, executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, has entered into negotiations with the Bureau of Explosives relative to having the period when the motion picture companies must comply with the new regulations of the bureau in regard to film shipping cases extended for a period of six months.

When the new regulations affecting the shipment of motion picture film were put into effect there was a provision that companies which had purchased the old style shipping cases prior to May 15, 1918, could continue to use them until December 1, 1918.

Owing to war conditions and the difficulty in obtaining sheet iron, of which material the new cases must be made, it has been practically impossible for the exchanges throughout the country to obtain the new cases. As the period of grace expires in less than a month's time, an extension has been asked for until July 1, 1919.

Following is the letter requesting the extension addressed to W. S. Topping, chief inspector of the Bureau of Explosives:

"Dear Mr. Topping:

"Referring to revised regulations for the transportation of motion picture films and a note to paragraph 43, effective November 1, 1918, which provides that shipping containers complying with rule 43a, effective October 1, 1914, and purchased prior to May 15, 1918, may be used for shipment of motion picture films until December 1, 1918: I beg to advise that on account of conditions in the metal and labor market created by war requirements, the exchanges have been unable to secure a requisite supply of the new cases to comply with specification No. 32.

"They have, however, a large number of usable cases which they purchased in accordance with rule 43a above mentioned, and they request that the authority granted by the note to rule 43 be extended so as to permit the use of these cases as are securely closed and in good condition will be used for the distribution of motion picture films.

"Trusting that the request for this extension will be promptly granted, I remain, Very truly yours,

"(Signed) FREDERICK H. ELLIOTT.
"Executive Secretary."

Owing to the short time remaining until December 1st, it is expected that the Bureau of Explosives will take prompt action on this request.

Submits Trailer to Help Fight Spread of Influenza

LIBERTY FILM RENTING COMPANY,
Pittsburgh, Pa.
October 26, 1918.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen: On October 8 my brother Isaac submitted a suggestion with the approval of General Blue of the Public Health Service to F. H. Elliot, Executive Secretary, N. A. M. P. I. —the making of a trailer to help fight the spread of influenza, as follows:

Owing to the serious aspect of the Spanish influenza at this time it is suggested that since large crowds congregate in Motion Picture Theatres, that the manufacturers co-operate in a campaign to guard the public against the spread of this epidemic.

Serious results may follow that would interfere with collecting of crowds anywhere unless precautions are taken. General Blue, of the United States Public Health Service, has suggested that small trailers of about 50 feet be made by all manufacturers and circulated immediately along the following ideas:

"Cover up each cough and sneeze;
If you don't, you'll spread disease."

And illustrate it as follows: A few feet showing men and women coughing and carelessly allowing the spread of the germs. Preceded with a title, "Don't Do This." A few more feet of film illustrating a man sneezing and spreading germs, to the annoyance and danger of his fellowmen, preceded with a title, "Or This." Then title, "If You Must Cough, Do This," then few feet illustrating man or woman covering cough with a handkerchief, and title, "If You Want to Sneeze—Don't Squeeze—Do This," with a few feet of film illustrating man or woman sneezing but covering with hand or handkerchife.

With variations to cover new ideas as they arise, which ideas would help educate the masses —so this suggestion was ignored for the reason that the theatres in various sections had been closed and the M. P. end of the Loan Advertisement was at a standstill. Nevertheless, you did your patriotic duty—nothing more.

IN THE CAUSE OF HUMANITY (if you do not consider it patriotism) you have the means of educating and benefiting our country, by making and using these trailers to educate our people how to fight the terrible disease. Fifty feet will be sufficient; they can be attached to all films used. It will help to re-open the theatres by showing what you will do, submitting copies of each trailer to General Blue, U. S. Public Health Service, and copies to Isaac Silverman, care Army Medical Museum, Seventh and B streets, S. W., Washington, D. C., both by special delivery. This will probably be the means of recommending that theatres be allowed to open—to educate the people how to avoid influenza and to keep them from worry, and help spread the word—How to Avoid Influenza.

You have the means of doing this with a nominal cost. Weeklies can use it with profit and it will be of great benefit to the industry in general.

WILL YOU DO IT?

Kleine "Comes Back" at Editorial Carried in Recent Issues of Moving Picture World

George Kleine has addressed a letter to Moving Picture World, a trade publication, in reply to that paper's recent editorial in reference to the enforced shutdown of producers and exchanges. Mr. Kleine has mailed a copy of the letter to MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and we publish it below:

Chicago, Ill.,
October 28, 1918.

Editor,
Moving Picture World,
516 Fifth Avenue,
New York City.

Dear Sir:—

A mild attack of the prevalent illness and pressure of other matters have prevented my answering previously the editorial entitled "Conservation—But Not Stagnation," in your issue dated October 12, 1918, which is manifestly prompted by my letter to the Priorities Committee at Washington, and I assume that the reference to "A Chicago Distributor" is aimed at myself. Time is short and your space is valuable; I'll make this brief as possible.

Mr. Hoff says: "We hear charges of waste and lack of economy"—"Looking about the field carefully has brought us to the conclusion that these criticisms are groundless"—"Fortunately, the level-headed business men who are engaged in this industry—are conducting their affairs with a full knowledge of what they are doing, and doing it in a safe and sane manner, as the success of their work proves."

In answer, I will quote from the statement of Walter V. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph Company. This quotation is taken verbatim from the official report of hearings before the Committee on Finance, United States Senate, page 594 and following; the italics are mine:

"Senator Jones: 'How much has your inventory increased during the last year?'

"Mr. Irwin: 'Our inventory has not increased, and our inventory is really fictitious. It was necessary for us, in order to show any profits at all upon which to borrow money, in some cases to pay our tax, to inventory our negatives upon their former value, the value when we were able to sell those negatives abroad. Our balance sheet shows our negatives put in at their former value.'

"Senator Jones: 'Do you mean to say that you have been making those great expenditures in piling up goods on the shelves, as you call it, when you feel that you are never going to get your money out of them?'

"Mr. Irwin: 'Yes, sir.'

"Senator Jones: "As a business man, do you mean to tell me that you are putting your money into those things when you honestly believe the chances are you will never get your money out?'

"Mr. Irwin: 'Yes, sir. The competition in this business is so keen that the company that does not continue its expenditures, and continue a product that is in advance of the public demand, soon falls to the wayside.'"

I further quote from Mr. Hoff's article, as follows:

"It may be safely said of every going concern in the motion picture business that its affairs are so conservatively administered as the dictates of good business could demand."

In answer, I quote the following from Mr. Patrick A. Powers of the Universal Film Company, taken from his statement before the Committee on Ways and Means at Washington, in June of this year: from the official record, Revenue Bill, No. 10, Hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives, page 676.

"I venture to say that the production end of the business has lost money in the last year. I don't mean that every one in the business has lost, but the production of pictures has lost money; there has been more money spent on the production of pictures than has been taken back from the public. That is due to overproduction, and money going in which did not come back through the theatres from the public."

And again from your editorial:

"The men who are guiding the affairs of the established and going concerns in this business of ours have conserved their energies and resources, protecting them from loss and injury."

In answer to this I again quote Mr. Irwin, page 599 of the Hearings before the Senate Committee referred to above:

"Our product, in order to hold these patrons, must be in advance of the public demand as to merit, as to artistry, as to acting, as to productions, as to setting, as to stories, and with the cost of everything increasing, the competition among ourselves is so great that no company can let up. One manufacturer was asked in a meeting with the exhibitors, 'If you are losing money, why do you continue in business?' This president of one of the largest manufacturing companies answered, 'We will continue in business just as long as we have 5 cents to take the subway and go down to Wall Street.'"

Quoting Mr. Hoff:

"Conservation and Efficiency we have."

And again from the record of the Senate Committee:

"Senator Jones (to Mr. Irwin): 'To have it appear in this record that you are contending that you are deliberately investing money in a thing which you deliberately believe you will never get it out of is beyond the comprehension of at least one member of the committee.'

"Mr. Irwin: 'Senator, we must do so or quit. May I point this out to you? If you will look at our balance sheet you will see that in many instances we have borrowed that money.'"

Everyone who is at all familiar with conditions, knows that Messrs. Irwin and Powers have accurately analyzed this extraordinary business of production and distribution of moving picture films which invests money without any hope of recovery.

Recognizing this condition which was threatening the industry some time ago, I stopped continuous production. A business is presumably conducted for profit and while every business is subject to occasional losses, how a sane business man can continue pouring torrents of money, whether his own or funds loaned by others, into a bottomless pit, is beyond understanding.

Either the editorial ears are stuffed with cotton and the editorial eyes wear blinders, or the editorial pronouncements are not sincere.

Incidentally, the editorial mind has twice consulted Noah Webster's dictionary in this article. Had the well worn path to Webster been still further trodden, the editorial typewriter would not have mis-spelled "caudle," which means a drink and other things; when one speaks of a tail and calls it a "Caudle appendage," "Caudle" should be spelled "Caudal," not "Caudle."

Yours for the truth, wherever it hits,
(Signed) GEORGE KLEINE.

Another Exhibitor Has Trouble in Getting Any Liberty Loan Films to Show

From all sides come complaints from exhibitors that they were unable, during the Liberty Loan Drive, to secure any of the Liberty Loan films to show at their theatres to help the Loan along. Some of these have found their way into print. Below is another instance, and this exhibitor also expresses disappointment at not being able to get slides.

Piper, Ala.,
October 22, 1918.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Sirs:

Referring to article in your magazine of October 26 from W. D. Martin, of Neilsville, Wis., with regards to being unable to secure Liberty Loan Films for his theatre.

We have had the same experience here. We were asked to make application for these films by the Film Exchanges that serve this territory and were booked to receive these. We were given one date, October 12, but did not receive it; we then took the matter up with the Exchange and were given date of October 19, the closing date of the Loan Campaign. However, we never received the film. It seems the film could not have been in use to any great extent as most of the moving picture theatres were closed during this period on account of the influenza epidemic; however, we were in operation here.

We also have had no success in getting slides on the Government Loans. On the Third Loan we were advised that slides would be mailed us; likewise on the Fourth. However, were never able to show them.

We wish to say, however, that through our local Minute Men we were able to more than double our quota; we also give a good deal of credit to a number of patriotic pictures which we booked and played with the idea of giving as much publicity as possible to the Liberty Loan Trailers which we proposed to attach to these features, but we were not able to show these.

We, like Mr. Martin, feel that the small town theatre is not being given justice in the matter of the above subject.

Yours very truly,
Piper Auditorium.
WILLIAM RUSSELL.

Special Showings of War Pictures

Many religious organizations and clubs, it is announced, are applying to Director Charles Hart of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, for special showings of "Pershing's Crusaders" and "America's Answer," the U. S. official war pictures.

One of the recent special showings of "Pershing's Crusaders" was at the second pre-convention rally of the Brooklyn Sunday School Union.

Industry Mobilized for the Big Drive

For the Current United War Work Drive with $170,500,000 as the Goal, the Motion Picture Industry Is Thoroughly Organized to Make An Aggressive Campaign

THE Allied Theatrical, Motion Picture, Music and Entertainments Committee of the United War Work Campaign was thoroughly prepared on November 11 to wage an aggressive campaign to reach the employers and employees in every branch of the motion picture industry for the limit of contributions in the current drive.

With such a phenomenal record established in the last Liberty Loan the industry has established a precedent which is hard to exceed. The slogan is not "Lend" this time. The urgent request is "Give."

This combined fund will be distributed among the several organizations which have played such a prominent and self-sacrificing part in helping to win the war: Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., National Catholic War Council, Jewish Welfare Board, War Camp Community Service, American Library Association and the Salvation Army.

One Day's Pay

It has been urged that every person connected in any capacity either directly or indirectly in the motion picture business, which of course also means the musicians, operators, ushers, etc., in the various theatres throughout Greater New York, should contribute at least one day's pay toward this most excellent cause.

As in the Red Cross Drive in New York, William Fox has been appointed Chairman of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture team and George M. Cohan is associate chairman. Mr. Fox has again placed the Chairmanship of the Industrial Division in charge of Frederick H. Elliott, Executive Secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Mr. Elliott appointed the following divisional directors to act on the committee with him:

Directors Appointed

These divisional directors will appoint a captain for each department in their company. These captains will appoint assistants from their departments. It shall be the duty of the captains to distribute the subscription blanks and obtain subscriptions from every employee in their department. They will make daily reports to their divisional director, who in turn will make daily reports to Mr. Elliott as Chairman of the division. Mr. Elliott will in turn make reports to Wm. Fox, who will in turn report to J. D. Rockefeller, Chairman of the campaign for New York.

Mr. Elliott received his appointment on Friday, and on Saturday letters were sent to all the executive heads of the motion picture distributing concerns requesting them to act as divisional directors for their companies. They were requested to appoint captains of the home office, exchange, studios, laboratories, players, factory, and a captain for each branch office. In this way the entire subscription for each company will be kept intact and will not be divided as in the Red Cross Drive.

William Fox Active

Mr. Fox opened his campaign headquarters at No. 110 West 42d street, where huge floor space has been taken and hundreds of workers installed. Under Mr. Fox's leadership there has been mapped out an elaborate series of entertainments which it is hoped will realize more than one-half the amount to be collected.

On November 10 Mr. E. F. Albee presents a monster all star vaudeville bill at the Hippodrome, the proceeds of which are to be donated to the United War Work Campaign Funds. It is expected that some of the best known stage stars will participate.

A War Relics Exposition is being held at the 1st Field Artillery Armory, 68th street and Broadway, and at the 23d Regiment Armory, Bedford and Atlantic avenues, Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team, for eight days, starting Monday, November 11. War trophies gathered on the battlefields of Europe by the Allied armies for the U. S. Committee on Public Information, are shown. The entertainments are being staged by W. F. Hamilton, of the U. S. Committee on Public Information.

On Tuesday, November 12, at the Metropolitan Opera House a concert will be held, at which John McCormack, Maggie Teyte and Jacque Thibaud, will appear.

On Saturday afternoon, November 16, is a football game at the Polo Grounds between Princeton and Harvard, the proceeds to be donated to the fund. Saturday night Charles Harvey will present an all star fistic and athletic tournament at Madison Square Garden, the proceeds of this to be donated to the fund. The crowning event of that day will be the great Victory Ball to be held at the Hotel Astor. It is expected that every one who's who in filmdom and the stage will be there.

Sunday night, November 17, the Friar's Club will give a Friar's Frolic at the Metropolitan Opera House under the auspices of George M. Cohan, the proceeds to be given to the Campaign Fund.

Fairbanks Will Help

Waving in his hand a newly-received appointment as Special Publicity Representative for National Activities just bestowed upon him by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Dr. John R. Mott, Commander Evangeline Booth, of the Salvation Army, and Mortimer Schiff, of the Jewish Welfare Board, Douglas Fairbanks climbed to the top of a giant doughnut erected in camouflage on the roof of the twenty-story headquarters of the United War Work Campaign, and there pledged himself to raise $25,000,000 of the $170,500,000 targeted for the drive which opens November 11.

Famous Players Gets Thanks from Washington

Further appreciation of the work that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has been and is still doing for the government in furthering its war activities is contained in two letters which Treasurer Arthur S. Friend recently received. One of these letters is from Col. F. F. Russell of the Surgeon General's Office, U. S. A., who wrote to convey the thanks of the acting surgeon general to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for its preparation of the film, "The End of the Road." This film was made at the Fifty-sixth Street studio a few weeks ago for the War Department's Commission on Training Camp Activities and is a companion picture to "Fit to Fight," which has been shown with salutary effect in cantonments all over the country, on board ship and at the training camps in France.

The second letter, from William H. Zinsser, Director of the Special Hygiene Division, Section of Men's Work, of the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities, expresses thanks for the use of the Famous Players-Lasky projection room to show the film, "Fit to Fight," to Martin Conboy, Director of the Draft in New York City.

Canadians Form New Association

An association composed of the principal officials of film distributing companies in Canada has been organized with J. J. Allen of Toronto as president. The vice-president is L. E. Ouimet, president and general manager of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Montreal, and the secretary is James Travis of Toronto, Eastern Canadian general manager of the Mutual Film Corporation.

The principal purpose of the new organization, the name of which has not been announced, is to watch legislative developments at Ottawa, the Canadian capital, and to secure a readjustment of the fifteen cents per reel per day tax which all exhibitors must now pay, regardless of size of theatre, location or other factors.

The new association will not interfere in any way with the work of existing exchange manager associations in Toronto, Montreal and other places or with existing exhibitor organizations.

Picture "Doughboys" Voice Protest

THE "DOUGHBOYS" OF THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY

A BRIEF

In Behalf of the Owners of Motion Picture Theatres (Exhibitors) in the United States

Prepared for the FINANCE COMMITTEE of the UNITED STATES SENATE by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the State of New York

The New York State League of Motion Picture Exhibitors, representing approximately fifteen hundred owners of Motion Picture Houses, begs to submit for your serious consideration their solemn protest against the contemplated increase in taxes to be imposed upon the already overburdened owners of these theatres.

That this step is not taken in a spirit of shirking or slacking towards our Country in its hour of need, is evident from what these same men have done in the past, in carrying their share of the increased financial burdens of the Government and in throwing themselves heart and soul and with all their resources into every Win-the-War-Movement, never with a thought of profit—and often with a direct loss to themselves.

Our protest is based on these two main facts:

1. The proposed new tax is oppressive, discriminative and confiscatory.
2. The proposed new tax will fail of its purpose to increase Government Revenue.

The new law against which we protest proposes to double and in some cases more than double the taxes now in force. These three taxes are:

1. The SEATING Tax.
2. The ADMISSION Tax.
3. The FILM Tax.

1. The SEATING tax established under the law of 1914 is a tax for revenue levied from the exhibitors (owners of motion picture houses) and was intended to make up for losses in revenue from import duties and other sources owing to the outbreak of the War. It is a flat tax based upon the seating capacity of each house. It is fair as it now stands representing the contribution on the part of these owners to the demand of the Government for increased revenue. As a matter of fact, we wouldn't think of protesting against the doubling of this tax. To pay it, we deem a privilege and a patriotic duty.

2. The ADMISSION tax of ten per cent under the law of 1917 is a tax laid directly upon the theatregoing public. On the face of it, this tax is borne by the public which is paying it at the Box Office. But, and this is very important, indirectly it has become a burden on the exhibitor (owner of the theatre) because immediately after going into effect the increased admission price reduced the attendance at the smaller houses, by twenty-five to thirty per cent and resulted in the closing of about twenty per cent of the smaller motion picture theatres in the United States.

3. The FILM tax under the law of 1917 placed a tax of one-quarter of a cent per foot on all negative film and of one-half cent per foot on all positive film. The revenue from this tax was estimated at $2,300,000. This tax was of course intended to tap the manufacturers' profits. Instead of doing so it was promptly passed on by the manufacturers and distributors to the exhibitors in an aggravated form, the exhibitors being charged a flat rate of fifteen cents per reel per day. It is a fact, and it has been admitted by some of the manufacturers and distributors that this charge of fifteen cents per reel yielded them a handsome profit over and above the film tax they had to pay. (It is but just to say that a few of the manufacturers and distributors have refrained from following this pernicious practice.) The exhibitor (owner of the picture house) was absolutely helpless against this extortion. He had no redress in law and he had no way of unloading on the public, because the prices for admission, particularly in the small houses, have reached that limit beyond which they may not be raised without running the danger of playing to empty houses. The film tax in its present form, allowing the manufacturer to pass it on to the exhibitor, is therefore a gross miscarriage of the principle of equity in taxation.

HOW THE PROPOSED NEW TAXES WILL AFFECT THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS

We submit the doubling of these taxes is oppressive, particularly so to the majority of the exhibitors who are men of small means and are, as matters stand now, often struggling for mere existence. The times, when every little Motion Picture House was considered a veritable gold mine are of the past. The ever increasing cost of production and distribution of the pictures—limitless salaries to the stars, riotous extravagance in staging, rapacity of the producers and manufacturers, financial jockeying by the big interests—have driven the prices which the exhibitor must pay for the leasing of film to almost prohibitive figures. Add to this the increase in overhead expenses such as rent, wages, salaries, light and heat, and advertising, and it becomes apparent that the owner of a small house with, let us say, a seating capacity of four hundred to six hundred, is struggling under a burden close to the breaking point. Permit us to quote from the report of the Joint Legislative Committee to investigate the Motion Picture Industry transmitted to the Legislature of the State of New York on March 15, 1917. On page nine, center of second paragraph, we find:

> "The Committee is satisfied from its investigation, that as a rule, the proprietor or owner of the small motion picture theatre, wherever located, is making an exceedingly small profit from his business, and in many cases none whatever, and that it would be an injustice to him to attempt to impose an substantial additional burden. The cost of production of motion pictures in the last two or three years, particularly the so-called special feature pictures, has increased enormously, due to the ridiculously high salaries of the so-called 'star' actors and actresses who are engaged in the production of these pictures; to the exceedingly large salaries of the directors of production of such pictures; of the officers of the various producing corporations, and to the large amounts being paid in the way of royalties to the writers of the plays."

We further submit that the taxes as they now stand are discriminative, and that instead of increasing them, measures should be taken for their distribution on a basis of equity. The seating tax and the film tax fall exclusively and directly on the exhibitor. The admission tax falls indirectly on his shoulders by lowering the attendance at the performances. When looking around for new sources of revenue it was but natural that the Government should turn its eye upon the Motion Picture Industry with its staggering figures of capital invested and profits derived. And at first glance it looks as if the legislative forces, in creating the new existing taxes, had in mind to evenly tax producer, exhibitor and the public. As a matter of fact, developments have shown that the exhibitor has, unintentionally, we admit, been made the goat for the entire amount of all three taxes.

We further submit that if the taxes as they now stand are doubled and trebled, they will become confiscatory, as far as the small exhibitor is concerned. To pay double the amount of a seating tax, to pay a flat ten per cent on rentals which would approximately treble the present tax, and to see, in addition to this, a falling off in attendance which may amount to anywhere from forty to fifty per cent, owing to the doubling of the admission tax, is more than he can possibly stand. The larger houses will survive. They would possibly find a way of passing some of the increased burden on to their public, which is financially in a position to pay higher prices for their amusements. But the small house, depending for its patronage on its immediate neighborhood and catering to the families of wage earners, could, under no circumstances, raise the price of admission over and above what it is now. For the small owner it would be a case of shutting down and losing his all.

THE FUTILITY OF THE NEW TAXES AS REVENUE MAKERS

The proposed new tax carries within itself the germ of defeating its own ends. It will fail of its purpose to increase the Government's revenue, because while raising the amount of the taxes in dollars and cents it is bound to lower the number of tax payers.

Eighty per cent of the sixteen thousand motion picture houses throughout the United States have a seating capacity of only six hundred, or less. These eighty per cent are the backbone of the exhibiting end of the Motion Picture Industry. As demonstrated on the foregoing pages, the owners of the smaller houses can positively not stand any greater burdens than what they are carrying now. The proposed new tax will legislate a majority of them out of existence. It will kill the birds that lay the golden eggs. And the egg basket of the Government will be that much emptier in revenue.

But aside from the question of revenue, there is the broader question of war time policies which should be taken into consideration. If it is true that amusement and relaxation for the masses is essential in these times of war stress and durance—and the Government has so declared—if it is furthermore true that the motion picture screen and the motion picture houses have afforded the Government heretofore unknown means on an unprecedented scale for propaganda in behalf of the strenuous prosecution of the War and in behalf of measures related thereto, such as the saving and conservation of food, appeals for help to the Red Cross, appeals for help to uplift movements—and the Government has so declared—would it then and there be a wise policy to cut the number of these motion picture houses down by fifty per cent and possibly more?

CONCLUSIONS

Drawing our conclusions from the foregoing statements and taking a survey of the entire question of taxing the Motion Picture Industry, we find ourselves confronted by what we would like to call a serious misconception as to the component parts of the Motion Picture Industry in general and as to their taxability in particular.

Being the latest comer among the new industries, and having had a more rapid development and a quicker growth than any of the old industries, it is perhaps natural that the relative values of the different parts of the Industry have as yet not been fully recognized nor correctly appreciated in their true proportions. The investment of fabulous sums of money in the creative and manufacturing end of the Motion Picture Industry, has surrounded this part of the Industry with a glamour and a golden halo, dazzling to the outsider. It has resulted in designating this part of the Industry as the substantial and essential interests and it has given to these in the eye of the general public a preponderance and standing which, to say the least, is exaggerated, if not wholly unwarranted. As a matter of fact, this worship of the golden calf has put into the background the other end of the Industry represented in the person of the exhibitor. It has almost put the stamp of negligible measurement upon the part which the exhibitor plays in the Industry, a part which is as vital to the success of the entire Industry as anything else. Without the exhibitors, who have invested their capital and their efforts in presenting the pictures to the masses of motion picture audiences, the entire Industry would not and could not exist. It should not be forgotten that these men, who build, or rent, and equip a moving picture show house, are the indispensable link between the creator and manufacturer of film and the great public that pays its dimes and quarters to see the film.

In other words, we have called out the brass bands and bedecked our buildings with flags and banners and have strewn flowers upon the path of that great wonderful motion picture industry as represented by the millions and millions of dollars invested in the creating and manufacturing end. But we have not given a thought to the thousands and thousands of little fellows, the exhibitors who with their all invested are bringing up the rear of the Industry.

What would we say if the people would reserve their homage and their reverence for the generals of our glorious army, for the powerful guns and for our fleets of aeroplanes, and would allow the humble doughboy, the regiments of foot soldiers, to pass by in silence? Don't we know that in the last analysis it is this humble doughboy who is carrying our message in the barrel of his rifle and on the point of his bayonet to the enemy.

And just so does the humble exhibitor, the doughboy of the Motion Picture Industry, carry the message of the silent drama on his screen to the great public of the United States. Who, then, will deny that the thousands and thousands of small owners are not just as essential and just

Fullerton, Noted Ad Writer, Quits Motion Pictures

Motion pictures loses one of its best known figures in the departure of G. F. Fullerton, advertising manager for the Jenkon and von Herberg interests in Seattle. His advertising of the Coliseum, Liberty, Strand and Mission theatres has attracted the attention of the whole industry, and many times we have told you in these pages the sort of campaigns that he conducts in his exploitations, and "Your Idea and Ours" has included scores of specimens of his work.

Mr. Fullerton has left the motion picture game to enter the foreign field. Seattle is one of the principal ports of the country in export business, and Mr. Fullerton believes that after the war there are going to be great things happening, and so he has gone in on the ground floor.

New Independent Concern on West Coast

The Roy Stewart Feature Film Company is a new independent organization of Los Angeles, now at work on its first subject. Cliff Smith, who directed Stewart in a number of Triangle pictures, is serving in his capacity for the new company, which has begun the filming of "A Knight of the Range."

Josie Sedgwick is playing the feminine lead and Harry V. Meter is the heavy. Many of the cowboys who appeared with Stewart in other western subjects are now playing in his support. Space for the production of this first subject has been leased at the Triangle ranch near Santa Monica.

Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs Get Girl Members

Universal Film announces that girls are now joining many of the Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs, organized throughout the country with the avowed purpose of combating disloyalists. Reports received by the national headquarters of the Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs reveal that several clubs exclusively for girls are being formed in various cities.

The Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs are taking an active part in helping to arrange bookings for the Jewel picture "The Yellow Dog," which sets forth the mission of the clubs.

Harry Millarde Titled "Some Busy Director"

The title of "Some Busy Director" has been given Harry Millarde by several of his associates.

Mr. Millarde has been with the Fox Film Corporation for the last eighteen months and directs the productions of William Fox for June Caprice and Peggy Hyland. His latest pictures with June Caprice have been "Blue Eyed Mary" and "Little Miss Innocence."

"Bonnie Annie Laurie" and "Caught in the Act," starring Peggy Hyland, were also late Fox productions directed by Harry Millarde.

MADE EPIDEMIC BOOST HIS THEATRES

Soriero Stayed on the Job and the Result Was That His Two Houses Got High Endorsement

ALTHOUGH Thomas D. Soriero had his Park theatre in Boston and and his Strand in Lowell closed along with the others during the influenza epidemic, he saw to it that the theatres were given the very highest standing in the two cities and the result was that when they did reopen they were jammed to the doors while other houses were complaining of poor business.

In Lowell Mr. Soriero wrote an open letter to the newspapers and then took the matter up with the Board of Health with the result that an examination of the theatres followed and the Strand was given a complete bill of health and praised as a perfect house. Of course, Mr. Soriero let everyone in the city know of this fact through the newspapers and his mailing list.

In Boston he went before the health board, but realizing that his plea would have more weight with the aid of Dr. York, one of the most noted medical experts in all New England, he had him appear to make the fight that eventually resulted in the theatres being allowed to reopen. Dr. York explained to the board the ventilating system and arrangement of the Park theatre and then pointed out that not one employe of the house had suffered in the epidemic. Dr. York's endorsement of the theatre was printed in all the newspapers and sent to the patrons.

Besides this by working at nights and going around the city in his auto Mr. Soriero found that many street cars were idle and got these put into service with the result that overcrowding was stopped. He offered the service of all his employes to the board of health.

In other words while other managers were taking a rest Mr. Soriero was on the job looking after the widest interests of his theatres.

C. Milliken Joins S-L Pictures

Conrad Milliken Has Become Associated with Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin in the Recently Organized S-L Pictures

MESSRS. SAWYER AND LUBIN have announced the completion of arrangements whereby Conrad Milliken has become associated with them in the development of their motion picture enterprises. Mr. Milliken was formerly vice-president of Superpictures, Inc., and the Petrova Picture Company.

From their office in the Longacre building the following statement was obtained from Mr. Milliken: "You may say for me that I am delighted with the new association and have the greatest hope of its future. My association with Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin is the result of various satisfactory business dealings in the past, during the course of which I have come to have the very highest regard for their judgment and abilities.

"I believe that each of them has much to give to the motion picture industry and to the solution of its problems. Their energy and activity have become a byword in the trade during the last year in which it has been my privilege to be in close touch with their work and plans.

"The fine projects they have in mind should commend themselves to the careful attention of every exhibitor in the country. The organization of a producing company around Ralph Ince has long been a cherished project with all of us, and in the first picture which he will direct we expect to show the exhibitors a real surprise.

"I have always entertained an unbounded admiration and respect for Mr. Ince's artistic ability and his intimate knowledge of the needs and wishes of the American exhibitor, and I am very glad of this opportunity to have had some share in the organization of his first independent effort.

"The very least that can be said of the new venture is that it is assured in advance of the personal interest and support of every exhibitor who has ever displayed a production directed by Mr. Ince, and there are few who have not done so.

"Other plans of still wider scope and significance to the exhibitor are now under careful consideration, and we will soon be able to make further announcement of the organization of several enterprises of unusual interest to the motion picture public."

Next Pickford Artcraft "Captain Kidd, Jr."

According to statements emanating from the Artcraft offices, it would be difficult to conceive of a more powerful combination of elements in the making of an exceptional motion picture than that which is responsible for "Captain Kidd, Jr.," the next Artcraft Picture starring Mary Pickford.

Rida Johnson Young is the author; Frances Marion, the scenarist, and William D. Taylor is the director. Charles Rosher is the cameraman.

The cast in support of Miss Pickford is headed by Douglas MacLean and the remaining members are declared to be the best talent obtainable.

"Captain Kidd, Jr.," is described as a delightful, wholesome comedy and is said to contain every element essential to a successful photoplay.

Coast Loan Total Runs High

Colony Referred to in Complimentary Terms by Loan Committee—Studios Raise Large Amounts and Stars Do Very Good Work

AN audit of Liberty Bond subscriptions made by the Central Committee of Los Angeles shows that the people of the producing colony, film exchanges and theatres, purchased a total of $1,209,850, and were responsible for subscriptions totaling $3,644,600. These totals do not include the subscriptions of members of the Comique Film Corporation at Long Beach, or the American studios.

The audit was made by Charles H. Christie, who served as chairman of the motion picture industry committee, and J. C. Jessen, who was manager of the Tanks. The subscriptions from the various studios and organizations were as follows:

Astra, $31,150; Chaplin, $63,950; Brunton, $117,500; Christie, $16,250; Brentwood, $350; Douglas Fairbanks, $46,700; Eltinge Company, $4,100; Famous Players-Lasky, $134,150; Francis Ford, $1,500; Fox, $24,000; Griffith, $89,400; Hampton, $12,050; Hayakawa, $27,850; Ince, $52,600; Laboratories, $18,000; Mary Miles Minter, $20,000; Morosco, $27,800; L-Ko, $14,750; Metro, $36,400; National, $47,050; Mary Pickford, $20,000; Rolin, $11,300; Romayne Super Films, Inc., $1,000; Sunshine, $27,600; Mack Sennett, $38,650; Theatres and Exchanges, $97,000; Lois Weber, $43,750; Universal, $122,600; Vitagraph, $50,950, and Triangle, $12,450.

Added to this sum is approximately a half million, which consists of sales made at Tank "Victory" during the first ten days of the drive, $110,000 of which was purchased there by a Glendale man who desired the souvenir receipt book of autographed photos. Tank "Liberty" sold $1,271,700; Tank "Democracy" $612,550, and members of the motion picture industry aided many of the industrial organizations in the sale of bonds.

The work of people of the film industry has been referred to by Chairman Henry S. McKee, of the Southern California Committee, and Campaign Manager Robert Molten as the most beneficial and influential. The two Tanks used outside of Los Angeles brought about a spirit of co-operation between the city and county committees and the central committee which heretofore did not exist. This in the future will be most beneficial. Players and directors were called on daily to appear at meetings, and it is estimated that more than fifteen hundred speeches were made for the Liberty Loan by film people.

Meetings at Tank "Victory" in Los Angeles were the largest gatherings of any held in connection with any war work in Los Angeles. The attendance at the smallest of the meetings was estimated at 15,000, while the largest, that of the Brunton studios, when Helen Keller, with eight other stars, appeared, is thought to have had an attendance of between 50,000 and 60,000, even though this latter meeting was held on Monday, a lightless night.

Governor Lynch of the Twelfth District Federal Reserve Bank, and Chairman Henry S. McKee are both writing personal letters to all the people of the film colony who participated in the Tank drive, or in any other way took part in the fourth Liberty Loan campaign. As the result of the exceptional work of William Duncan, he has been selected by the manager of the Four Minute Men of Los Angeles as a candidate for this honor, the first member of the film colony to be thus honored. Membership depends upon serving through three consecutive campaigns as a four minute speaker. Bert Lytell, the Metro star, as the result of his talks at Tank "Victory," was made the recipient of invitations for meetings which would have taken up all of his time night and day should he have been in position to accept. Mary Miles Minter did exceptionally good work on Tank "Liberty," being the principal speaker for this during its seventeen days of campaigning, and will, no doubt, be invited to aid the Government in a larger way in future Liberty Loan drives should there be any. Roy Stewart, manager of Tank "Democracy," and Josie Sedgwick, who aided him, have won the admiration of everyone who followed them in this work. This Tank worked through the smaller towns of Southern California, and the sales made constitute a very remarkable record of achievement.

The campaign conducted throughout the film colonly of Los Angeles by Charles H. Christie is one that reflects much credit to him. As chairman of the film industry committee, he succeeded in securing the hearty co-operation of the committees organized at all of the studios, and among the theatres, laboratories, accesory people and exchanges, and secured a maximum subscription when the people of the industry faced the most unsuccesful conditions in recent years.

Arthur H. Sawyer, who with Herbert Lubin, has formed the new S-L Pictures organization, for the making and releasing of special productions, has announced that work is being started on the first Ralph Ince Film Attraction, personally directed by Ralph Ince, which will be the initial offering under the new banner.

Plans for originating the "S-L" brand have been under way for several months, a definite policy having been outlined and carried to completion. According to Mr. Sawyer, the only films which will be made are those which have a theme big enough to assure their success on the largest scale.

"The day of mediocre films has passed," declared Mr. Sawyer, when seen at his office. "Our definite plan is to make the biggest kind of big specials for only by the creation of unusually fine attractions can public interest in the motion picture be kept up.

"'S-L Pictures' will cater to a public ever growing more discriminating, and will never attempt any fixed number of annual releases, or any other plan which would detract from the high quality of production which is vital today to win success.

"Ralph Ince, our director-in-chief, is so well known for his successes that further comment is unnecessary. For his opening picture Mr. Ince is picturizing a stupendous theme, which for the present must remain a secret," continued Mr. Sawyer.

"The star will be E. K. Lincoln, who has made a name for himself by efficient portrayal of many difficult parts, winning an ever-growing following among picture lovers. The combination of Ralph Ince and E. K. Lincoln is particularly fine, and in support there will be an all-star cast, which will be announced shortly."

for an existence, should not have to pay more than 50 cents top to see the best of them.

I contend that "Revelation," with Nazimova, was, from an artistic standpoint and from a standpoint of timing and direction, on a par with any picture that has ever been turned out; and Metro and George Baker, the director, are to be congratulated, and I am glad to say that the prices were not raised for it at any time.

NO! By all means we must not stop production of the pictures for a moment, if we can help it, but we MUST stop the making of bad and mediocre pictures.

We must stop these wild-cat promotion schemes by would-be producers who are inveigling many good people to throw money away by investing in their air castles, with the result of more worthless film being thrown on the market.

We must stop the shoemaking method and pay more attention to stories, direction, casting, cutting and timing, and we must allow a sufficient time to make each picture a work of art, and if Drama—be sure that it delivers a "message."

We ought, instead of cutting out production, to start the process of elimination, and go down the line investigating the pedigrees of many so-called directors and stars who are drawing fancy salaries and never do deliver the goods.

We ought to investigate the reason that stacks of money has been, and is now being, paid to performers for weeks and months and as much as a year, while they are absolutely idle.

We ought to find out why exhibitors are so often forced to cut thousands of feet of padding and mistakes out of pictures in order to make them fit to show. The writer has, on many occasions, been compelled to cut great quantities of padding, useless close-ups, etc., and recently took 2,000 feet out of 5,000, and the Western representative of the firm, which is one of the most prominent in the business, admitted it was a much better picture for the pruning.

If we would put the right kind of an investigating committee on the job we would soon discover that barrels of money is being thrown away uselessly through the channels that I have mentioned. What the business needs is a "Doctor"—QUICK.

NOW as to advertising. Mr. Johnston certainly has the right idea—he is right about our desks being littered with piles of literature that only serves the purpose of helping fill the waste basket. He is right about the stacks of material sent out to the daily papers, and he is right that we should have only two journals and use more economical methods in laying out the advertising copy.

If some of these producing companies would stop trying to conquer the world and stop throwing money away telling us how great they are, and get down to earth and do consistent, conservative and truthful advertising and confine their advertising to two journals; and let the quality of the pictures and the work of the artists do some of the talking when they are released, they and the exhibitor would have a whole lot less headaches than they are having now, because they would eliminate a great amount of unnecessary waste and be able to give the exhibitor the benefit by a lower price on films. For after all it is the poor exhibitor who pays for the waste and mistakes of the producer, when he pays the inflated prices asked for the film.

Mary Pickford is on top of the ladder and draws the people because she has the ART and PERSONALITY and ABILITY to deliver the goods and others in the business who have the real "stuff" in them and are delivering the goods, will always get recognition from the public; but all the money in the world will not make the public patronize so-called stars and pictures that are not up to the standard.

You have started on the right line, Mr. Johnston—keep up the good work—let us continue this movement and it will mean not only CONSERVATION but the FINANCIAL LIFE of worthy producers and exhibitors and the LIFE of the popularity of the business.

I, for one, am ready and willing to give my time and earnest efforts to help accomplish this end.

Sincerely yours,
J. A. QUINN.

as substantial a part of the Motion Picture Industry, as the big interests who have, until now, claimed this position for themselves.

RESUME

We have tried to show and believe we have proven:

1. That the owner of the small Motion Picture Theatre is overburdened by the taxes on the Motion Picture Industry as they now stand.
2. That any increase in these taxes (excepting the seating tax) would spell ruin for thousands of the smaller exhibitors.
3. That in the proposed new legislation, stringent measures should be provided to prevent the manufacturers and distributors from passing any taxes imposed upon them on to the exhibitors.

There is no doubt in the mind of this Committee that the legislative bodies of the Government in their deliberations and decisions affecting the taxation of the Motion Picture Industry, have been guided by the desire and thought of distributing the burden of such taxation equitably and justly among the different interests concerned. But we must repeat and emphasize that the result of this taxation, such as we find it today, is far removed and utterly at variance with the original intent of the law. The big interests engaged in the creative and manufacturing end of the Industry, the self styled substantial parts of the Industry, have so far not paid one single cent, directly or indirectly, of the taxes imposed upon the Industry. On the other hand, the exhibitor, the comparatively poor owner of the small motion picture house, has not only cheerfully carried the burden imposed on him by law, but has, in addition, been forced to carry the rest of the taxation which he was never supposed to carry.

It is with a feeling of absolute confidence in the sense of justice of our law makers that we men of the backbone of this Industry are looking toward you for remedy and relief, and that we ask you to receive this memorandum and the protest it contains in the spirit which prompted us to submit it to you.

It is up to you gentlemen of the Finance Committee to say the word which will mean to thousands of moving picture house owners and their families either the continuation of a modest existence or utter financial ruin.

Irvin Willat, who has been directing under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince, answered the call to the colors and was summoned to Camp Kearny. It has not yet been announced to what service he will be assigned.

Thomas Bandes, or rather Private Thomas Bandes, formerly assistant manager of Select's Buffalo Exchange, stopped off in New York one day this week en route from Camp Meade, Maryland, to his home town. Private Bandes paid his respects to General Manager Arthur S. Kane and other Select officials, declaring that he would be back in the Select Service as soon as he has killed his quota of Huns.

Manager W. F. Sexton of the Family theatre, Toronto, reports that his former projection machine operator, Gordon Moffatt, has been killed in action while serving with the Canadian Army in France. The soldier was the only son of a widowed mother. Mr. Sexton's own son was recently severely wounded and no further details have been supplied by the Canadian Militia Department.

Word has been received from a well-known exchange man who joined the colors last spring, C. D. Hill, formerly manager of the Indianapolis branch of General Film Company. He is now a private in the 155th Ambulance Company, 114th Sanitary train, American Expeditionary.

Advertising the Double Bill

Even If You Have to Show Two Features, Make One of Them Stand Out in Your Advertising

LAST week, under the heading of "Your Idea and Ours," we reproduced a newspaper display that attempted to advertise a double bill equally, and remarked that "It can't be done." And that remark has brought from an exhibitor in Providence copies of the local papers with the inquiry as to what we think of that advertising. And since our series of newspaper articles were interfered with during the enforced closing and consequent lack of newspaper advertising, this is a good time to consider the advertising of double bills.

As a matter of fact, we incidentally covered this matter a couple of weeks ago when we printed an article here about advertising the whole bill, and some repetition will be found. But in the former article we spoke more particularly of advertising the lesser pictures along with the feature. We are now considering advertising two things of apparently equal worth and interest.

Now when we made the remark "It can't be done," we did not mean that a double bill cannot be advertised, but that it was practically impossible to give equal display to both pictures and expect to get over the same punch that you would have landed if you had used but one idea for your main smash. It is unfortunate that the habit of double features has grown up in some cities, but it remains that it has and therefore it is one of those evils that will have to be overcome the best way possible with advertising.

Of course the thing that induces double bills is to make the appeal for quality. In most cities this has been the way they started: There were three or four houses bidding for the same patronage and one of the theatres was getting the worst of it. The manager probably wasn't showman enough to remedy the evil so he hit upon the plan of giving the public just twice as much motion pictures as the other fellow. The result was, the others followed suit and double bills became the rule in that community. And let us say, that as a general thing, we know of nothing worse for the motion picture interests than to "feed up" the public on entertainment. The result is pretty sure to be that they will tire of motion pictures.

Now all of you are familiar with the "bargain" style of advertising. It is almost as bad as the old fake "Free" ads that used to appear in the cheaper publications, with the "Free" appearing in heavy Gothic type and then a lot of small type showing that the offer is not free at all, but that there is a string tied to it. And so the sort of motion picture advertising that is built on such lines as "Bargain Bill Today" or "Double Feature Program" is bad advertising, the sort that will not build for the prosperity of your house though it may get you in a few extra dimes over night. Remember that the only sort of advertising that really pays you in the long run is that which builds up your theatre along with drawing the public to see your current offering.

If you try to merely make this bargain appeal you can naturally get over any selling argument in your advertising, for you, in your spirit, are not trying to sell any quality of any picture, but merely quantity.

Now even if you think that you have to show two features for one admission you might as well make up your mind that you have got to pick out a selling point and use it each time you advertise if you want to get the most possible business. We know that this statement will be met with: "How can we do this when one of the pictures is as good as the other and probably if we advertised one picture the strongest we might lose the followers of the other star by not calling enough attention to him."

After all, selling motion pictures and selling newspapers are not so very different, and so let us repeat an incident we told you of a few weeks ago and in a little more detail. We were in charge of certain editions of a very sensational paper that strove for large circulation—to sell as many copies of the paper and as many copies of the different editions of the same day's paper to the same people as possible. There were two big stories and we thought that we saw a chance to get a very beautiful make-up. And so we arranged it and when the paper came from the press it was a mighty good looking sheet for that style of paper, but here were two stories played exactly the same with the same sort of headlines and the same style of cuts. It was a "splendidly balanced" affair and we felt rather proud of it until the big boss, one of the most celebrated of newspaper men came around and gave us fits.

Our excuse was that we regarded the two stories of equal importance and wanted to give them equal play. "Forget that," he replied, "and remember that so far as selling this paper is concerned there is only one big story at the time. Pick out one story and smash it! You may pick the wrong story, but go to it just the same and you will sell the paper. You have to make the people think that here is some news so big that they cannot afford to miss it. You have to give the newsboys one story to cry. When you play two stories the impression that you give the public is that you really haven't any one big story, but that you are trying to force up two so that you can make a type showing."

After long experience in newspaper circulation we have found that is true, and we believe it to be equally true of motion picture advertising.

Now on the page opposite we have reproduced the motion picture advertising and the amusement page of the Providence Sunday Journal. The motion picture situation in Providence, is, from the straight photoplay point of view, far from ideal. Not only does the double bill idea prevail, but at least two of the theatres follow the plan of giving you a feature and then a lot of vaudeville—certainly the worst form of bargain store stuff.

But let's look at the advertising. Strand theatre, probably the leading motion picture house, advertises Lina Cavalieri and Enid Bennet and gives the two pictures almost equal prominence. It's a pretty sort of an advertisement because it has the pictures of two pretty women, but it gets nowhere. It is good as an announcement to those who are probably coming to the Strand anyway and merely want to find out what they will see, but that is just about all. In the smallest type there are some selling arguments on the picture, but one has to hunt for them when they ought to be brought out prominently—that is, we mean one of them. The writer should have picked the picture and then have picked the selling appeal and made that stand.

Empire theatre has followed this idea to a considerable extent because it has devoted the whole of the design to the Hart picture. Naturally this helps sell the picture, but the display should have gone further and have played the selling argument of the production. But we can see the writer getting cold feet, for to make up for this drawing on the Hart picture he gives more type space to the other.

Modern theatre goes much further along to playing up one picture, giving bulk of the space to "Private Peat," but the use of the cuts is confusing and the one on the Marion Davies picture is meaningless and might just as well be taken to apply to the Peat picture unless the reader is familiar with the features of the fair Marion. That is the fault of the arrangement of the display, but at that the advertisement is the best of any of the double picture bill displays.

While Fay's is a combination house it always plays the pictures as the main thing and then lists the vaudeville acts to carry out the bargain idea. That is a splendid plan to follow if you feel that you have to also feed the public vaudeville along with the

Newman Reviews "Best Things" He Does

By Frank L. Newman

Manager, Royal and Regent Theatres, Kansas City, Mo.

I THINK the question, WHAT IS THE BEST THING I HAVE DONE FOR MY THEATRE? covers a great many things.

First and above all, to establish a theatre in your community so that when the people mention, "picture shows" they will immediately connect the name of your theatre with photo plays. For an illustration, if a man came up to me and asked me what was the best brand of shirts, I would say "Manhattan" or collars, I would think of "Arrow," garters, I would mention "Boston." Now I am not interested in any of these brands but what I want to point out is this: that these concerns had to build up their business and gain the confidence of the people that their merchandise is the best and that is what the exhibitors should do.

Of course in a case where there is only one show in a town and if a person mentions "picture shows" it would be only natural for the people in that particular town to mention the name of this one theatre and then it is up to that one exhibitor as to whether his theatre is a success or failure.

It takes a combination of many things to bring this about and I believe that while we are closed, it is good food for thought for exhibitors to try and figure out in their own minds WHAT IS THE BEST THING I HAVE DONE FOR MY THEATRE?

Don't "Bunk" the Public

The first thought is to have absolutely the best pictures that money can buy. At times the exhibitor thinks he may slip something over on his patrons when he shows a poor picture, that is buying a cheap picture. He does to a certain extent, but there is an after effect.

The picture is what you really have to sell. We give nothing. The patrons must pay before they enter. They take nothing away with them, and if you can establish in the minds of the people of your community that at least 90 per cent of the times they come into your show that you have on a good picture. Personally I run only first-run pictures and ofttimes I have had a picture bought to run at one of my shows and after I have reviewed it, I found that it was inferior, but I did not try to show it and rely on the reputation that the theatre has enjoyed the past four and a half years. I immediately paid for this picture and laid it aside and bought another picture.

Even if I did not make the money I expected to or should do, WHAT HAVE I DONE FOR MY THEATRE? I have kept faith with the public, and I want to tell you that the public is fickle and you can give them the best shows possible and then try to slip something over on them and they will soon leave and seek other places, but if you will try at all times to give them the best, I am sure they will stay by you.

Frank L. Newman

For an example in this particular case, just recently I had to show a picture that I really did not care to show, but it was the best I could get and any number of people came out and said to me: "This is not as good a show as you usually have, but you can't always have good ones." That shows you that the patrons are excusing me themselves, knowing that I have always done my best to give them the best show possible. Ofttimes I hear with this remark, "The music was good," and I also want to say something about the music.

Pioneering with Orchestra

Eleven years ago last April when I ventured into the picture business, at that time I did not know anyone who had an orchestra in their theatre. Of course the admission price was only five cents and they couldn't hardly afford an orchestra, but still I could see that I had to have something else besides the little film I was running, to keep the public's interest. So I immediately put in a four-piece orchestra, and there were only at that time three or four theatres in that city, and of course the exhibitors gave me the laugh and said that this couldn't last. My theatre only seated ninety-nine and they said that it was impossible for me to keep up a four-piece orchestra, but they often say, "He who laughs last laughs best," and I had my last laugh.

We not only kept our business, but we increased it, and right then and there we established our theatre, because everyone loves music, and ever since that time I have always had the best orchestra I could possibly get.

Just to hire an orchestra because it is twelve men or fifteen men does not mean a thing; I have always hired the best musicians I could get, and if it means ten or fifteen dollars higher than the scale, I had them in my orchestra pit, and I believe the exhibitor who thinks he can get away without good music is making a grave mistake.

It has absolutely been proven that music can make you feel either sad or happy, in fact, it can almost control your feelings. Now in case you have on a picture and have the right kind of music played, not just simply anything, but music that will color the picture, you have made your picture sweeter, and the patrons go out of the show not knowing exactly why but your show and your picture is the best.

It is because your music has helped it so; even if your picture is not as good as you would like to have it, the patrons have not noticed it and have enjoyed the picture, where if it had not been for the orchestra possibly they would have said that the picture was rotten.

How "Little Things" Count

The exhibitor should always keep in mind that he is serving the public, and every little thing that he can do to assist them is what keeps the theatre in their minds.

You take such a small thing as giving the people the weather forecast on the screen. It is something that everyone should know, yet many people do not trouble themselves to find out, and then again, for instance, if it starts to rain and you run a slide on the screen saying that it is raining and if the patrons have a car outside with the top down, they will greatly appreciate you informing them that it is raining.

BUT DO YOU ?

You May Have Read of Them, But Are These Your Policies?

MR. NEWMAN might be said to review his career as a motion picture exhibitor in this article. In its conclusion he says that many of the items he covers have been discussed in the trade papers often, but that a majority of the exhibitors are not doing these things. And he is eminently right.

Too many of you have been content to merely read what some other exhibitor has done, say it is a good thing and then pass it by. Right now is the time for you to cast up with yourself what more you can do for your house in the future.

Read what Mr. Newman has to say about his experiences with an orchestra. If you are unconvinced that music will pay you, you will get some striking facts here.

Making Your Theatre Appeal To Women

By Harold B. Franklin
Manager Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo

AT SHEA'S Hippodrome, we strive to make our women patrons feel that the Hippodrome is particularly operated for them. We feel that without the fair sex Shea's Hippodrome would not be possible. When you succeed in getting the women to come to your theatre with full confidence, the rest of your audience is assured. Women are the biggest boosters a theatre can have and it behooves every exhibitor to cater particularly to them. It must be remembered that the motion picture theatre appeals principally to the family—and women are naturally the predominating factor in the family.

No mother would hesitate to send her children to Shea's Hippodrome because she knows, first, that the entertainment is of the right kind, and second that nothing objectionable is ever shown. She also has confidence in the way the theatre is run. She knows that the patrons are of the best class. Shea's Hippodrome assumes the responsibility of guaranteeing a service that protects women from anything objectionable. Exhibitors should endeavor to maintain an inviting atmosphere suggesting refinement and courtesy. The employes should be carefully drilled so that their conduct may reflect the atmosphere of the theatre.

Appeal to Whole Family

The family patronage of Shea's Hippodrome is a big factor. A visit at any time to this playhouse will find a happy, interesting and enthusiastic circle. It makes mother and father feel good to see how their children enjoy the pictures and it cements the family ties. And right here we have the basis on which the motion picture bases its popularity and success. Young America, encouraged by the parents, is the keystone that supports this great industry and producers and exhibitors will do well to study the taste of this audience.

The movie is a tremendous educational factor. It is well to familiarize oneself with the women's point of view. Theatrical men who have been successful have always maintained that if a show appeals to the women folks, the rest of the audience will take care of itself. This is true particularly of the motion picture theatre—a distinctly family theatre. No motion picture theatre can exist without the support of the women. It is therefore important to cater particularly to the wants of the fair sex. More so now than ever before because of the important part women will play in the future public life of the nation.

Getting Woman Interest

The great responsibility assumed by women since the war makes them a factor indeed. Instinctively every woman is a housekeeper. It is important that the theatre be kept spotlessly clean.

We always take pains in appealing to the feminine eye. The ladies' rest room is really a "rest room," and it is tastefully furnished. Fresh cut flowers in a vase in the lobby are an inexpensive nicety that is of big appeal. Know everything that goes on in your theatre and see that your ushers properly police the house so as to prevent obnoxious flirtations.

At Shea's Hippodrome we instruct our ushers never to seat a man near a girl when other seats are available. Children and elderly people are given particular attention. Those who have the space and can easily and at a little expense furnish a nursery where mothers can leave their small children in charge of a young woman garbed as a nurse. It is these little things that make your theatre more popular than the other fellow's.

The big department stores have the right idea. You will note how the department stores cater to the taste of the women—with advertising, its merchandise and in its service. Make your women patrons comfortable in every respect. Study their likes and dislikes and benefit by that knowledge by giving them. The greater part of the matinee business of almost every theatre, principally consists of women.

The Pace for Fashion

Set the pace for fashion in motion pictures if you would appeal to the best women in your locality. Don't let your show or music get stale. Keep it bright and sparkling with plenty of novelty.

Every mother knows that children must have some diversion. "Movies" is a magic word to every child. Children enjoy the action of this fairy heaven. Mothers will not hesitate to send their children to your theatre if your pictures are right and if you run your theatre properly. It is natural that women want their children to watch pictures that depict high ideals, the good in life and stories that appeal to the highest emotions. Pictures should amuse and instruct. Make the woman feel that your theatre is "Her Theatre" and she will fight jealously for you and will prove one of your greatest assets.

Goldwyn Suggests Stunt for "A Perfect 36"

Goldwyn has issued two novelties for the exploitation of Mabel Normand in "A Perfect 36." One of these consists of a herald in the shape of a corset with a circle cut out at the top so that it may be hung on the doorknobs of homes. The other is a tape measure, which is, of course, only thirty-six inches long, and which bears the legend: "Are you a perfect 36? See Mabel Normand in 'A Perfect 36.'" Goldwyn suggests that the exhibitor offer to admit free to the theatre the "perfect thirty-sixes" at a special matinee performance.

Your Idea and Ours

AS a general rule we are opposed to the "block" effect in advertising. This is the practice of using bevel edged border on two sides of a display to make the whole thing stand out as if it were lifted above the general body of the newspaper type. In the bunch of advertising that comes from the Madera Opera House, Madera, Cal., this plan seems to have been generally followed.

In most cases anything of the freak nature in advertising of motion pictures is bad because it serves merely to get the eye and there is rarely anything of the convincing left to actually sell the picture. There is no use to merely attract attention if you do not then have the goods. In this case the block effect has been well employed, because the writer has followed out the teaser style through the advertisement. The repetition of "To Hell With the Kaiser," first as an exclamation and then as the title of the picture, insures that everyone will read the whole display—because it is different.

WE have seen a lot of announcements of theatres, but there is none better than that of the Colonial theatre, Toledo, O., which has obtained the first run of William Fox pictures in that city. In fact two other theatres make announcements in the same issue of the newspaper from which we clip this half-page display, but they do not stand out anything like this one.

It's the simplicity, for one thing, that makes it so striking. But we want to call your attention to the fact that the name of the theatre is impressed upon you good and strong. You cannot look at any portion of the advertisement without your attention being brought back to the Colonial.

By using the largest possible faces of the various players the theatre has gotten splendid illustrative effect. The typing of the little reading matter is good and there is plenty of white space to make it easily read.

Make your house the theatre that IS.

STANDARD theatre, Cleveland, O., used a quarter of a page in advertising "The Kingdom of Youth," and it gets a mighty good effect except for the gray background that is used. But it interferes with making the figure of Madge Kennedy stand out as it should do, especially since the face of the star runs into the Ben Day matter. It is a mighty difficult matter to bring out half-tones against either a black or a Ben Day background.

But these are minor faults. The main thing that all of the advertising of the Standard shows is that it is willing to use liberal space and keep the theatre itself prominently before the public. You will find no two of the displays exactly alike, but week after week there is evidence that the theatre is trying to get artistry into its exploitation in different ways. There is nothing that tends to put a motion picture theatre in the leadership of public opinion as this. When you come to make the advertising itself worth while the general impression is left with the public that everything about your house it worth while.

Nine times out of ten there is great pulling power in the advertising of the Standard, but there is always quality there.

HERE is a case of the greatest simplicity in advertising and coupling up the picture with the news of the law. It is the work of the Strand theatre, Minneapolis and serves to stand out among unusual displays.

"Crashing Through to Berlin" was booked at the Strand just at the time that "our boys" were starting to get there with both feet and when the eyes of every American were glued to the front page news about them.

As the illustration, one of the clever drawing supplied by Universal exchanges was used, but the selling argument of the picture was dropped entirely—that is the selling "talk" was dropped. There was none needed in this case in the mind of the man who wrote the advertisement. It was a mighty good display to attract immediate attention.

But there is one failing that it has and that is: What is the picture about? That is a question that a lot of people will ask. It would have been a great deal better to have added a few lines saying that this was a complete history of the war. It's pretty clear as it is, but there are a lot of people for whom you have to literally diagram things.

The fellow who doesn't believe in advertising is the same one who calls for "Central" with the receiver down.

PLAZA theatre, Waterloo, Iowa, has evolved a most unusual advertisement on Elsie Ferguson in "A Doll's House," and certainly one that will attract the attention of every reader of the paper. There is too much black type here though the black border is permissible because it runs into the house, which is made of bits of rules. The cut of Miss Ferguson is bad because the black circle behind the face prevents the features from standing out. The advertisement would have been very much improved had the theatre used a name plate instead of the black letters, and had the border run into this name plate. It would have then connected up the name of the theatre, that of the star and the title of the picture well nigh perfectly.

What Live Wires are Doing

There's one line of the selling talk that we distinctly do not like—the one that says of Miss Ferguson: "This is a wistful quality, too, which always makes you feel sorry for her, even when she is having a good time." A lot of people don't want to come to the theatre to feel sorry, and of course while that is really not what the sentence is meant to convey, it's likely to keep away a good many more than it brings into the theatre.

Don't play "policy" too much, or you'll find it a bad gamble.

THERE are times when an advertisement can be improved by leaving out the illustrations and this one, from the Blue Mouse theatre, Detroit, is an excellent example of it. This appeared on the last day of the showing of the picture and presumably pictures of William Farnum and scene cuts had been used in the earlier advertising.

So this final display has been devoted entirely to a selling talk on the picture, with the idea of taking advantage of the word-of-mouth advertising that it has obtained. It could have been improved considerably by making the line "He invaded the city of sealed wives," the striking thing in the whole display. As we have said, we take for granted that the name of the star and the title of the picture had already been advertised. Certainly, then, the name of the picture should not be featured as the main thing. Assuredly it should not have been featured above that of the star. There is also a jarring note in the placing of the line "Last time today." It breaks into a sentence and spoils the meaning of the entire sales argument.

Advertising was one of the biggest agencies in putting over the Liberty Loan; it will keep you from borrowing to pay losses.

USING a space of ten inches across three columns Liberty theatre, Hartford, Conn., adopted the proper in its opening announcement—it made the theatre the dominant thing and played down the attraction only so far as the use of type was concerned. Then after this had been done the manager sat down and sold to the public the various strong points of "A Romance of the Underworld."

You will note attention was called to the fact that this picture was made from Paul Armstrongs great stage success, what a strong appeal was made to the admirers of Eugene O'Brien and attention called to the courtroom scene. Some adjectives are used, but we are mighty glad to find that there are no superlatives.

Seeing is believing is an old adage, but remember that you are in motion picture business to make them believe first and see later.

"LAUGHING BILL HYDE" has been responsible for some of the very best motion picture advertising that we have seen and this display of the Kinema, Los Angeles, which occupied four full columns is a striking example of them. It is also one of the best specimens of combining the cut appeal with the selling argument and the title of the picture and the author.

"When in Danger He Always Smiled" is one of the best selling lines that has ever been offered with a production. It at once conveys the idea that here is a character out of the ordinary and that one will not be called upon to look at merely brute force stuff. Then the selling argument is carried right along into the atmosphere of the present war where the Kinema tells its patrons: "Sure Bill Hyde is an American—there are millions like him—challenging danger with a smile, eagerly inviting the great adventure and meeting it like a man." It would have been an obvious thing to refer to the present conflict in that sales argument, but we don't believe that there was a person who read this display that failed to get the point. And in these days you only need to tell people that a picture breathes the real American spirit, and then they'll pack your theatre for you.

One thing that we like about all the advertising of the Kinema is that the theatre does not let you forget the theatre itself. Note the way that attention is called to the engagement of the orchestra. After one is attracted to the display on the Bill Hyde picture one is taken right into this orchestra announcement. It's good work, for no matter how big the picture may be there's no picture bigger than your theatre.

Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

USE of patriotic and popular music in motion picture presentation has never been better shown that it is at the Rivoli theatre this week, where the feature is "Safe for Democracy." In fact, Mr. Rothapfel has given this picture one of his very best settings and the result is a storm of appreciation.

There are fifty-one changes of music during the feature and these range all the way from light and catchy fox-trots to "Battle Hymn of the Republic" and "Stars and Stripes Forever." The result is that every point of this patriotic and convincing picture is brought out all the stronger. It makes the presentation infinitely more impressive than it would be where you simply "play the picture."

There is a distinct surprise sprung right at the start of the performance, for everyone is expecting the usual overture. All of the lights go out and the house is in complete darkness except for the red over the exits and a few bars of "Auld Lang Syne" are played and then the curtains part revealing one of the striking John Wenger settings. There is a circular window in the back of the stage with just a little red light at the bottom suggesting the rising sun with the Rialto quartet seated on the stage. Then they begin to sing "Love's old Sweet Song," and you immediately get the reason for the bars of "Auld Lang Syne" that were employed as the introduction. The curtains close just as the last bars of the song are heard. There is no music with the quartet selection.

Then comes the overture, Suppe's "Beautiful Galatea," played with the lights all gold and then comes the double scenic number. First we have "Nature's Mischief Makers," released by Educational Films, a short bit of a picture that is full of laughs. We have the Crede that eats the eggs of the duck, then King Charles spaniels, cat and dog chums and then the monkey who is bent on overturning everything. "Whispering Flowers" and "Woodland Whispers," played without the introduction, are used for this. The second half of this scenic number is applied by "Outdoors With Beauty," one of the clever Van Scoy scenics and here "Poesia Pastorale" is used.

Then comes another one of the fanciful settings. With the lights all in soft blue the curtains part revealing another of the circular openings with a huge rock at the right and on the top of this four red lights and a big green tree at the left. Miss Gladys Rice then sings "Oh, Dry Those Tears," accompanied by harp, 'cello and organ. There is a red spot on the singer from the right of the stage and at the end of the song the stage lights come up in red.

Official War Review No. 20 comprises the Animated this week. The general title is "Along the Crimson Gash of the Western Front." First we are shown scenes in the Italian fighting with the Austrians cringing before the Italians, the big guns in action and then close-up views of the battle with the final result of a drove of Austrian prisoners. "La Forza del Destino" is used during the first of these and then a tympani rumble for the battle scenes. With pictures of the French soldiers after four years of battle come "March Heroic" with "Marseillaise" counterpointed for a few bars. "My Dough Boy" is used with pictures of feeding the American soldiers in the field and in the trenches. Then come pictures of drills with the tanks and here "Frozen Bill" is used.

Then comes the smashing finish, pictures of the British cavalry going into action. First there are three trumpet calls and then battle music and a drum roll and we see the horsemen plunge forward. This is probably the most convincing picture that has come out of the whole war for as the cavalry gallop into the battle a shell bursts in their midst and one may see three horses and their riders the victims. Then with the title, "Britain collects heavy damages" and pictures of some of the 57 000 prisoners they took we have "Rule Britannia" to the end of the picture, almost drowned in the storm of cheering.

There is a special musical prelude for the feature. The curtains part as the lights in the dome become blue and the proscenium arch red. With the fanciful setting there is an outline map of the United States with the stars and stripes radiating from it as the background. The quartet, seated in the orchestra, then sings "My Own United States" and as the end bars the title of the picture, "Safe for Democracy" is flashed on the center of the map and the feature begins.

Three choruses of "My Own United States" are used through the opening of the feature and then with the first views of the shipyard comes "Master Builder" march. With the introduction of the two tramps "Pals" is used, then the trip from "Master Builder" and the last eight bars of "Pals" again. "Love's Contentment," the theme is first employed for the first time then.

One may give here only a bare suggestion of the appropriate character of the music. For instance, in the scenes where the second son, the idler, is shown in bed we have "I Hate to Get Up in the Morning," and with the flash of the picture of the soldier son we get the last sixteen bars of the chorus of "Yankee Doodle." Then a little later when the father is the only one to congratulate the son who has married his stenographer there is a laugh added with "What's the Matter With Father?" Where the little tramp swipes the bottle of milk there are the last eight bars of "Jimmy Valentine." There is another clever arrangement of music during the time that we see the police rounding up the loafers under the work or fight order. "It's Time for Every Boy to Be a Soldier" is first used, followed by "What Kind of An American Are You?" and then four bars of "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here," and then with the title "I Hear You Calling Me," there are a few bars played on the bassoon.

Then when the soldier son comes home wounded we have "When You Come Back," and then "Battle Hymn of the Republic" and "When You Come Back" repeated. With the pictures of the shipyards workers calling on "gasless Sunday" we have "Keep the Home Fires Burning." There is another big laugh when the little tramp offers his arm to the servant maid and "Gee, I Wish I Had a Girl" helps it along. For the smashing finish we have "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean" and then "Stars and Stripes Forever." The scenes themselves are patriotically appealing, but the music adds to their punch and increases the great volume of applause that the picture gets.

This ends the bill, one of the very best that the Rivoli has ever had, and certainly there is none that has been more appreciated. There is a lot of comedy in the feature and therefore no more is needed on the bill. But there are probably a lot of people that would tell you that because

THEY KNOW

Trained Forces Add Dignity to Your Theatre

ON election night we dropped into the Rialto theatre with an exhibitor who has never visited one of the Rothapfel houses. There was a throng on the sidewalk waiting to get in and the house was crowded on the inside.

As we entered the loge section there were several people in the aisle. One of the ushers asked the people to step back. One man questioned his authority, but he merely had to say that it was a rule of the house and there was prompt compliance. And it was all so quietly done that no one who was not elbow to elbow with them could have heard. Compliance was immediate.

"If that had happened in my theatre," said the exhibitor, "there would have been a fierce argument. Once I admitted them they would have demanded to stand there and not go back where they could not see. How do they do it?"

The answer is simply that the people who attend the Rialto get the Rialto spirit. They see the order that is maintained, the courtesy that is practised and they who come to the theatre day after day enter into the spirit of it. Yes, your audiences get the atmosphere of the house. And it means a lot to have everyone in the spirit with not only your presentation but with the theatre itself.

Stage setting at Circle theatre for "Old Black Joe" and plantation melodies

New Meaning Is Given Old Songs with Settings at Circle Theatre

By Davis Hampton

I NEVER knew before just how beautiful the old folk songs and melodies of bygone days were until I saw how S. Barrett McCormick of the Indianapolis Circle theatre gave them a new meaning and put heart throbs and understanding into them.

To hear the plaintive strains of "Old Black Joe" and "Massa's in the Cold, Cold Ground" emerging from the throat of a white-shirted, evening-dress singer, has always seemed to me an atrocity and I'm afraid I gave vent to a shudder when the program at the Circle announced Gerol Gardner in Plantation Melodies, but my fears were soon dispelled when the orchestra began thoughtfully with "Dixie," and the draperies parted to disclose an old plantation scene with its tiny log cabin and tree lined river and several little pickaninnies playing in the cotton fields.

Then as the music changed to "Old Black Joe" the pickaninnies scampered away and the audience and myself were given a surprise for here entered the famous grand opera basso bending over a twisted cane. His costume, the tattered garments of the old plantation negro complete, down to the typical bandanna handkerchief and in blackface with kinky grey wig and beard with the true feeling that the old southern darky would put into this plaintive song.

Gardner sang while lights dimmed and bathed the stage in moonlight while the full red moon climbed slowly behind the different hills and through the shadowy forms of trees, "I'se comin', I'se comin'," and the last lines of the songs were sung as Ole Black Joe plodded through the cotton field and disappeared into his cabin only to be recalled by tremendous applause, and seating himself on an old stump, sang numerous refrains from other plantation melodies so arranged that they carried out the story of Black Joe's life, his sorrows and happiness.

there are some war scenes in the feature and because the theme of it is the "Work or Fight" order there should be no war pictures in the Animated. And that is where the arm chair critics would make a mistake for the Animated coming just before the feature with its musical prelude makes the feature stand out all the more.

With the lights all in gold, "Merry Wives of Windsor" is the brilliant overture used at the Rialto this week. Then come Ford pictures showing the manufacture of Eagle boats at the Ford plant and the music for these is "Life on the Ocean." Before the red stage curtains Miss Annie Rosner then sings "Peace, Peace," from "La Forza del Destino," an appropriate number coming in between the picture of America's preparation for war and the Animated.

Hearst-Pathe first shows "With the Stars and Stripes Over There," and we have a series of war pictures arranged by Mr. Rothapfel through the use of several weeklies. These first pictures show the boys of the Eightieth division and town and prisoners they took, and then we have pictures of Congressman LaGuardia back from the fighting front, Screen Telegram pictures of Lieutenant Saxew, who got four decorations, and of Y. M. C. A. work at the front. Then Hearst-Pathe shows issuing gas masks and their use and Screen Telegram adds a lighter element with candy for the soldier boys. Through all of these pictures "Crusader March" is played.

Hearst-Pathe shows pictures of the boys of England being prepared for the navy and then boys of France in the rigging of ships and with these the music is "Admirals All." A special composition is used for Hearst-Pathe pictures of "the human fly" and then we have Screen Telegram pictures of the boys at Camp Scott learning to run ambulances over territory like they will find on the battlefields and here "Shimmy Shewabble" is employed. "Trolley Gallop" is played with Gaumont pictures of the military aeroplane carnival at Belmont Park.

Then comes the beginning of the final wallop for the Animated. Hearst-Pathe presents a moving sight with the mothers of boys who have made the supreme sacrifice decorating the arch to them at Chicago. There are two bars of "Auld Lang Syne" played and then the trumpet sounds "Taps" and a silent prayer is improvised on the organ. Screen Telegram follows with pictures of the dedication of the new Liberty Bell and "Liberty Bell" march is used there with the final punch coming with "The light that will never fail," the Statue of Liberty and the last eight bars of "Hail Columbia" are used with splendid effect.

Then Martin Brefel sings "Celeste Aida" and the feature follows, Mae Marsh in "Hidden Fires." A considerable portion of the music for this is carried on the organ and the orchestral selections that are used are of the higher class. Such selections as "Tulips," "Heloise," Radman's "Melody," "Evening" and "Camin" are used.

With the lights all gold the orchestra plays selections from "The Duchess of Dantzig," and to send them all away laughing there is another one of the screamingly funny Sunshine comedies, "The High Diver's Last Kiss."

The orchestra makes the most out of the situations and during the picture there are nine selections used.

So the programs at the two houses this week are just about as different as they could be. The Rialto may be said to follow the Rothapfel style of arranging the program, but the Rivoli bill breaks almost entirely away from the routine. It is full of surprises, but surprises that keep harmony with them.

This leads to a thought, caused by the fact that the programs were wrong this week. That happens because there were changes made at the last moment and because with this in view they are always just enough programs first printed to cover the Sunday crowds so that the ones for the rest of the week will be corrected according to the changes. Almost every week at the Rothapfel houses there is something changed around and this is generally done at the last moment, at the rehearsal on Sunday just before the show starts. So the remark that we are led to: Do you even do as much as rehearse one of your presentations before you put it on, or do you just let it go along and take the chances with it?

Even if you have only a three-piece orchestra or an organ it will pay you to give a couple of hours extra work to what might be called the "full dress" performance. There are lots of little things that will occur to you as you see the picture with the music and in the setting that the audience will see then.

"Kid Matiness My Best," Says Carpenter

By George E. Carpenter
Manager Paramount-Empress Theatre, Salt Lake City

Q. WHAT is the best thing I have done for my theatre?

Ans. Children's Matinees.

Chorus of Wise Old Readers, Veteran Exhibitors, et al:

For the luvamike give us a rest! We have tried Kids' Mats and they are all to the bunk. The urchins won't come, and if they do they muss up the place, throw chewing gum at the screen and generally raise Ned. There's no money in Kids' Matinees—nothing but grief and a call for the mop and bucket brigade after the performance.

The writer acknowledges that Boys' and Girls' Matinees have been tried by various exhibitors the country over. The writer agrees that there is no money in them, and we all know that generally they have been abandoned in disgust. Still, he maintains that the best thing he has done for this theatre was started over two years ago and were it not for the "Flu" embargo they would be going bigger, stronger and better than ever.

Every Saturday morning, the past two weeks excepted, Boys' and Girls' Matinees have been in order at the Paramount-Empress, Salt Lake, during those months schools have been in session. What is more to the point, they have been an unqualified success. We haven't made big money with them, but we certainly have built up a reputation. Every kid is a booster for the theatre and unconciously suggests across the dining-table at home that the place for Dad and Mother to go tonight is situated on Upper Main Street in the old home town.

Heads Off Legislation

Aside from the advertising values the writer modestly yet honestly asserts that these self-same despised Kids' Matinees were one of the chief factors in heading off legislation that would have cost the industry in Utah many cold, hard dollars, to say nothing of oodles of grief.

It is a long yarn, but here is the story of Kids' Matinees in Salt Lake:

Others had tried the scheme and allowed it to die a natural death. Then we took a hand and went about it in our own fashion.

The Home and School League of this city at this time was making things mighty interesting for the exhibitor. No need to go into detail, but there was going to be a reformation all along the line! We all know what to expect when the ministers, women's clubs and uplift societies generally go over the top.

Knowing a number of members of the Home and School League personally we had several informal chats and finally entered into an agreement to rent the organization the theatre every Saturday morning at a nominal rental—an absurd rental any business man would call it. Then we gave them our time—oh, lots of it—and helped them pick the programs. The committee in charge was very enthusiastic. Eventually they turned over to us the selection of the programs, the writing of the ads and the rest of the pick and shovel work.

George E. Carpenter

The committee went to the board of education and insisted that half-sheet hangers be placed on the bulletin boards in every school, and put it over despite the protests of other exhibitors.

Schools in Charge

Each week a different school has charge of the matinee, teachers being on hand to act as ushers, see that the tots get on the right cars and generally take a hand in affairs.

Rivalry has been worked up among the various schools on the question of which school has the biggest attendance, while little between-reel stunts are pulled in the form of selections by school orchestras, etc.

The big feature is that parents know that they can send their youngsters to the Kids' Matinees and know that they will be safe.

A flat admission of five cents is charged and a show consisting of second run features, a Paramount Pictograph and a weekly is presented.

Came the time when the State Legislature introduced three bills aimed at motion picture theatres and censorship. Our side of the question was placed before the Home and School League with the result that those clergymen and women listened and then went out and killed the bills in one, two, three order.

Yes, Children's Matinees are worth while.

The writer maintains that no exhibitor should be content to look at immediate returns in the box-office. Too many of us are prone to look after today with no thought of tomorrow. "Cast your bread upon the waters and it will return to you after many days—buttered" is a pretty good maxim for any line of business, not excepting motion pictures.

The Home and School League and ourselves have learned a lot about entertainment for children.

The Way to Advertise

In the first place don't advertise Children's Matinees, call them Boys' and Girls' Matinees.

Don't imagine that you are going to get by with "educational" stuff. Give them good clean virtue-triumphant-and-villainy-confounded stories and then listen to them yell their little heads off.

Kids are strong for action and the regulation fade-out hug in the last fifty feet.

Youngsters are the best boosters going and when it comes right down to it will fight for their favorite theatre.

Briefly, if any one should contemplate reviving the Boys' and Girls' Matinee our suggestion is that he follow along similar lines as outlined. Be prepared to do all the work and give some local organization the credit. Don't get impatient at all the fool questions and absurd moves these people make but stick. Don't think you can put Kids' Matinees over yourself and make them stay put.

"Check up Now, Everybody," Urges Roth

By Eugene H. Roth
Manager, California and Portola Theatres, San Francisco

THE Spanish influenza epidemic which has spread from the Atlantic to the Pacific has temporarily paralyzed, in localities, the amusement field.

Never before in the history of this country have we experienced a similar condition.

The wisdom of the officials in handling the situation in such a drastic manner is manifest to everyone, and this speedy action will curb the spread of the "flu," resulting in an early re-establishment of a sanitary condition, and then the public confidence will again be restored to its normal state.

We of the motion picture industry have never had such an opportunity to so fully realize or understand the important part the "movies" have played in the amusement field until this epidemic came along and closed down completely all theatres in nearly every district in the United States. THEN it dawned upon the masses that the "movies" were really a part of their very lives, or at least offered such a delightful as well as educational form of entertainment, and at such a nominal cost, that the masses actually set aside a part of the day or night for this enjoyment. And it is true that in communities where they have good, clean and economical entertainment we will find a happier lot of people.

Accepting the above for its face value, we of the industry should profit by this awakening and understanding, and aim to improve ourselves in all branches.

Producers "Taking Stock"

The producers have closed down the manufacture of films for thirty days. This will help their condition materially, and undoubtedly all progressive producers are availing themselves of the opportunity offered and will take stock of "Themselves" to analyze more carefully the wants of the exhibitors, who in turn are catering to the film educated masses as well as to the public generally.

I wish I were able to advise the producers, but that is a branch in itself, and suggestions only can be made by exhibitors which may guide producers, whom I am sure would welcome any and all suggestions that are sincerely offered with a view of improving their product. It is only natural that they should, since a successfully made picture creates a greater demand and a better financial result is attained by them when the exhibitor has what the public wants.

NOW, what does the public want? Therein lies the great problem, which we must bend every energy to solve. I, for one, believe the public is always anxious to see good, wholesome stories, with a heart interest and an appeal.

It may be said that good stories are hard to secure, and I'll grant in a measure this may be true, but have the producers encouraged writers sufficiently to excite their desire to bring out the best in them? I understand not. Is it not true that an exceedingly trifling amount has been paid for good stories, and thereby greatly discouraging the brains who are able to give us good, wholesome stories? Some of the producers have and are paying consistent prices for good stories, and they are getting them. The results are shown in their productions. On the other hand, I know of many a good story that has been ruined by incompetent direction, and, then, invariably a good story with a good star is surrounded with a weak cast and poor environments. These, of course, are problems for the producers to work out, but they are anxious to be guided by us (the exhibitors) and will follow our ideas and suggestions. The exhibitor must be more considerate in his support to the producers; we must encourage them to put more money in their efforts so that they will be able to produce a one hundred per cent picture. In other words, we should say to producers:

We do not want fairy tale pictures.
We do not want biblical pictures.
We do not want costume pictures.
We do not want underworld or licentious pictures.

Eugene H. Roth

What Exhibitors Want

BUT we do want good stories with a good star, supported by a good cast, and with good direction, and surround the story with the best environment obtainable. And when we ask them to do all of the above we must take into consideration that our suggestions and aims cost them more money to produce such a high standard picture, and therefore we must be prepared to pay more for such standards. The producer is willing, all first-class exhibitors are willing, and the public will be willing, by giving the exhibitor who offers such features more of their patronage, and so the wheels of progress go on, and we, each in turn, will be getting ours.

NOW the exhibitor, too, must show signs of progression. He also must take stock of himself and find his shortcomings and immediately set about to correct them. His first duty is to classify himself and build his standard accordingly. If he aims to be a class A exhibitor, then he should first surround himself with a class A environment. His theatre should be given every consideration in the interest of his patrons.

Proper ventilation and comfortable appointments is twenty-five per cent of his battle.

A careful selection of his feature picture and assembling good fillers such as an interesting weekly (cutting out the cream and most interesting parts of two weeklies), a good scenic and cartoon and a good comedy (when a good, clean comedy is available) is another twenty-five per cent.

Music a Fourth

The third twenty-five per cent should be a most careful consideration of the musical feature of his program, and in this feature lies the sincerity of purpose of a careful, painstaking manager. He can bring out the best in him, and the result of his good judgment meets with instant reward in the approval and satisfaction manifested by his patrons. Of course, the manager must be governed by his own conditions in this particular. If he can afford an orchestra, go to the extreme of securing the best musi-

AN ILL WIND

It's Such a One That Blows No Good, But Read What Roth Says

NEVER has the industry had such a chance to realize the part that the motion picture plays in the part of the nation as has been given during the shut down on account of influenza, declares Mr. Roth. He declares that it has proved that this popular amusement is a part of the life of the country, an essential part.

Mr. Roth believes that the producers are making an effort to "take stock" and incidentally he himself adds some advice as to what sort of pictures the public of these days wants. And, on the other hand Mr. Roth urged the exhibitors to themselves "take stock" and find their own shortcomings.

One of the strong points that he makes is one that we have been constantly making — to make your theatre THE theatre.

Two of the clever double and one single column advertisements on "The Yellow Dog"

Strong Advertising Campaign Given Exhibitor for "Yellow Dog"

SOME very striking advertising has been prepared by Universal on "The Yellow Dog." The home office has prepared an unusually extensive advertising campaign which ranges from full pages down to single columns. There are sixteen pages of this advertising folder, full newspaper size and including the most complete plans for the exploitation of the picture by showing just what is available.

This picture which has been made from Henry Irving Dodge's story which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post might be called a "home" war picture. It is not aimed so much at winning the war abroad as it is at winning it at home. The advertising has all been prepared with that in view and it has been so designed that it will have great pulling power even after the armistice has been signed.

For instance, one of the three-column displays takes a whack at the food hoarder. A single-column display goes after the "lounge lizard." Others attack the villifier of America, the slacker, the fellow who fails to buy Liberty Bonds, and, in fact, all of the elements that interfered in any degree with winning the war get theirs, so to speak. All of the displays are illustrated by striking line drawings that will get the attention.

cians and give them the best conductor. If he can only supply an organ or any other form of music, endeavor to make that selection the best, and constantly have it in mind so that it is properly tuned and properly and sincerely played to interpret the pictures. Be honest with yourself in this particular, for music has a charm for everyone, so reach them all through this splendid channel. The fourth twenty-five per cent lies in the following:

The public make us "possible." Without it we cannot exist, much less succeed, and since the people are such an important part of our very existence they are surely entitled to our every consideration. Always have them in mind first, last and all the time. Instruct your employes to be especially considerate of the public. Endeavor to educate the public to your standards. Create that "standard" by being on the square with them. Never over-advertise your offerings; tell the public the truth and tell it to them often and they'll believe you when you've proven to them that that's your "standard."

Endeavor to assemble the very best program you can secure, and when you pay more you get better programs, and when you offer them better programs you certainly get better results, financially and otherwise.

Maintain Your Standard

But above all be consistent, maintain always your standards and always keep your shows up to that mark. Gradually and surely you will win. The public is fickle only when you are fickle. As Shakespeare has said, "To thyself be true."

Advertise as much as you possibly can in newspapers, billboards and other consistent forms of advertising. Do not prostitute your screen with cheap advertising slides. Only use the screen for your program and to announce your coming attractions. Of course, also for the United States Government for any propaganda demands. But always remember your patrons pay you to amuse them, not to abuse them.

Our industry is big, wonderful, and we can make it more so by each branch cooperating and by being fair and sincere with each other. Our grand Government has seen the wonderful educational advantages of the motion picture industry and has used and is using same, promoting educational campaigns during our present war, and as a result of this test many possibilities are open to use, and we already have the assurances of our Government's support for future progress.

The world today looks to America for everything. Let us be prepared to serve the world with the HIGHEST STANDARDS.

Advertising the Double Bill with a Punch

big feature in order to get their dimes. But this theatre has, as a general thing, done good work in advertising "The Prussian Cur." You will note that the whole illustration matter is based on this picture, the drawing as well as the halftones, and that the picture is actually sold by this display.

Quite the opposite in the case of the Emery. Here the space is carefully divided. half of it going to the feature picture and the rest to the vaudeville announcements. This is certainly a case of appealing to the quantity argument, and the display is further cheapened by the line "A big bill of surprises."

This was not intended as a discussion of newspaper co-operation in Providence, but so long as we have reproduced the pages, let us observe that the bargain bill policy seems to have also affected the newspapers, for the only sort of motion picture "news" that the Sunday Journal prints consists of the ordinary reading notices, and the cuts are made separate and without any special purpose except to give the theatres representation. Most of the Providence theatres go to the trouble of having their own advertising cuts made and it seems that the newspapers might co-operate in the matter of a layout.

The other Sunday paper, the Tribune, prints smaller advertisements from most of the theatres and devotes the first page of one of the sections to motion pictures and the stage, but here the same policy has been followed.

But to return to the subject: So long as you feel that you have to follow the double bill policy, pick out one of the productions and play it strong and then let the other get more or less incidental mention. Of course we would advise you to pick the picture that gives you the best selling argument to feature in your display. Study the points of each of the pictures strongly and then take your pick. You may make some mistakes, but you will get a whole lot more people into your theatre in the long run.

How A. J. Laurie used the front of Regent theatre, Guelph, Ontario, to boost Victory Bonds while his theatre was closed

Newman Reviews "Best Things" That He Has Done in His Two Theatres

There has been a number of times that I have used my own car to take people home when they did not feel well in the theatre and to take them to the depot when it was impossible to get a taxi, so that they will not miss the train.

Then when a lady comes in during the day and may be carrying a grip, to have it checked at the door is a great help, and then again it may be set in the aisle and someone fall over it.

Another good idea is to have a place for the little ones, say, from three to ten years of age, to play in case the picture does not appeal to them. In my theatre I have a room that is thirty by fifty feet and have a maid attendant. We have had as many as fifty children in that play-room at a time. Right off that room we have three or four little cribs for infants when they fall asleep, so that the mother can lay the baby in one of these beds and tell the maid where she is sitting in the show, in case the baby cries, and then go and enjoy the picture.

For instance, a drink of water is very important in a show. Ofttimes in the evening, or any time you may be sitting in the picture show very thirsty, you don't like to leave and go out and get a drink, but to have someone bring you a drink. It is such a small cost to have filtered water cooled by ice coils and have a maid to carry the water in sanitary cups. You can imagine yourself in a show very thirsty, you can hardly enjoy the picture, but if someone brings you a drink it would really make you enjoy the show, where if you did not get the water you would possibly not have enjoyed yourself at all. There are many more small things that bring about just what I have mentioned, to establish your theatre in your community.

I want to tell you that I believe that is the biggest asset I have, that whenever anyone mentions "picture shows" for them to mention the name of my theatre. The exhibitor must realize that he must do everything in his power for the comfort of his patrons.

A great asset to the theatre also is to have a good looking, clean, neat girl in the box office, and one who can have a Douglas Fairbanks smile and know the worth of "yes mam," "no mam," "yes sir" and "no sir," instead of like some girls I have seen in the box office who looked like their hair had been combed the week before and chewing gum, their hands dirty, and someone comes up and asks them a question and they either say "YES" or "NO."

Then to have a doorman to greet them with a smile of welcome on his face and open the door and have a neat maid inside ask them "How far down would you like to sit, please?" it makes the patron feel at home because he is being catered to and it shows that they think something of his patronage.

The exhibitor should always watch the air in his house and not wait until a patron comes out and says, "My, how stifling the air is in there!" Beat them to it and have your exhaust fans on and keep your theatre sanitary, clean and fresh. In my theatre I keep, the year round, white linen covers on the seats. It answers two purposes; first, it is sanitary, and, second, if a lady comes in with a fine waist of some kind on or a silk dress, she feels that she can lay back against the seat without soiling her dress from the dirt on the seat. In other words, COMFORT is above all, and it takes all this to bring about the establishing of your theatre in your community and gaining the confidence of the people that your theatre is THE theatre of the town. One of the big things that has made my theatre a success is the co-operation of all my employes. I have thirty-five people working for me in my little theatre, and every one of them is working for the interest of the theatre. They are all taking an interest, as though the theatre belonged to them. It is because I have made them believe that they are part of the theatre and that it will take all of their help to make the theatre a success. Many exhibitors overlook this essential policy.

Canadian Manager Sets New Mark in Co-operation with His Town

IT is not necessary to repeat here the advice that we have given you many times that it pays to co-operate with your city in anything that it is doing, but certainly a splendid example of this has been shown by A. J. Laurie, manager of the Regent theatre, Guelph, Ontario. He showed how a theatre is able to meet every situation and we haven't the slightest doubt that as the result there is going to be greatly increased business at the Regent.

In the first place, he anticipated the influenza closing order by several days and voluntarily discontinued performances, but just at this moment the Canadian Victory Bond drive was on and he wanted to do everything possible in the way of co-operation. The first thing that he did was to devote the whole of the front of the house to advertising the loan. The various frames that usually carried the announcements of the current pictures were given over to bond posters and two huge signs were painted and placed in front of the house.

But then he went one better by placing a screen on a building opposite the Regent and at night he gave free motion picture shows to the general public. They being in the open air there was little danger of infection, and the people wanted pictures. But these pictures were shown to aid the Victory Bond drive, being practically the same ones, with a few changes that were made for the Liberty Loan drive. And still further than this Mr. Laurie advertised these showings just as if he was collecting admission.

No wonder the newspapers gave him front page space. And he, and other managers who show an equal amount of public spirit, will find that it puts them in first place in the hearts of the fans.

It is not merely a case of being loyal to your country but of making every resource work for it and at the same time for you.

LAST MINUTE REPORTS

The Following Individual Reports Came in as Motion Picture News Was Going to Press

"America's Answer" (Government Official-World)—"Big business seven days."

"A Nine O'Clock Town" (Ray-Paramount)—"Average business."

"'Till I Come Back to You" (De Mille-Artcraft)—"Extra big in three days' run."

"Why America Will Win" (Fox)—"Big business first day, average second, and big business third day."

"For Husbands Only" (Jewel)—"Business average for three days."

"He Comes Up Smiling" (Fairbanks-Artcraft)—"Extra big during Spanish influenza. Great cast. Good story. Will stand a return."

"On the Jump" (Walsh-Fox)—"Extra big. A crackerjack to open up with after epidemic."

"The Road to France" (Blackwell-World)—"An ordinary melodrama with some extra good shipbuilding scenes. In seven reels. Would have been better in five. Business so-so."

"Peck's Bad Girl" (Normand-Goldwyn)—"This is Mabel's type of picture but she needs a couple more good ones to live down some of the others. 'Flu' hurts business."

"A Japanese Nightingale" (Fannie Ward-Pathe)—"Beautiful settings, good story, epidemic kills business."

"Riddle Gawne" (Hart-Artcraft)—"Great picture. Hart in a little comedy. Hart's best picture. Pleased all."

Editor's Note: The Box Office Report chart includes all pictures released since August 1 on which a sufficient number of exhibitor reports have been received to base a verdict. In the column "Average of Exhibitors' Reports" the term "Extra Big" indicates a picture which far surpassed expectation; "Big" means a picture doing better than the usual business for that day under average conditions; "Average" is the grading given the production on which business held up to normal; "Poor" indicates the picture falling below normal in box office and entertainment value.

The comments given are no indication of the number of reports received, as many exhibitors merely check off the grading without comment.

Live News from the Producers

Four American Films Active During Embargo

It is declared by one of the American Film Company's officials that the influenza period had proved quite active for their sales force despite the general close-down of business in the large Metropolitan centers. In the communities where the theatres still kept open, they continued to book the four pictures, "The Eyes of Julia Deep," "Money Isn't Everything," "Hobbs in a Hurry" and the latest Mary Miles Minter subject, "Rosemary Climbs the Heights."

In addition to this, many contracts for the entire three series of eight pictures each, featuring the three stars, Mary Miles Minter, Margarita Fisher and William Russell, are said to have been signed during the period which has been looked forward to as a completely dead term.

"Fair Enough" will be preceeded by "The Mantle of Charity," featuring Miss Fisher, and by Russell's "All the World to Nothing," as well as Miss Minter's "Wives and Other Wives," a "situation-perplexity" farce.

Three "Big V" Comedies Listed for November

The Vitagraph list of Big V Special Comedy releases for the last three weeks in November are announced respectively as follows:

"Frauds and Frenzies," featuring Lawrence Semon.

"Submarines and Simps," featuring Earle Montgomery and Joe Rock.

"Husbands and Humbugs," featuring Lawrence Semon.

The two-reel feature comedies, it is announced, are now being shown throughout the country and are said by Vitagraph to be the most popular comedy feature the company has ever put forth.

With one Big V Special being released weekly Vitagraph is said to be the only company issuing two-reel comedies each week in the year.

General Announces Two New O. Henry Films

When Broadway Star Features offer their new releases of O. Henry Stories it will be found that the subjects ready for the exhibitor are well ahead of schedule, as the directors had been gaining at the time production was temporarily suspended at all studios.

Two of the stories that may be expected are "The Ghost of a Chance" and "Buried Treasure," with Agnes Ayres and Edward Earle in the leading roles, direction by Kenneth Webb.

Fox Emphasizes Service Value

William Fox Declares That Success Lies in Giving Exhibitors More Than You Have Promised Them

Father Is Giving Peggy Hyland Some Good Advice in the New William Fox Production, "Caught in the Act"

DECLARING that "Service" in the motion picture industry too often means merely the distribution of press books, slides, lithographs and other accessories, or possibly the prompt arrival of film in a more or less usable condition, William Fox asserts that far-seeing producers are interpreting the word "Service" in its broadest sense, and appreciate that the soundest foundation for the building up of a permanent success lies in the policy of not only giving the exhibitors their money's worth, but even more than has been promised.

It is pointed out that what was perhaps a striking example of this development in the motion picture industry was the addition of Evelyn Nesbit as a star of the William Fox Standard Pictures and the securing of Madlaine Traverse as one of the stars of the Fox Excel Pictures.

As one of the Fox officials said: "The contracts for Standard Pictures, as signed by exhibitors, did not call for productions by Evelyn Nesbit. Her name was not on the list of stars who, the exhibitors were told, would make Standard Pictures. But when the opportunity came to sign this star for Standard Pictures William Fox availed himself of it—because he saw in Miss Nesbit a chance to do something for the exhibitors who had faith in him and his pictures.

"Therefore the pictures which Miss Nesbit is making are practically an out-and-out gift to exhibitors; the men who booked Standard Pictures are getting an extra star on their program.

"The same holds true of the Excel Pictures group, in which the Madlaine Traverse pictures will be released. The stars in this group, when the contracts were presented to exhibitors, were Peggy Hyland, Jane and Katherine Lee and Virginia Pearson. Now exhibitors will be able to show also pictures by Miss Traverse, thus obtaining a greater variety for their program and the benefit of any personal following that Miss Traverse may bring with her to William Fox pictures.

"In giving to exhibitors two stars more than they had bargained for William Fox is exemplifying the rule—long established in our business—that when you give the exhibitors just a little more than what you have promised them you are building up a permanent success based on real service."

Carl Laemmle Returns From Universal City

WHEN Carl Laemmle returned to New York City from the West Coast trip he told of the fire that had threatened to destroy Universal City. He declared that, except for the Spanish influenza, Universal City was in the finest condition he had ever known it to be in.

Mr. Laemmle was particularly enthused over a production that has just been completed with Dorothy Phillips as star.

"There was one film that surpassed anything I have seen in months," said Mr. Laemmle. He was referring to the latest production featuring Dorothy Phillips. The title has not been definitely decided, but at present it is identified as either "Carry On" or "Until We Meet Again."

"I sat through fifteen reels of the film," declared Mr. Laemmle, "and I could have sat through fifteen more with the keenest pleasure. Our people are due to have a terrible time cutting that film down to eight or nine reels. It is positively the greatest war film, to my mind, that has ever been produced, bar none."

Mr. Laemmle's general survey of conditions was optimistic in the extreme. He was delighted over the showing of loyalty exhibited by the working force of the company.

Director, Star and Producer Photographed Together. Marshall Neilan Is the Director, Blanche Sweet the Star and Harry Garson the Producer, and All Are Interested in Blanche Sweet Productions

"Unpardonable Sin" Completed

Messrs. Garson and Neilan Coming East with Blanche Sweet to Give "The Unpardonable Sin" a Broadway Run

A LONG Broadway run is planned for Harry Garson and Marshall Neilan's production of "The Unpardonable Sin," starring Blanche Sweet.

Word has just arrived from the West Coast that the trio will leave Los Angeles immediately and that the much heralded production is completed. According to announced schedule, it is planned to give a special performance of the production before the Government officials at Washington, D. C.

After the Washington showing it is believed that a private showing will be promoted in New York City, where the newspaper men and other critics will be invited. From the enthusiasm already recorded as displayed by Messrs. Garson and Neilan, nothing will be overlooked to give this production the promoting and exploitation which they believe it deserves.

It is declared that several of the finest New York theatres have already been offered for the first run, and the sponsors expect the first run to be a long run and a successful run in the metropolis.

Distributing arrangements are not announced as yet, but upon the arrival of the trio from the West Coast it is expected that something definite will be made known as regards the distributing arrangements of "The Unpardonable Sin."

This is the first Blanche Sweet production that has been completed in a long time, and she plays two parts in the picture. Walter Beery portrays the part of Colonel Klem, a German officer, who imposes "Kultur" upon Belgium. Miss Sweet is "Dimmy," who left Los Angeles for Belgium upon hearing that her sister was in trouble.

After receiving help in England, Dimmy arrives at the Dutch border, but discovers that her passport is useless. While attempting to slip over the line at night, she attracts the attention of a German officer named Klem, who is one of the men who mistreated Dimmy's sister, Alice, at the convent, and mistakes her for her sister, although he cannot recall where he has seen her.

Dimmy meets Noll Winsor, who has been searching for her and who promises to help her. On his next trip into Belgium he succeeds in getting her across the line, but Klem discovers them, and, still unable to recall where he has seen Dimmy, decides that she is a spy, and has her subjected to the German method of searching suspects.

From here on the many tense situations develop, until Dimmy finally foils the machinations of the German Government and is re-united with her sweetheart and sister.

Former Senator Praises "Wolves of Kultur"

L. A. Sheridan, manager of the Des Moines branch of Pathe, arranged a special private showing of the early chapters of "Wolves of Kultur" for Governor W. L. Harding, who is the honorary head of the Council of Defense; Senator Young, who is the chairman; G. H. Messenger, superintendent of banking; Thomas Fairweather, Mayor of Des Moines, and other influential men of the city and state.

Senator Young was declared to be unqualified in his praise of the feature and furnished a list of all of the members of the Council of Defense in Iowa that they might be informed of the propaganda value of the serial.

Metro Gives Ida Darling an Important Part

Ida Darling, well-known stage and screen player, has been engaged by Metro for the part of the German spy in their screen version of "The Man Who Stayed at Home," in which King Baggot is seen in the leading role.

Miss Darling has played with Irene Fenwick, Bert Lytell, George Cohan, Billie Burke and Marguerite Clarke and supports Norma Talmadge in her two latest productions.

R. C. Bruce Is Back with Twenty Pictures

Robert C. Bruce arrived at the offices of Vice-President Hammons of the Educational Films Corporation Nov. 4 on his annual visit from the Pacific Coast to the distributing headquarters of his northwestern scenics. Mr. Bruce carried with him twenty new one-reelers and a tale of a recent trying experience in the Cascade Mountains, which had delayed his coming about a fortnight.

He will devote the next month in the East to titling and editing the new material. A taste of its quality has already been seen in "Tales of the Tall Timber" and "A Wee Bit Odd." Some of the most interesting "takes" were in the Yellowstone and Jackson's Hole regions of the Rockies, the remainder being principally in California, Oregon and Washington.

Another daily worker in the Educational's film room is Director George D. Wright, of the New Mexican Topicals, which he is rapidly getting ready for early exhibition.

President George A. Skinner has taken the first print of the Coal Picture to the Educational's laboratory in Wilkes Barre, where he is engaged on the final revision of Director William Parke's multiple-reeler.

Artcraft Announces Next Griffith Picture

"The Greatest Thing in Life" is the title of D. W. Griffith's newest Artcraft production which the master of screencraft has just completed at his California studios and which will be the next Griffith release on the Artcraft schedule.

The cast is made up of regular Griffith players, for the most part identical with those who have been featured in all the recent Griffith productions. Lillian Gish has the leading feminine role, with Robert Harron opposite as the young American. Elmo Lincoln appears in the role of an American soldier hero, while the remaining parts are in the hands of Adolphe Lestina, David Butler, Edward Peil, Kate Bruce and "Peaches" Jackson.

"Coal" Picture Will Be Shown to Officials

William Parke finished the Educational's "Coal" picture October 28, and the production will be exhibited for the approval of the Federal Fuel Administrator and the heads of the fuel industry throughout the country.

It will subsequently be seen at a trade showing and will then be pre-released at one of the Broadway theatres prior to its general distribution to the motion picture houses. The definite title will shortly be announced.

O. F. Spahr Reports Sale of Many Motiographs

According to General Manager Spahr of the Enterprise Optical Company of Chicago, the closing of theatres all over the country on account of the influenza epidemic has proved a benefit instead of a detriment to his business.

During the shut-down two Motiograph De Luxe machines have been installed in each of the following places: Akron, Ohio; Stigler, Okla.; Saranac, Mich.; Chelsea, Okla.; Danville, Ill., and Famour theatre at Chicago. One machine was installed also at the Noyes School at Evanston, Ill.

In addition to this it is reported that the H. K. Barnett Supply Company of Dallas, Texas, has sold and installed in Y. M. C. A. huts in the State of Texas fifty Motiograph machines and received an additional order from the Y. M. C. A. for thirty.

While Mr. O. F. Spahr, general manager of the Enterprise Optical Co., was attending the recent New York Convention of the motion picture industry, he received personally from the New York headquarters of the Y. M. C. A. an order for one hundred additional Motiograph machines.

The Enterprise Co. had previously furnished the Y. M. C. A. army huts of the United States cantonments between five and six hundred machines. The Y. M. C. A. are now arranging to ship Mazda equipment of Motiograph type to Philippines.

Goldwyn Special Gets Big List

Marcus Loew Gives "For the Freedom of the East" Seventy Days' Blanket Booking on His Metropolitan Circuit

IRA M. LOWRY'S patriotic production, "For the Freedom of the East," a drama of the defeat and rout of the Hun in Siberia, featuring the screen's only Chinese star, Lady Tsen Mei, has been given seventy days' booking on the Marcus Loew circuit, comprising New York City and nearby communities.

Officials of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, distributors of "For the Freedom of the East," regard this is a striking testimonial to the wide appeal of this subject.

A contract for immediate playing dates was signed because, to quote the Loew bookers, "'For the Freedom of the East' is one of the best pictures ever made for the average American."

The production was booked at sight for a full-time showing on the Loew metropolitan circuit after the Spanish influenza shutdown had interrupted a pre-release showing at the Stanley theatre, Philadelphia, where it is declared thousands were turned away in the four days "For the Freedom of the East" was shown.

During the month of no releases twenty Goldwyn offices throughout the United States are said to have proved by bookings that this offering is to be one of the big productions of the winter and spring seasons. Goldwyn believes it is not too much to predict for it a success equal to that of "For the Freedom of the World," another Lowry production.

Goldwyn is advising exhibitors to book "For the Freedom of the East" at once, thereby assuring themselves of playing dates, before all prints of the production are again in use. This will, they say, avoid the situation which arose with "For the Freedom of the World," which was asserted to be so popular that, though the production is months old, some theatres have as yet been unable to get requested repeat dates, according to reports emanating from the Goldwyn offices.

Metro Engages Real War Heroes for Film

TWELVE wounded British and Canadian soldiers, who came to New York to boost the Fourth Liberty Loan drive—all men said to have participated in some of the severest fighting of the war—took part in the hospital scene for the forthcoming Screen Classics, Inc., production, "Wilson or the Kaiser?" by Maxwell Karger, which is now in course of production under the direction of Charles Miller.

The scene was made to represent one of the numerous Red Cross convalescent hospitals in England and many realistic touches were said to have been suggested by the interested "Tommies" themselves, such as the pinning of chevrons or decorations and other honors over the cots of the men who had won them. It was the first time that they had ever taken part in the making of a motion picture, except when filmed by the photographers who make the battlefront pictures.

Many of these men possessed, besides the numerous stripes which denote the number of wounds they have sustained, decorations of various kinds for valor and bravery shown on the field.

Altogether it was described as a scene both stirring and original, and Director Miller says that whenever the opportunity presents itself he is going to corral this young band of war heroes for his productions.

Serial Drive by Pathe Forces

Huge and Well Organized Campaign for Business on "Wolves of Kultur" Serial Planned by Pathe

PATHE believes in drives, in other words, in concentration. When the entire sales force concentrates superhuman efforts on one particular subject, and steadily hammers away at that subject for several weeks, they feel that there can be only one result.

For four complete weeks commencing November 3, every Pathe district manager, every Pathe branch manager, every Pathe salesman, every Pathe booker, every Pathe home office executive concerned with sales, has been instructed to "drive" on the Western Photoplay Company's patriotic serial "Wolves of Kultur," featuring Leah Baird, Sheldon Lewis and Charles Hutchison.

Pathe officials assert that former drives have been tremendously successful, and that the drive on "Hands Up," the Western serial featuring Ruth Roland and George Chesebro, resulted in booking records eclipsing every Pathe serial record to date.

Pathe in its sales drives is emulating many worthy examples set by the Liberty Loan Committee, the Y. M. C. A., the Knights of Columbus, the American Red Cross, etc. Drives are intended to be decidedly American in character and spirit and to typify the keen sense of "Yankee Hustle," and when carried out by Sales Manager Quimby it is declared that they cannot fail to go over the top.

During the Spanish influenza epidemic the Pathe sales force has had time to generate quite a lot of superfluous sales energy, it is said, and now that the ban is being lifted in various territories these men are going out with a will and a vim almost equal to the intensive spirit which carries the boys in France and Belgium over all obstacles, according to the Pathe publicity department.

Frank Keenan, Star of Pathe's "The Bells," Visited the Photographer to See How He Looks in "Everyday Life"

While it was unfortunate for "Wolves of Kultur" that the release date of episode No. 1 fell the very week when the influenza epidemic was at its worst, and when at least 90 per cent of the motion picture theatres in America had closed their doors, this sales drive from November 3 to 30 is expected to make up for all time lost during the quarantine.

"Just imagine," said one Pathe official, "somewhere near 250 keen, alert, aggressive, hustling American film salesmen all concentrating for four complete weeks on one specific subject! When the subject is such a serial as this patriotic fifteen episode continued photoplay 'Wolves of Kultur,' there cannot be any doubt as to the result of this sales drive."

Film Clearing House Prepares to Distribute

FRANK G. HALL, newly appointed supervising director of the recently organized Film Clearing House, Inc., announces that the company will immediately start the opening of exchanges in the various territories.

"Our exchanges will only supply the actual service connected with the physical distribution of pictures," declared Mr. Hall.

"No sales force will be maintained by the exchanges, the producers or groups of producers putting their bookings in charge of their own salesmen. Film Clearing House, Inc., will have no producing companies of its own, neither will it have any interest in, nor affiliation with them.

"It will maintain efficient business organizations in every territory for the handling of film, advertising matter, etc., and for the recording of bookings and making of collections for rentals, and it will supply offices and equipment for the sales organizations representing the different companies whose film it handles.

"But the pictures will at all times be under the actual control of their owners and a strict accounting of all bookings and all moneys will be made to the owners every week."

Among the other men prominent in the new organization is Ashbel P. Fitch, well-known New York lawyer and director of many large corporations. Mr. Fitch is president of Film Clearing House, Inc.

Colonel Jacob Ruppert, whose name has become prominent in sporting circles through the ownership of the Yankees of baseball fame, is one of the Board of Directors, while another familiar name on the board is that of William M. Seabury, one of the organizers and general counsel of the old Motion Picture Board of Trade, and, until recently, general counsel of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Walter N. Seligsberg, who has represented many leading film executives is one of the company's attorneys.

Film Story Credited with Wide Circulation

It is estimated by Louis B. Mayer that Owen Johnson's story of "Virtuous Wives," produced in motion pictures for distribution by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit as the first of the Anita Stewart special productions, has had a greater circulation in magazine and book form than any other screen adaptation of the year.

In addition to its box-office value on this point, Mr. Mayer stated that the combined advertising and publicity given to the story by the magazine and book publishers constitutes one of the greatest campaigns in the annals of merchandising popular fiction.

The story first appeared in Cosmopolitan Magazine. It was heralded by a national advertising campaign, which embraced newspapers, competing magazines, billboards, and countless special window displays in the stores of hundreds of book and magazine dealers throughout the country. It then ran serially, for ten months, occupying the major space and treated as the featured story in each of those issues.

"Successful advertising is the result of repetition, according to the generally accepted theory which practice has pretty well proven to be correct and a fact," said Mr. Mayer. "On the estimated basis of approximately five readers to a copy of a magazine, Cosmoplitan gave the story of "Virtuous Wives" each month, a total reading circulation of 7,500,000.

"Repeating this every month for almost a year gave an approximate total equivalent to three-quarters of the entire population of the United States."

"The Bells," Next Pathe, After Embargo

"The Bells," starring Frank Keenan, an Extra Selected Star Photoplay, which was pre-released at the Rialto, New York, and held from regular issue by the cessation, will be the first Pathe feature released after the period of discontinuance.

Sol Lesser Gets Official Film for California

Sol L. Lesser, chairman Division of United States Official War Films of the California State Council for Defense, will handle the distribution of "Under Four Flage," the third war feature picture of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information. Mr. Lesser has also handled the California distribution for "Pershing's Crusaders" and "America's Answer," the first two war pictures in the Government's "Following the Flag to France" series. The World Film Corporation, which handles the general distribution of "America's Answer" and "Under Four Flags," exempts California, Michigan, outside of Detroit, which is under the direction of the Michigan War Preparedness Board at Lansing, and North Dakota, which is handled by the North Dakota Council for Defense, at Bismark.

Goldwyn Concentrates on Service Department

During the period of no new releases Goldwyn's service men took advantage of the lull in activities, and it is announced that many new and novel promotion campaigns were conceived and prepared for forthcoming Star Series releases.

Previously issued advertising material was hauled from the filing cabinets and stock rooms and an analysis made of the merits and value of the literature issued. Reports from exhibitors also were carefully reviewed, and now, when every exhibitor in the country is determined to make up for lost time and forge ahead stronger than ever, it is declared that Goldwyn's Service Department is in a position now to offer even a better and more intensified service than heretofore.

World Announces "Just Sylvia" November 18

The resumption of releases by World Pictures will be made on November 18, on which day this company will present "Just Sylvia," with Barbara Castleton starring and Johnnie Hines featured. Others prominent in the cast are Jack Drumier, Gertrude Berkley, Anthony Merlo and Theresa Maxwell Conover. The story was written by Harry O. Hoyt and scenarioized by Hamilton Smith. It was directed by Travers Vale.

On November 25, Montagu Love will be the star in "The Grouch," which was written by Forrest Halsey. Dorothy Green is the heroine of this picture play dealing with the mystery of the Great Dismal Swamps. Oscar Apfel directed the picture. Prominent in the cast are Albert Hart and Margaret Lindon.

Adolphe Osso Secures Larger Offices

Adolphe Osso has taken larger offices in the Brokaw Building, 1457 Broadway, New York, and has added a new department for publicity and personal representative.

Mr. Osso is only twenty-five years old and came from France a few years ago to become manager of the agency of Oscar Osso for the Society of Dramatic Authors, Playwrights, Composers and Publishers of Music of France.

M. Leonce Perret, Albert Capellani, and Mme. Alice Blache are among those who have placed the handling of their affairs in Mr. Osso's hands. Dolores Cassinelli, star of "Lafayette, We Come," has also selected Mr. Osso as her personal representative.

Perret's next production starring Miss Cassinelli and E. K. Lincoln, and entitled "Stars of Glory," will be handled by Adolphe Osso. Among the picture rights he has already sold are: Maurice Maeterlinck's "Bluebird," Anatole France's "Thais," "The Marionette" by P. Pierre Wolff—in which Clara Kimball Young starred—"The Savage Woman" by Francis de Curel, in which Clara Kimball Young starred; "Elevation" by Henry Bernstein, sold to William A. Brady; "The Torches" by Henry Bataille, sold to Lester Lonengua and Messrs. Shubert.

Two Releases This Week by W. H. Productions

W. H. Productions Company announces the release this week of two subjects, one of the series of twenty-six single-reel Charlie Chaplin comedies entitled, "A Busted Johnny," former title, "Making a Living"; also another one of the series of two-reel Shorty Hamilton western comedy-dramas, entitled "Shorty's Clever Ruse," former title, "Shorty's Strategy."

Several territories are still open on the Hamilton series.

"A Busted Johnny" marks Charlie Chaplin's first appearance on the screen, and is declared to be one of the most distinctive and interesting Chaplin pictures.

"Shorty's Clever Ruse" is a two-reel western, with Shorty Hamilton as a cowboy.

Why Dixon Wrote "One Woman"

By Warren W. Lewis

WHAT are the views of Thomas Dixon, the man who wrote the internatonally known story from which Select Pictures adapted its great special attraction, "The One Woman"?

They are the views of a master mind; of a mind that gave to the world such products as "The Birth of a Nation," "The Leopard's Spots," and many other thrilling stories of human life. It took twenty years for Thomas Dixon to give the world "The One Woman."

A few days ago Thomas Dixon leaned back in a chair at his New York office and told why he wrote "The One Woman." The story treats with the situations of home life, and that is why he wrote it. He wanted to discuss home life from every angle.

Surprising as it may seem, "The One Woman" is not fiction; neither is it a story of Mr. Dixon's own life. When the book was first circulated there was a storm of criticism from every section of the country. Hundreds of Mr. Dixon's acquaintances immediately recognized what they thought was a faithful portrayal of his own career.

Mr. Dixon, like Frank Gordon in the story, was once a clergyman, an ordained minister of God. During the childhood of Mr. Dixon his father brought him up with the idea of making him a minister. Mr. Dixon was born in North Carolina and attended the schools in that state.

He studied everything from botany to politics, and was so successful in the latter estate that before he reached his twenty-first birthday he was elected to the legislature of North Carolina. Before that time, however, he attended Wake Forest College. Later he was a student at Johns Hopkins University, where he was a classmate of President Wilson.

Even while he was studying for the ministry Mr. Dixon was making a close study of Socialism. It was because of his close interest in this subject, and because of the fact that in 1898 he left the ministry, that people declared "The One Woman" to be a story of his own life.

But nothing could be further from the truth. "The One Woman" is merely a story of life as Mr. Dixon has seen it and studied it. That there is more truth than fiction in this masterful theme is evidenced by the fact that "The One Woman" is based on the actual experience of the late Rev. George D. Herron, a Socialistic preacher who married a beautiful woman and later fell in love with a wealthy member of his congregation. He left his wife and contracted a marriage with the new woman.

This man's marriage with the new woman was a marriage by proclamation—Free Love. It is the theme that furnishes the plot for "The One Woman."

As "The Birth of a Nation" dealt with the situation between the North and South at the close of the Civil War, so does "The One Woman" deal with Mr. Dixon's conception of Socialism. He has lectured on the subject, and has written short numbers for magazines and newspapers. All his life

Thomas Dixon, the Writer

Mr Dixon intended to become a writer, but he believed that the time for a man to write was after he had lived the part of his life that furnishes the romance for a story. Before he even wrote his first novel, he wrote and published six volumes on religious topics. Shortly after that he took up fictional writing.

Mr. Dixon doesn't wait for inspiration before writing a novel. His themes are bigger than themes that writers obtain through mere inspiration. All of his books are written the way he wrote "The One Woman" and "The Birth of a Nation." He takes from fifteen to twenty years to study his subject. It takes about a year to gather actual material. The writing is simple. It took Mr. Dixon a little longer than six weeks to type the pages for "The One Woman."

There are few writers who have the courage or ambition to work twenty years on a subject that they can put on paper in six weeks!

Mr. Dixon doesn't always work. He has his hours for play as well as any other man. His family occupies part of his time. The author of "The One Woman" is a family loving man. He has two sons and a daughter. One of his sons is now in the aviation corps. His daughter is married, while his other son is in charge of Mr. Dixon's winter home, a beautiful island of three thousand acres in North Carolina. Three months of every year Mr. Dixon and his family live on this island.

The other nine months Mr. Dixon lives in New York. He has a home on Riverside Drive at 160th street.

Mr. Dixon does his writing in New York. It is two years since he has published a book, but his latest, "The Way of a Man," will make its appearance about next January. The first copy went to his publisher the day the writer interviewed Mr. Dixon at his New York office. It is a story of modern feminism and the feminist movement. It discusses the changes that modern economics will bring to a woman's life. In a way "The Way of a Man" will be a sequel to "The One Woman."

In writing "The Birth of a Nation," as in writing "The One Woman," Mr. Dixon knew and studied his characters. He knew his subjects in "The Birth of a Nation" because he lived the life that he wrote about. His own father—a Baptist minister—was a leader of the Ku Klux Klan.

His personal friend, the Rev. Herron, was the man whose deeds furnished the material for the plot of "The One Woman."

Metro Discontinues Its Albany Exchange

Metro Pictures Corporation announces that in the future all of its business that has been handled from Albany will be taken care of by the New York and Buffalo offices of the company, the Albany branch having been discontinued October 22.

Mr. E. M. Saunders, special representative of Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., who has recently been on an extended tour of different cities in upper New York State in the interest of his companies, concluded the arrangements.

The change, Mr. Saunders declares, will work to the advantage of not only Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., but to the exhibitor as well, as the division of territory between these two big offices will bring the buyer in closer touch with the producing companies.

Peggy Hyland Films Next in Los Angeles

With five William Fox stars already in Los Angeles, it is probable that this number soon will be increased to six, as Peggy Hyland is expected to stage her next Excel Picture at Hollywood. It was written by Evelyn Campbell.

Harry Millarde, who directed Miss Hyland in her latest picture, "Caught in the Act," is expected to leave in the near future for Los Angeles.

William Fox stars already in Hollywood are Gladys Brockwell, Tom Mix, Madlaine Traverse and Jane and Katherine Lee. Miss Brockwell is engaged in filming "Shadows of Her Past" and Miss Traverse is at work on "The Danger Zone," her first Excel Picture, which will probably be released in December.

"Our Bridge of Ships" Shows Notables

An Illinois exhibitor, according to the General Film Company, said: "The marked local interest in 'Our Bridge of Ships,' the official war picture which drew big houses here, could be ascribed to two causes. One was the fact that the picture showed the tremendous scale upon which ships are being turned out, and the other the fact that our people were able to get a close-up view of the men who have been responsible for the success of the shipbuilding program, President Wilson, E. N. Hurley and Chas. M. Schwab."

Street Parade Heralds "Gerard" Feature

A street parade, headed by the local band and with members of the Liberty Loan Committee, prominent citizens and city officials as marchers was the overture given by A. W. Baker, manager of the Empress theatre, Chewelah, Wash., to his showing of "My Four Years in Germany."

Ambassador Gerard's picturization of his experiences with German militarism and disdain of the nation he represented in Berlin was obtained by Mr. Baker for Chewelah as the chief feature of a local gala day during the Fourth Loan drive.

The Chewelah Liberty Loan Committee arranged for a special afternoon matinee for children, so that the evening performances could be attended exclusively by adults, and the result was that Chewelah citizens purchased comparatively big quantities of bonds, and the Empress was said to be packed at every showing.

Clara Kimball Young in "Cheating Cheaters"

As soon as the print for "The Road Through the Dark" left the studio Miss Young commenced work on her next picture for Select. This is "Cheating Cheaters," a film adaptation of Max Marcin's stage play of the same name.

It is said that several changes will be made in the personnel of Miss Young's company, and the name of a new leading man may be announced next week.

"Virtuous Wives" Story Appeals, Says Mayer

"A story that will have a direct, intimate appeal for every girl and woman in the United States" is the description given by the producers to "Virtuous Wives," first of the special Anita Stewart productions made by Mr. Louis B. Salvation Army Story in Film

Famous Players Lasky Corporation to Make Salvation Army Production Featuring Evangeline Booth and Activities

Barbara Castleton, Leading Woman for William Faversham in "The Silver King," Paramount-Artcraft Special

NEGOTIATIONS were closed last week between Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of production, and Evangeline Booth, representing the Salvation Army, for the filming of a motion picture telling the story of the Salvation Army both in war and peace.

The story of the motion picture finds its basis in historical and in recently developed activities which reveal the Salvation Army as one of the most popular war work organizations of which the American troops have knowledge and declared to be a body of men and women who actually serve without considerations to the end that life may be made happier for those upon this earth and that a firm hope in life hereafter may be cherished by all.

In the production of this film the Famous Players-Lasky organizaiton will have the full co-operation of the Salvation Army. Commander Booth herself will appear in the picture as she discharges her regular daily duties and the story will be filmed with due reverence and respect the subject calls for.

Work on the film will be commenced in the near future, upon the termination of the present period of inactivity agreed upon by practically all of the film producers as a result of the influenza epidemic. The picture will be started in New York and finished at the Hollywood, California, studios of the producers.

Edward Jose, who directed many recent Paramount and Artcraft pictures, including "Private Peat" and the Enrico Caruso film "My Cousin" and "The Splendid Romance," will stage the Salvation Army production. The scenario is already written and every word of the script has been read and passed upon by Miss Booth.

Charles Edwin Whittaker, author of the scripts for "Love's Conquest," Lina Cavaliera's recent picture; "La Tosca," starring Pauline Frederick, and "Woman," wrote the story.

In connection with the production of this film, Mr. Lasky said: "The story of the Salvation Army in peace is scarcely less thrilling and inspiring than the story of the Salvation Army in war, and both of these phases will be covered by our production. Although the title of the film has not yet been decided upon, the story, apart from being a subject of intensely interesting theme, will teach a lesson without appearing to do so and at the same time prove of particular appeal to all persons in the service as well as the parents and friends of the boys 'over there.'"

Commander Booth, in speaking of the filming of this subject, said: "We have been besieged with requests from motion picture producers in connection with the staging of a photoplay based on the work of the Salvation Army. The Famous Players-Lasky organization, we felt, was best equipped to do such a motion picture full justice."

Zane Grey's Books Said to Be in Demand

The popularity of the books of Zane Grey, which is shown by the success of the two latest William Farnum pictures, "Riders of the Purple Sage" and "The Rainbow Trail," was emphasized recently in a letter written by Carl H. Milam, assistant to the director of the American Library Association.

"We simply cannot get enough of Zane Grey's books. The demand comes not only from the hospital libraries, but also from the forty-one large U. S. camps where there are American Library Association books in service in main library buildings and in nearly 1,500 branches and stations in Y. M. C. A. and K. of C. huts, barracks and messhalls; from 600 smaller army and navy camps, posts and stations; from the battleships and other vessels, on 120 of which we have placed books, and from the men overseas, where A. L. A. books are in service at over 200 distributing points."

Arrow Film Corporation to Re-issue Serial

After a quiet canvass among state rights exchanges as to the likely demand among exhibitors for a re-issuance in revised form of "The Twenty Million Dollar Mystery," the Arrow Film Corporation has determined to re-issue in ten two-reel episodes this serial, which was first issued in twenty episodes of two reels each.

The re-cutting and re-editing of the production is in the hands of Mr. Jesse J. Goldburg of the Arrow Film Corporation forces and it is expected that the work will be completed and the advertising matter ready to commence the delivery of the first episode about December 1 for the state rights market.

Jack Cohn Foresaw Jewel Special

Editor of Universal Weekly Saved Historic Scenes Used Eventually in the Jewel Special "Crashing Through to Berlin"

UNIVERSAL officials are giving Jack Cohn great credit for his foresightedness in providing the essential scenes responsible for making the special Jewel Feature, "Crashing Through to Berlin," a success. They call attention to what they term the clever editing which is so important a factor in a picture where so many elements enter.

It is stated that Jack Cohn, editor, is dean of camera news men, and has, since the war started more than four years ago, been saving "shots" that he thought would be profitably employed for a composite picture of this character later on. With prophetic vision, it is stated, he foresaw America's entry into the world war and was said to be the first editor of a news weekly to feature scenes destined to become historic; therefore when the success of the Allies, largely attributable to America's support, made certain our ultimate victory, he planned "Crashing Through to Berlin," and knew just where to lay his finger on the scenes.

There is declared to be no more widely acknowledged expert at cutting a picture than Mr. Cohn, who has literally grown up in the business. The manner in which the interest of the audience is sustained by showing the boys at the front and how they are being supported by their brothers at home in the industrial trenches is said to be attracting widespread comment.

"We have pandered too much in our attempts to capture the volatile public of today without bending our efforts towards a complete enfiladation of the solid public of tomorrow," said Mr. Cohn. "It is the primary duty of the editor to see that a subject 'gets over' at all costs, but the value of a picture as a whole can be immeasurably enhanced by a nice adjustment of the two elements of vivid and human appeal.

"It is possible, as I did in 'Crashing Through to Berlin,' to relate a subject up with some vital idea and give it a breadth and a depth which in addition to its vivid pictorial appeal will make it something which will not only impress for the moment but make it living in the minds of those who view it after months and even years."

First "Ralph Ince Film" Nearly Finished

Arthur H. Sawyer announces that the first "Ralph Ince Film Attraction" is rapidly nearing completion. The scenario is by Roy L. McCardell.

"We have a big story on a powerful theme with a real star and excellent cast."

Latest William Russell "Different" Western

Wiliiam Russell's latest picture is entitled "When a Man Rides Alone," and although this is a Western story, the American Film Company heralds it as a "decidedly different Western."

Mr. Russell carries the part of "Captain Bonfire," Chief of the Forest Rangers, while Olga Grey plays the part of a bandit's daughter, and Carl Stockdole appears as the half-breed bandit.

This production was made by the William Russell Productions for the American Film Company, and will be distributed through the Pathe exchanges, the same as the Margarita Fisher and Mary Miles Minter subjects.

From a brief synopsis the American describes the production of "When a Man Rides Alone" as centering around a shipment of gold which is waylaid and captured Indian fashion by the bandits. The deadly ring of circling horses, one of the favorite tactics of the red-skins is said to be used to great spectacular advantage in this picture and forms a fascinating opening scene.

Priscilla Dean Another Year with Universal

Announcement has just been issued by the Universal that a contract has been made with Priscilla Dean, by which this young star is re-engaged for a year, dating from January 1, 1919.

This news is simultaneous with a report that the story, "Raggedy Ann," by Charles W. Tyler, which appeared recently in the Detective Story Magazine, has been purchased as a forthcoming vehicle for Miss Dean.

Miss Dean's latest picture is "The Wildcat of Paris." She takes the role of an underworld queen in Paris, who leads the Apaches against the Hun invaders.

Other recent subjects featuring Miss Dean, are "The Velvet Hand," "The Brazen Beauty" and "Miss Doris, Safe Cracker," the latter of which will soon be released.

"Over the Rhine" Plans Ambitious Scenes

Fred J. Balshofer, producer of "Over the Rhine," which presents Julian Eltinge in a double role, has provided for two different endings.

Should the present German peace offensive be more than mere propaganda, Mr. Balshofer has an ending that is consistent, and should war continue, the production goes along stride for stride with the victorious American troops, right "Over the Rhine" and into Berlin.

For the big scenes showing the entry of the victorious troops into Berlin permission has been secured from the Government to make use of all the troops and equipment at Camp Kearney, near San Diego, California. A technical force is said to be already at work on a plot of ground adjoining Camp Kearney building an exact replica of Berlin's principal thoroughfare.

World Film Predicts Era of Prosperity

Immediately on receipt of the glorious news that Turkey had collapsed and that Austria was pleading for a cessation of hostilities, World Pictures took steps to observe the attitude of the public towards the theatres in New York City. The officials of the company said that they felt that here would be found an indication of how soon the motion picture producers as well as the exhibitors, might expect the full tide of prosperity for amusement enterprises that it was felt would come with the termination of this world-wide struggle.

World Pictures learned that, notwithstanding the deterrent influence of the influenza epidemic, the theatres in New York recorded an increase in box office takings of an average of four hundred per cent over the week previous. One ticket agency said their business reached on Friday $3,000 on the day, whereas a week ago they did less than $200 on the day.

Some of the theatres, in fact, seventy per cent of the theatres, on Saturday night had their standing room only signs out for the first time in many months.

"If this is the experience of theatres with the elimination of Turkey and Austria from the war, what will be the effect when Germany will be compelled to surrender unconditionally?" said one official.

Experienced showmen who have been connected with the theatre for many years are unanimous in the belief that we will have for the next three or four years the greatest era of prosperity for amusements ever known in the history of the world.

Universal Films Declared Popular at Manilla

Aguedo De Jesus, former poster manager of Universal at Manilla and now a sailor in the United States Navy, visited Universal headquarters and told the officials how their pictures were taking in the Philippines.

"The Filipinos love the movies," he said. "You ought to have been in Manila when 'The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin,' came to town. The picture stayed a week and the people just packed the theatre to see it. The box office receipts were over 1,500 pesos every night."

Advertising Drive for United

J. A. Berst Announces Plans of a Proposed Campaign of National Publicity for the Three United Stars

J. A. BERST, president of United Picture Theatres of America, has not allowed the enforced and unfortunate period of temporary quiescence to which the motion picture industry has fallen heir to check the energy and determination which has characterized and brought to success more than one of his enterprises in the past.

This is declared to be evidenced by the announcement that United has completed arrangements for a national publicity campaign which is expected to embrace every channel of exploitation calculated to promote the vogue and popularity of United stars and attractions with the public.

As an evidence of the sincerity of United's president's efforts, it is declared that United's nation-wide campaign has as its salient feature not, as might be expected, the direct exploitation of the United co-operative plan but, instead, the exciting of general public interest in its stars, a subject calculated both to be of universal appeal to the picture theatre patron and thus directly advantageous to the exhibitor.

To this end the campaign embraces both outdoor and newspaper and magazine as well as other fields of special publicity.

Arrangements are said to have been concluded by United for a remarkable billboard display in the following cities and their approaches, in all of which prominent locations have been secured: New York, Chicago, Boston, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, Cleveland, Detroit, Kansas City, Cincinnati, Denver, Washington, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Dallas, Buffalo, and Minneapolis among the principal cities, and ultimately will embrace all cities of prominence.

Strikingly attractive portraits of United Stars, Kitty Gordon and Florence Reed, with Dustin Farnum in characteristic cowboy costume, form the outstanding feature of what the United described as one of the finest and most remarkable attention-compelling twenty-four-sheets the lithographers have ever produced.

Fails to Exploit Authenticity of the Film

M. M. PROCHET, of the Italo-North American Commercial Union, has written a letter of protest to the First National Exhibitors' Circuit complaining about the text of the advertising copy used to exploit "Italy's Flaming Front."

His complaint is based on his opinion, formed by official knowledge, that exhibitors who are showing the production are not paying sufficient tribute to its authenticity in their local campaigns.

He quotes from the text of an ad used by the Parkview theatre of Johnstown, Pa., which in part reads: "Six reels of Italian scenes taken by a photographer incorporated in the army. The films are official inasmuch as they were taken with the consent of the Italian Government." This text was published in Italian and is Mr. Prochet's translation.

Commenting upon it, he wrote: "It seems to me that outside of misrepresenting the facts, this does so at a detriment to the value of the film. The scenes referred to were all taken by a military photographer (not by a photographer who was incorporated in the army), and the pictures are not "official insofar as taken with the consent of the Italian Government, but are a direct emanation of the Italian Government. They were taken by an official, recognized branch of the Italian army and handled and sent abroad by the Government itself."

Mr. Prochet makes the recommendation to First National that it suggest to all of its exhibitor-members the value of featuring strongly the fact that it is a genuine official pictorial document from the Italian Government and not merely "authorized by the Supreme Command."

This he defines as meaning only that individuals unattached in any capacity to the Italian army had been permitted to invade back areas with motion picture cameras and obtained negative to which the Supreme Command found no objections from a military standpoint.

Health Service Announced in Short Reels

The K. W. S. Distributing Company, Inc., of New York City, announces that it is producing a series of films under the title of "Healthograms," each one giving some hygienic advice calculated to benefit humanity.

It is stated that these health hints will be based on information supplied by prominent physicians, but that the health aids are portrayed in pictures which are given rather a humorous turn so that they may amuse as well as give valuable advice.

These Healthograms are to be released as "four-minute reels" in the very near future, according to the K. W. S. Company.

Gift Book Illustrated from Film Feature

For what is declared to be the first time, scenes from a motion picture production are being used to illustrate a de luxe Christmas gift book.

While movie stills have been utilized in getting out popular editions of novels, it is said that Dodd, Mead and Company's forthcoming edition of Maurice Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird" marks the first instance of photoplay scenes being given an artistic position of honor.

Twenty-four scenes from Maurice Tourneur's production of "The Blue Bird" are utilized in the exquisite holiday edition of the fantasy.

Thomas Bedding Handling "Hearts of Love"

"Hearts of Love," starring Edna Mayo, is handled by Thomas Bedding, formerly identified with "Civilization," "Cabiria" and "My Four Years in Germany."

H. A. Tansil is president of the American Feature Film Corporation which produced "Hearts of Love." The New York offices of the corporation are in the Candler Building.

Pioneer Film Announces State Rights Sales

According to the Pioneer Film Corporation the territories for "Wives of Men" are selling fast and they declare that it looks as if this attraction with Florence Reed starring in one of her greatest roles, will prove a big success from the box-office standpoint.

Herman Rifkin of the Eastern Feature Film Company of Boston have not only purchased the New England rights for "Wives of Men" but for "The Still Alarm" as well.

Maurice Less, general manager and president of The Lyric Film and Supply Co., bought the Indiana rights on "Wives of Men"; Arthur S. Hyman Attractions of Detroit, has just closed a deal for "Wives of Men" for the Michigan territory and the Strand Features of Detroit has purchased the rights to the same territory for "The Still Alarm."

Florence Reed Cast for First United

Tribune Productions, Inc., declares that the cast for Florence Reed's first picture for United is one of the strongest ever engaged for the support of any screen star.

It includes William Desmond, himself a star with releases current on Broadway; Alec Francis, well known on both the speaking and the screen stage; Robert Fraser, of Ben-Hur fame; Marcelle Roussillon, recently seen in Ethel Barrymore's support, and other capable artists to interpret the parts under John M. Stahl's direction.

The scenes of Miss Reed's latest picture are laid in Paris. Some exquisitely remarkable settings are promised, and for the exteriors access was obtained to an exclusive estate.

Tourneur Will Produce in California

Maurice Tourneur has just announced his intention of going to California for the winter, making his next three or four productions on the Coast. Mr. Tourneur will leave with his staff immediately after completing "My Lady's Garter," the adaptation of the late Jacques Futrelles' detective mystery romance now in course of filming.

It will be this director's first visit to the Coast. Mr. Tourneur has been producing in America for four years, all of his activities having been confined to the East.

"I am not making the trip particularly on account of unfavorable conditions, such as may be due to a possible coal shortage and so on," says Mr. Tourneur. "I want to work on bigger subjects in a bigger way and I believe that California offers the right opportunity."

The distribution arrangements for "Woman," "My Lady's Garter" and forthcoming Tourneur productions are in the hands of Hiller & Wilk, Inc.

Taylor Secures Studio at Los Angeles

Charles A. Taylor Studios, Inc., is the name given a new firm organized by this well-known man of theatrical circles, who is author of a number of stage productions and has been identified with the film industry for the past two years or more.

He has leased a studio at 1745 Allesandro street, Los Angeles, and here is producing a film at present titled "The Girl and the Horses." Considerable mystery surrounds the filming of this picture, as the name of the star is being closely guarded.

Frank Mayo has been brought out from New York to play the opposite lead, and others in the cast are George Gebheart, Dell Boone and Claire McDowell. Charles A. Taylor is author of the story and is personally directing the production.

B. L. James and William E. Fildew are in charge of the photography. James Tynan has been engaged to direct the publicity and advertising.

Gloria Joy Is the First Star of Mission Productions, Recently Formed on the West Coast

Katterjohn Films Pledge Consistent Productions

In the production of Katterjohn Films for the coming year, it is asserted that special attention is to be given to the development and treatment of the stories produced, to the providing of exactly the locations or sets called for by the script, and to the selection of the players who will interpret the various roles.

These three points are said to have long been a particular hobby of Monte M. Katterjohn, the active head of the new producing organization, and in the special productions which he is about to undertake he announces the fullest exploitation of his ideas along these lines.

Pre-Leases Announced for Stewart Film

First National announces that on the first Anita Stewart production the advance reports from the exchanges indicate that the pre-release contracts for "Virtuous Wives" will be extremely great in number and that the majority of them will be for extended runs, with an almost unprecedently small number of one-day bookings for the first ninety days.

"Virtuous Wives" is proving to be one of the best commercial titles of the year, according to reports received from a number of exchanges as a comment on their early contracts for the first special Anita Stewart production made by Mr. Louis B. Mayer.

General Makes Changes in Several Cities

James B. Kelly of the Dallas branch, General Film, has two "posterettes," who are Blanche Corley and Catherine Rogers. Manager Foland of Kansas City has also a poster girl, Miss Rose Probasco.

As the work behind the counter, handling lithographs, etc., entails considerable activity, the girls wear overalls. They are enthusiastic over their duties and are said to be proving very efficient.

Sol Davis, who has been with General Film Company five years, has just been appointed assistant manager of the Dallas office.

Goldwyn Announces New Release Schedule

GOLDWYN announces that the fact of its releasing a Rex Beach and Geraldine Farrar production only two weeks apart immediately after the embargo is lifted will greatly stimulate business for the theatres.

"Two productions of such powerful box office calibre are certain to prove effective in again restoring theatre patronage to high-tide proportions in all localities," says a Goldwyn official.

The new release dates and the productions and stars scheduled are:

November 17: Tom Moore in "Thirty a Week," by Thompson Buchanan; directed by Harry Beaumont.

November 24: Mabel Normand in "A Perfect 36," by Tex Charwate; directed by Charles Giblyn.

December 1: Geraldine Farrar in "The Hell Cat," by Willard Mack; directed by Reginald Barker.

December 8: Madge Kennedy in "A Perfect Lady," by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf; directed by Clarence G. Badger.

December 15: Rex Beach's great international comedy-drama, "Too Fat To Fight"; directed by Hobart Henley.

Tom Moore in "Thirty a Week" had its only American pre-release showing at S. L. Rothapfel's Rialto theatre before the recent ban on new releases and is declared to have scored a big success.

Government Activities in "Over the Rhine"

Government sanction has been gained by Fred Balshofer to take many scenes at March Field, Riverside, California, for his forthcoming production, "Over the Rhine," starring Julian Eltinge.

So at sunrise one morning Mr. Eltinge, his two cameramen and Fred Balshofer, the director of the picture, arrived on the field just as 102 superb specimens of American aeroplanes, fresh from the Wright-Martin and other equally famed factories, piloted by their respective commanders, were marshalled into battle array.

Next Joyce-Vitagraph Is "Everybody's Girl"

"Everybody's Girl" will be the first Vitagraph release after the embargo. This is a Blue Ribbon feature starring Alice Joyce and is an adaptation from O. Henry's story entitled "Brick Dust Row."

It is directed by Tom Terries and is the first of eight productions in which Miss Joyce will be presented by Vitagraph during the current year.

Other Blue Ribbon features in which she will be seen are "The Cambric Mask," "The Lion and the Mouse" and "The Captain's Captain."

Caruso's Screen Debut After Embargo

With the lifting of the embargo on releasing, Famous Players-Lasky offers Enrico Caruso in his screen debut, "My Cousin."

Edward Jose directed the production and the story is by Margaret Turnbull.

Other productions scheduled for release the same day are Billie Burke's newest Paramount picture, "The Make-Believe Wife," and Bryant Washburn's first Paramount offering, "The Gypsy Trail." Miss Burke's vehicle is an adaptation by Adrian Gil-Spear of Edward Childs Carpenter's story.

Ralph Ince Attraction in Work

The First Ralph Ince Film Attraction to Be Released Under the S-L Banner Is Now Being Produced

AFTER many months of careful preparation the first Ralph Ince Film Attraction to be released by Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin of the recently organized S-L Pictures, is in work.

Mr. Ince, in talking over the new organization with some friends, said recently: "I have now come to the point toward which I have aimed consistently through years of hard endeavor. Such success as I have had is crowned with new hope of bigger things to come. No conditions could be better than those under which I go on with my new work.

"Heartened by the enthusiasm of my friends and the confidence of my financial backers, every ounce of effort I can command will be brought to bear on the new productions.

"The exhibitors may feel assured that everything I have to give of intelligence, imagination and hard work will be in their new productions. And particularly I wish now to invite the severest criticism of my friends, the exhibitors.

"He who criticizes my work with the fiercest honesty and severity will be my best friends, for it is only from the exhibitor who has his ear constantly to the ground that I can hope to gather criticism of constructive value for future work.

"I am peculiarly pleased by the addition to our circle of Mr. Conrad Milliken, formerly vice-president of the Petrova Picture Company. I have worked under Mr. Milliken's management when he was associated with McClure's and have come to rely greatly on his friendship and judgment.

"We have complete sympathy in our ideas in regard to the purely creative side of the work, and I have the greatest respect for his vision of the broader aspects of the industry. I am glad that he is to have so much to do with the forging of our picture plans.

"In E. K. Lincoln we have captured a star of the first magnitude. His first appearance in motion pictures was under my direction and I have always entertained a very high opinion of his abilities and purposes. I have watched his work for a long time with keen interest and feel that he has few, if any, rivals in sustained interpretation of all that is fine and virile in American young manhood.

"The powerful theme of the story selected for the first picture in which Mr. Lincoln is to play the leading part, gives us both one of the unusual opportunities in which director and actor rejoice and it remains now only to deliver our best wares to the exhibitor whose confidence and approval is our single aim. The exhibitor is our judge."

"Keep the Home Fires Burning" Universal

AFTER months of preparation, the American Defense Society and Universal Film Mfg. Company announces the completion of a super film presenting a narrative of America's war and peace power.

The film shows, in effect, how the nation accomplished the military and industrial salvation of humanity in its struggle against Hundom, and how it is equipped now to achieve infinite good for the world.

"Keep the Home Fires Burning" is the title of the production. It is declared to be a great spectacle, and the very first of what may be called victory films. It is, in effect, the screen story of America's conquest.

The picture will be issued as an official message of the American Defense Society, with the heartiest support of that organization and all its executive leaders.

Several nationally prominent men are said to have originated the basic ideas of the production. They collaborated for weeks during their vacation in devising the general plan of what they hoped would be an epical review of the nation's rise to world leadership, and then enlisted the film experts and Defense Society into the undertaking. The work of production started immediately.

It is said that cameramen and film scientists were dispatched to many parts of the country to collect scenes and spectacles for the film, and that more than a hundred cameras were employed.

"Keep the Home Fires Burning" was made at the Universal studios by Harry Levey, manager of the Industrial Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, under the direction of the American Defense Society.

Parsons Returns to Coast

"Smiling" Billy Parsons, general manager and treasurer of the National Film Corporation of America, has started back to the West Coast to resume the production of his Capitol comedies and supervise other production activities at the National studios.

While in New York Mr. Parsons closed his metropolitan offices. The Robertson-Cole Company is now handling all National interests, as well as controlling the world releasing of the National's forthcoming Billie Rhodes and Henry B. Walthall series.

"Far Flung Battle Line" Shows Many Airmen

"The Far Flung Battle Line," No. 12, released by Pathe the week of Nov. 17, shows the armored dreadnaughts that speed over the water and rise like great birds into the sky.

This collection of official pictures is called "British Flying Ships," and indicates how the training of naval air men, as shown in previous pictures, reaches perfection for the perilous and hazardous work.

Bedding Handles New Organization

It was announced this week that Thomas Bedding has assumed charge of the New York offices and business of the American Feature Film Corporation, Inc., of Greenville, S. C. As general sales manager of that company he will be found in Suite 616, Candler building, 220 West Forty-second street, New York, handling the foreign rights of a new production, "Hearts of Love," starring Edna Mayo.

"I am staking my twenty-five years' reputation and experience in the motion picture business," said Mr. Bedding, "on the future of this picture. As you know, I have been identified with some big offerings—'Cabiera,' 'Civilization,' and 'My Four Years in Germany' among them. 'Hearts of Love' is in their class. Edna Mayo, Gladden James, Frederick Truesdell and Fred Hearn are in the cast.

"For the United States and Canada 'Hearts of Love' will be released on the General Film program. My present business is to dispose of the foreign rights.

"I have already had several bids and offers for rights in various parts of the world and this before the picture has been publicly shown.

"'Hearts of Love' is entirely an American picture; American in theme and sentiment; made with American money; directed and acted by Americans.

"H. A. Tansill is president of the American Feature Film Corporation. The main offices are at Greenville, S. C., and the company is financially strong.

"'Hearts of Love' will be followed by other big productions."

Pantages Praises Serial, Pathe's "Hands Up"

Pathe is proud, so it is stated, of the record made by the Ruth Roland serial, "Hands Up," and declares that it has not only broken the records made by other Pathe serials in bookings, but that Alexander Pantages, head of the big circuit bearing his name, writes under date of October 25 as follows:

"The Pathe serial, 'Hands Up,' is a very elaborate and well staged production, containing many exciting episodes. Your star, Ruth Roland, makes a big appeal. I like her in this picture very much. 'Hands Up' is playing first run in all my theatres and until the influenza epidemic had broken our serial records everywhere."

Brady's "Little Women" at Strand Theatre

At the Strand theatre in New York City the William A. Brady production of Louisa M. Olcott's story, "Little Women," is shown. Harley Knoles directed the picture and the cast shows that Jo will be portrayed by Dorothy Bernard, Meg by Isabel Lamon, Beth by Lillian Hall, and Amy by Florence Flinn. Henry Hull of "The Man Who Came Back," will play John Brooke, and Conrad Nagel of "Experience" and "The Man Who Came Back," will play Laurie.

Paramount-Artcraft Will Have Twelve Specials

Paramount-Artcraft specials will number twelve instead of nine because of the success the Famous Players-Lasky Company considers those already issued have enjoyed.

"The Hun Within" and "Private Peat" are pointed out as two exceptionally successful productions and Maurice Tourneur's "Sporting Life," the third Paramount-Artcraft special will be released November 24.

Two other specials have already been completed. They are "The False Faces," a picturization by Thomas H. Ince of the thrilling story by Louis Joseph Vance, and "The Silver King," a screen version of the most successful melodrama in the history of the stage.

In "The False Faces" Henry B. Walthall has the leading role of "The Lone Wolf," while in "The Silver King" William Faversham is starred, with Barbara Castleton as his leading support.

The sixth Paramount-Artcraft special will be a John Emerson-Anita Loos production titled "When the Boys Come Home."

"Huns" Object to Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs

Emphasis was given to the Anti-Yellow Dog Club movement and indirectly to the Jewel Productions film, "The Yellow Dog," last week by a report said to have been received from some one on the Western front.

Germany is declared to have made this campaign in America the subject of special notice.

It is said that many of the Huns take notice of the movement with editorial statements published in the paper, America in Europe, which is printed in English and left behind by the Germans in their retreat from Northern France.

The remarks appear under the title, "The Boy Detective to the Rescue." They ridicule the organization of American boys into Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs to combat German propaganda and disloyalty in this country.

Alice Joyce Recovers and Returns to Studio

Alice Joyce has recovered from her recent illness and has returned to the Vitagraph studio.

Her next release will be "Everybody's Girl," and this will be followed by "The Captain's Captain." In addition to these, she has also recently completed work in a Robert W. Chambers story, "The Cambric Mask," and is now in the midst of work on the early scenes of "The Lion and the Mouse."

During the height of the influenza and pneumonia epidemic in New York Miss Joyce was taken ill, and it was feared she might be a victom of one or both of the dread afflictions. She was only ill a few days, however, and soon was well enough to take a trip to Virginia, where she has fully recovered her strength.

Henry Walthall Could Not Escape the Camera Man When He Signed a Contract Recently with Robertson-Cole. The Contented Looking Man at the Right Is Walter Hoff Seely, and the "Witnesses" Are W. W. Aronson and "Smiling Bill" Parsons

Walthall Signs with National

National Film Corporation Contracts for Exclusive Services of Henry B. Walthall—Released Through Robertson-Cole Company

THE National Film Corporation of America has signed a contract with Henry B. Walthall for the exclusive services of the star for an extended period. The definite signing of Mr. Walthall follows close upon the deal by which the Robertson-Cole Company takes over the National Film Corporation interests, handling for the entire world the eight Billie Rhodes pictures, as well as the forthcoming series of Walthall dramas.

According to present plans Walthall will make four or five dramatic pictures during the next twelve months. William Parsons, general manager and treasurer of the National Film Corporation, declares that Mr. Walthall will receive one of the highest salaries of any individual male star in the motion picture world. Several stars may receive greater remuneration through the fact that they own their own producing organizations, but Mr. Walthall will take first place among salaried stars, declares Mr. Parsons.

The film star has just scored a personal hit in the spoken drama, "The Awakening," at the Criterion theatre in New York, and Mr. Parsons declares that every metropolitan critic commented enthusiastically upon his remarkable performance.

Mr. Walthall will return immediately to the National coast studios to begin work on his first feature of the series.

Walthall scored one of his first big hits in Griffith's "Judith of Bethulia," the first American feature production, and he followed it with his famous depiction of the little colonel in that screen classic, "The Birth of a Nation."

Musical Score Completed for "Common Cause"

The music score for "The Common Cause," the production of J. Stuart Blackton, which is soon to be released through the Vitagraph distributing organization, has been completed and was played for the first time last week.

Commodore Blackton and a party of invited guests, which included a number of prominent musicians, heard the music played by its composer, Manuel Klein, in the home office projection room of the Vitagraph distributing organization at 1600 Broadway.

Mr. Klein, who is said to be one of the best known musicians and composers, was director at the New York Hippodrome for ten years, and he was selected by Commodore Blackton as the man to give "The Common Cause" a musical setting commensurate with what he considered the importance of the production.

From the offices of the Vitagraph distributing organization comes the announcement that plans are maturing.

Billie Rhodes to Have World Exploitation

The Robertson-Cole Company, which lately has acquired a number of important features for world-wide distribution, is planning an exploitation campaign covering two hemispheres for Billie Rhodes, the new star of the National Film Corporation.

Last week announcement was made that the Robertson-Cole Company had concluded a deal whereby it will handle for the entire world, including the United States, the National's series of eight Billy Rhodes pictures, along with the Henry B. Walthall pictures to be produced by the same concern.

Robertson-Cole have immediately started outlining a big campaign across country and through other lands. One of the first steps will be a special New York presentation for the trade.

The first Billie Rhodes picture is "The Girl of My Dreams," to be followed by a circus girl story. Miss Rhodes has completed the second production.

E. K. Lincoln Will Star in S-L Pictures

Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin have announced that E. K. Lincoln will be starred in a series of big specials under their S-L Pictures trademark, production starting this week on the first, which will be a Ralph Ince Film Attraction, personally directed by that creator of film spectacles.

"The combination of E. K. Lincoln and Ralph Ince is a formidable one, which should bring forth money-getting productions," declared Mr. Sawyer.

"Mr. Lincoln has now a place of esteem in the eyes of the public, who remember him as the star of 'For Freedom of the World,' 'Lafayette We Come,' and many other successes."

Mr. Lincoln stated that he felt particularly gratified at being associated with S-L Pictures, and under the direction of Mr. Ince.

"Big films are the only thing today," declared Mr. Lincoln. "I have always wanted to be associated with an independent producing organization which had the courage to break away from any certain scheduled number of releases, and whose aim was solely to put out films of stupendous importance. Mr. Sawyer and Mr. Lubin both have the right idea—not to make many, but to make good pictures.

"The part which I play in the first special, which we are just starting, offers me the biggest opportunity I have ever had to portray American manhood in its ideal form. We are all bound to secrecy as to the topic of the picture. I can only say that its theme is far-reaching and of international importance, and I think it is the greatest scenario I have ever read.

"Years ago I was under Mr. Ince's direction in the Vitagraph studios. I have always been an ardent admirer of his artistry and I consider him one of the greatest directors of the day. He has a fine perception for the dramatic, a keen insight into human nature, and the most perfect sense of the fine points of detail that I have ever observed in a director."

Ince Will Soon Occupy His New Studios

According to report from the Pacific Coast, the new studios being erected for Thomas H. Ince at the former home of the producer, Culver City, will soon be ready for occupancy, and it is possible that Thanksgiving will see the companies and the executives installed there safely.

The present quarters of the Ince people at the old Biograph studio, near Pico street, Los Angeles, have been outgrown and it was essential to secure more commodious quarters. The Culver City plant will be easily accessible, it is said, and afford all the room needed for any purpose.

Blackton Will Announce Distribution Shortly

In response to many requests received by J. Stuart Blackton concerning his new feature, "Safe for Democracy," which was the principal attraction at S. L. Rothapfel's Rivoli theatre, Commodore Blackton states that details of his distribution plan for this production will be completed and announced shortly. The run of the picture at the Rivoli was a pre-release showing, and no release date has yet been set.

"Safe for Democracy," which is founded on the "work-or-fight" law, was just completed by Commodore Blackton, and its first screening was immediately booked by Mr. Rothapfel. Mitchell Lewis is starred, and the supporting cast includes Ruby de Remer, Ida Darling, Helen Ferguson, John C. Wade, John H. Goldsworthy, Sidney D'Albrook, Gus Alexander, Eugene Strong and Aubrey Beattie.

Big House for "Belgium, Kingdom of Grief"

"Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief," was shown to a full house at the Institute of Art and Science in Brooklyn, according to report.

They engaged the picture for their members for two shows, the next one to be on November 30. It is said that several thousand members had to be turned away for lack of seats for the first showing.

Everybody is declared to have expressed themselves as very highly pleased with the film. For about two weeks in advance all seats were sold and those who wished to buy seats for the showing had to be turned away as there were no more seats to be procured, it is said.

Mary Boland, in "A Woman's Experience," Bacon-Backer Production Booked at the Rialto

A Man's Experience Getting "A Woman's Experience" Into the Rialto

During the coming week the Bacon-Backer production, "A Woman's Experience," will hold stellar position on the screen of New York's Rialto. This announcement is interesting in more ways than one. In the first place the Bacon-Backer pictures are independent and, as Gerald F. Bacon of that producing company rightfully opines, if S. L. Rothapfel sees fit to go out of his way and secure a picture produced by such a company, then indeed is it worthy of consideration from other big men of the country. And in the second place this little announcement leads to a statement of the manner in which "A Woman's Experience" was booked.

Mr. Bacon knew very well that he had a good picture and he felt more certain of it when the trade press came out and told him the same thing. So one day Mr. Bacon called up Mr. Rothapfel and told him that he had a picture to show him and Mr. Rothapfel dared him to come around with it.

So Mr. Bacon did. Mr. Rothapfel had a bad cold. Mr. Bacon felt uneasy. "Mind you," he said to the NEWS, "when a man's feeling good, I'll stake my product at odds but you know, when you see a man red eyed and sniffling with the influenza at its height, you sort of have the feeling that you are going in to attend your own funeral. That's how I felt."

And Mr. Rothapfel sat back in his chair and the picture was run. At the end of the first reel the manager straightened up. It had gone five hundred feet or more and he was quite chipper. When the second reel was done he turned to Mr. Bacon and said, "Jerry, you have a great picture!" Mr. Bacon knew he had, but he didn't expect this from a man with a cold at the end of the second reel. But Mr. Rothapfel isn't the kind to say a thing's great when it isn't. So Mr. Bacon brightened up. The funeral was turning into a celebration after all.

When "A Woman's Experience" had run its length Mr. Bacon was given the choice of either the Rialto or the Rivoli for either one of two weeks. He picked the Rialto for the week of November 10. And he went out feeling unusually warm around the heart.

Why shouldn't he? A booking in one of Rothapfel's theatres for an independent company is worth much and, while Mr. Bacon isn't saying much, he knows full well that there are men of Mr. Rothapfel's judgment and ability in other cities, men who won't allow a good thing to pass by without an effort.

When we all began kidding about the wheatless days and meatless days, and all the other 'less days, we never dreamed it would come to the showless days, but here we are, so why worry about it?

Fears were entertained this week that Bert Lennon was ill, for he had not invented a "sensation" for nigh on to ten days—and just then the 'phone rang, and Bert's raspy voice began disheveling the delicate mechanism.

Inasmuch as Miss Gordon completed a production on Monday, and was not to return to the studio until Friday, it is presumed the publicity department will say something about "Kitty's back." We have just emptied the waste-basket.

If an order is ever issued providing that all employes at the Griffith plant shall wear masks, Bill Keefe claims he'll be the handsomest man of the organization, providing, of course, the mask is large enough, and every one of HOOKUM'S staff concur with him in this statement.

In the Lasky Studio publicity department it was said this week the quality of Hollywood HOOKUM had been materially lowered for the publication had not in many weeks contained the names of K. McGaffey and A. Hull Shirk. The supposition is that HOOKUM is now as good as it ever was.

The secret is out. A HOOKUM sleuth this week discovered how Jack Cunningham can turn out five reel continuities hourly, daily, weekly, as he sees fit. (Inside stuff to scenearioists—Jack has two mills, both Underwoods. When the bearings of one get hot, he shifts the yellow sheet into the other, and but a second's time is lost. Try this on your next continuity.)

J. "Pep" McGowan couldn't find a man who would make a high dive for him, as all candidates said they would rather be affected by the tail end of the work or fight order in preference to doing such stunts, so J. "Pep" did it himself, and had it not been for the water being shallow and he wearing a large amount of hair off the top of his head on the nice soft sand, he would have performed the dive perfectly. As it was, he secured another good excuse for having his head shaved.

NOTICE TO READERS

HOOKUM did not cease publication, and this is therefore fair warning that it shall continue in its duties of enlightening the world. One edition slipped a cog, owing to a number of Flu germs congregating in the sanctum and making publication impossible. The entire staff, including the devil, having regained usual health by the aid of the sunshine of California (Chamber of Commerce, please note the boost). But HOOKUM hereby goes on record with a definite statement. When one has the Flu, ones knows that he has had the Flu. The man who says he thinks he has had the Flu, can therefore be put down as a poor guesser. The office cat will swear to any of the above statements.

GRIFFITH EXPLAINS

In the hope that a definite statement from the greatest authority on matters of filmdom might be secured to forever settle the momentous question confronting screen fans and film workers, Mr. David Wark Griffith was this week asked by HOOKUM to tell why the wheels of vehicles appear to turn backward. The noted producer condescended to investigate and make an exhaustive report, said report coming to HOOKUM office this week.

"The best way to retreat," Mr. David Wark Griffith said, "is to go forward. This I believe applies to the question you gave me to solve, and also to conditions 'Over There.'"

This answer by Mr. Griffith indicates he has given the subject deep consideration, and we refer all future inquiries to his reply. The question is settled.

About Metro Players

Bert Lytell, Metro star, and one of the leaders of the film industry in the Fourth Liberty Loan campaign in Los Angeles, this week received his appointment to the officers' training school at Fort McArthur, Waco, Texas, where he will go soon to try for a commission. Lytell recently finished his latest film-play for Metro, titled "The Spender." During the filming of this play he worked at nights for the success of the big Liberty Loan, appearing in theatres and anywhere he was needed. His address to the thousands of people gathered at tank Victory on Metro night was a notable appeal. He is one of the best-liked stars in the Los Angeles film colony, and his friends expect him to return with a captaincy or even a major or colonel's commission. Mrs. Lytell, who is known to the theatrical world as Evelyn Vaughan, will remain on the family ranch at Napa. She expects to do her bit by becoming a farmerette.

Edwin Carewe, director, and his brother, Finis Fox, also a writer, returned to the Metro studios this week from the East. Mr. Carewe was the director of the late Harold Lockwood. When Lockwood died recently in New York, Mr. Carewe was selected to direct the pictures of Viola Dana, who is expected to arrive soon on the Pacific Coast. It is an odd coincidence that as soon as he was given this work Miss Dana's husband, John Collins, died of influenza. According to reports reaching the Pacific Coast Miss Dana has the malady in New York.

Fox Studio Doings

Jane and Katherine Lee, the William Fox child stars, have arrived in Los Angeles, and they are at the Hollywood Hotel with their mother, Mrs. Irene Lee. They will not begin making their first picture on the coast until the influenza ban is lifted, and that is expected to occur sometime in November. Arvid E. Gillstrom, who has directed the children in their three last pictures in the East, is also in Los Angeles. He will handle the megaphone in the new picture.

The title of the new Madlaine Traverse picture now being produced at the Fox studios is "The Danger Zone." Scenes in the picture have been taken in the Majestic Theater, the courthouse, and the Midwick Country Club will also be shown in the scenes. It is announced that the production will be finished within the next two weeks.

Because he was behind in his schedule the Henry Lehrman comedy production continues in full force at the Fox-Lehrman comedy lot. Mr. Lehrman has four companies at work this week.

Henry Lehrman, of the Lehrman Sunshine comedies, this week announced that he had engaged an orang-outang by the name of Joe, who will appear before the camera in the role of a laugh-getter. He is cast for a part in "The Fatal Marriage," a new comedy. Joe is called upon to express his opinion of a German in this production. According to those producing the film Joe expresses this opinion to the satisfaction of all patriotic Americans.

Fred Fishback has completed a new Henry Lehrman Sunshine comedy in which Mack Swain is the star. It is a satire on western drama. Ethel Teare is the leading woman.

Paramount-Artcraft

Director-General Cecil B. deMille has started the only new production now in the making at the Famous Players-Lasky studio. No name has been selected for this. Elliott Dexter will play the male lead, and Gloria Swanson has been engaged to play opposite. Others in the cast are Sylvia Ashton, Julia Faye and Theodore Roberts.

Work will be resumed shortly on the Bryant Washburn Paramount subject which was stopped when the star, his director, Donald Crisp, and leading woman, Margery Wilson, were all three taken ill with influenza.

The Norma Talmadge Select Company is now at work at the Lasky studio making "The Heart of Wetona." Sid Franklin is the director, and Tom Meighan leading man.

Ethel Clayton this week finished her latest screen effort, and it has been titled "Mickey Van." It is a detective story, and was directed by Robert Vignola. The theme was provided by Carolyn Wells. Emery Johnson is the leading man, and other members of the cast are Noah Berry and T. N. Geldert. Miss Clayton will now begin her four weeks' vacation.

Universal Newsettes

Ruth Clifford this week completed her newest Bluebird production titled "Home James." It is a light comedy-drama and was directed by Elsie Jane Wilson. The story was written by Gladys E. Johnson and Katherine Carr prepared the scenario. Members of the cast included Al Ray, cousin of Charles Ray, playing opposite the star; Lee Harry Holden, Margaret Cullington, Clifford Gray and John Cossar.

"Riders of Vengeance" is the temporary title of the latest western melodrama to be completed by Harry Carey for Universal. The picture was directed by Jack Ford, while the story was written by the star and director and put into scenario form by Eugene P. Lewis. The leading feminine role is played by Seena Owen, former Griffith star. The supporting cast is composed of Joseph Harris, J. Farrell McDonald, Alfred Allen, Jennie Lee and Clita Gale.

Allen Holubar, Universal director, was this week made an honorary member of "Fragments of France," a club organized in Los Angeles by returning Allied soldiers. He was given this honor because of the popularity of "Carry On," a film-play produced under his direction.

The real name of Dorothy Phillips was Dorothy Gwendolyn Strible before she married Allen Holubar, her director, according to her own announcement this week. She says she assumed the name of Dorothy Phillips to fool her friends when she made her debut with a Baltimore stock company, and that she has used the stage name ever since. She will soon complete her new picture "Destiny" at the Universal studios.

Here and There

Mission Productions, Inc., whose organization was recently announced, will by the end of the week have completed the first picture which features Little Gloria Joy, child actress of six years, who has had a number of releases. Sherwood Macdonald is in charge of directing this little star, and the company's first offering will be "Send Him Away with a Smile." Doris Lee, who has played opposite Charles Ray in a number of Ince productions, was loaned by the Ince studios for the lead in this picture playing opposite Charles Spere. Important character parts are taken by Frank Whitson and Eugenie Forde.

One of the strongest casts selected by any west coast film company is that picked by General Manager Harry Garson for the Clara Kimball Young Select picture. "Cheating Cheaters," adapted from the stage play of the same name by Max Marcin. Jack Holt will play opposite Miss Young, Nocholos Dunaew will take the part of Tony, and other principals engaged are Edwin Stevens, Tully Marshall, Frank Campeau, Anna Q. Nilsson, Fredrick Burton, Mayme Kelso, Eleanor Hancock, Joseph Singleton, W. A. Carroll and others. Alan Dwan, who for the past severtal months has been directing Douglas Fairbanks, will be in charge of the direction of this and future releases of Miss Young.

Madge Kennedy, Goldwyn star, has left New York and will arrive in Los Angeles the latter part of this week, it was announced by local Goldwyn connections last Tuesday.

A Method of and Apparatus for Neutralizing Distortion in Optical Projections*

By Dr. Daniel F. Comstock

IN the art of optically projecting upon a screen a magnified image of a photograph or other transparency, it has become the custom to place the optical lantern above the level of the point upon the screen which coincides with the middle of the picture, in order that the lantern may occupy less valuable space in the theatre or hall than the point immediately opposite the screen, which is usually required for seating purposes.

It is also customary to place the screen in an upright position substantially perpendicular to the normal line of vision for the average spectator. When the projector is situated above, or to one side of, the normal to the screen surface, the resulting obliquity of incidence of the projected beam produces a distortion effect on the screen known as the "keystone" effect, so called because a rectangular figure at the object, or transparency, is distorted, in the projected image, to a figure resembling an inverted keystone. This keystone effect is due to the fact that all parts of the screen where it intersects the rays are not equidistant from the projection lens, or, in other words, the central ray is not normal to the screen; and since the rays of the beam leaving the projector diverge from the projector, the image on those parts of the screen more remote from the projector will be magnified to a greater extent than those parts nearer the projector. Moreover, the sharpness of definition also suffers from this obliquity, as will be pointed out later.

By the method and means described in the following paragraphs, however, the keystone and other distortion may be counteracted without substantially impairing the definition. In ordinary practice the transparency to be projected upon the screen is placed perpendicular to the optical axis of the projecting lens, and a little farther away from the lens than its principal focus, and the light from an electric arc or other illuminant is passed through the transparency and the lens. Under these circumstances, assuming for the moment a perfect lens, an ideal or mathematical image is produced in space in a plane perpendicular to the optical axis of the lens and a considerable distance in front of the lens. If a screen is placed so as to coincide with this image plane, a perfect, enlarged image, geometrically similar to the transparency itself, will be formed on the screen.

Strictly speaking, there is no other point in space where a true image is formed, and if the screen is placed at any other position along the optical axis, or if the angle it makes with the optical axis is changed by the slightest amount, that is, if the screen is tipped, there will appear no true image on the screen, and the pseudo image which is formed will be indistinct, and will lack what is technically called "definition."

Practically, however, the case is somewhat different, since no lenses are perfectly corrected, and since the eyes of the spectators are at considerable distances from the screen, and it is therefore impossible to detect minute losses of definition in the image beyond a certain limiting point. The screen can, as a matter of fact, be moved through considerable distances without appreciably changing the distinctness of the picture projected thereon, and it can also be tipped to considerable angles without changing appreciably the distinctness of the picture.

There exists, therefore, a considerable region of space in which it is possible to get a practically distinct picture on the screen, and since throughout this region the appearance of the screen as regards distinctness of picture is not changed, it is appropriate for practical purposes to speak always of the image as if it were on the screen no matter what the position of the screen throughout the above mentioned region of space may be. This region of space before and behind the plane of best definition in which it is possible to get sufficiently distinct pictures on the screen regardless of the position of the screen, or in which it may be tipped through moderate angles, will be called throughout this exposition "the image region," and the sufficiently sharp picture on the screen will simply be called "the image."

Although the image on the screen does not change appreciably in distinctness throughout this image region, even with moderate screen obliquity, the size and shape of the image on the screen does not remain the same when the screen is moved.

If the screen is perpendicular to the optical axis and is moved in the image region from a certain point to a point more remote from the lens, the image on the screen will become larger in the same proportion as the distance from the lens is increased, and if the screen is tipped in the image region about an axis perpendicular to the optical axis, the image on the screen will be distorted. The most noticeable characteristic of the distortion when the screen is oblique is the "keystone" effect mentioned at the beginning.

Just as there is an image region, as above described, surrounding the mathematical image in space, so there is a corresponding region surrounding the plane transparency, or object, in which the object can be moved parallel to itself along the optical axis, or slightly tipped, without appreciably changing the distinctness of the image on the screen. Since, in distinction to the image, the plane transparency, following the technical terms of optics, is called the "object," I will call this region of space by analogy "the object region."

*U. S. Patent No. 1,272,623.

The magnitude of the object region is in general very much less than the magnitude of the image region, and since both of their limits are determined by the positions at which the blurring of the image is noticeable, it is clear that both regions have very imperfectly defined boundaries. The magnitude of the image region corresponds to what is known in optical technology as "depth of focus." My method of overcoming the distortion known as the keystone effect can now be put in general terms.

This type of geometrical distortion of the projected image is substantially that which occurs in common practice when the screen is not perpendicular to the light beam, and hence, as before mentioned, one distortion may be used to neutralize the other.

It should be noticed that these two distortions which thus neutralize each other are due to quite different causes, the one on the oblique screen being due to the fact that all parts of the screen are not equidistant from the projection lens, whereas the distortion

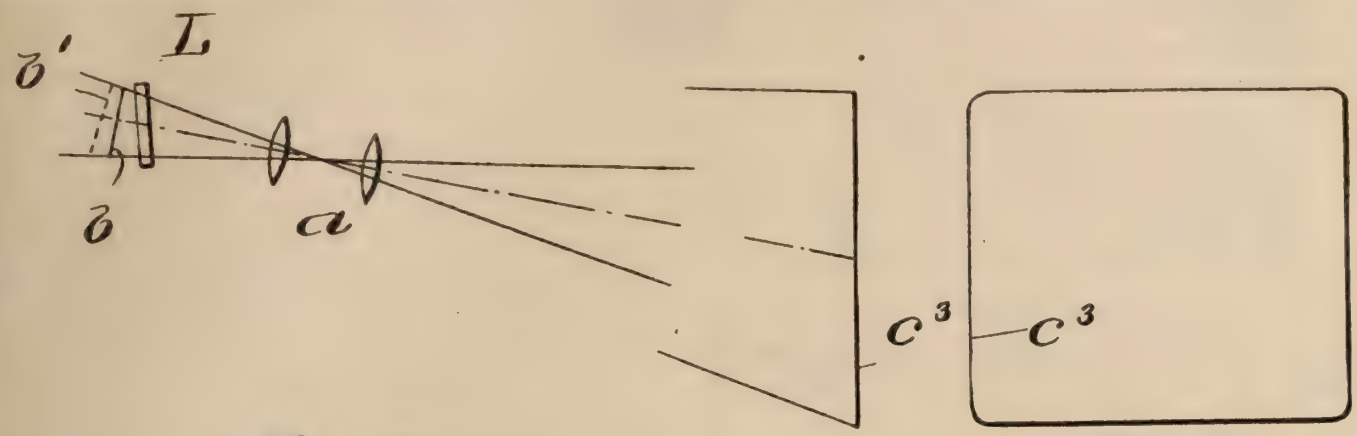

Fig. 2. Fig. 2a.

The beam of light in the object region bears stamped upon it the geometrical characteristics of the object, i. e., the picture on the slide or film. These characteristics become invisible during the passage of the light through the lens, but they appear again in the image region and produce on any screen in the image region, perpendicular to the optical axis, a magnified, geometrically similar image of the object. Our problem, therefore, is to modify or reconstruct the lens system in such a way that the image, defined by a screen perpendicular to the axis, is no longer geometrically similar to the object, but is distorted in such a way that it contains within it what might be called an "inverse keystone effect," that is, the distortion of the image beam is such that the image produced on a screen perpendicular to the axis in the image region will be distorted in such a way as to show a keystone effect of an opposite kind to that which the unmodified lens system would produce on the oblique screen at the same point. of the image beam is the direct result of a unique type of refraction.

The simplest way to accomplish the distortion of the image beam before mentioned is by the substitution of a properly distorted virtual image for the object. For this purpose I have, among other methods, obtained good results by the use of an optical element in the shape of a cylindrical lens tipped in relation to the transparency, the action of which may now be described, reference being had to the appended diagrams.

In Figs. 1 and 2, a represents in conventional form the objective of an optical lantern, b represents the transparency and c represents the screen image. It will be noted that the central line d of the light beam from the objective to the screen is not normal to the screen, consequently the projected image c upon the screen will have the shape of an inverted keystone, as illustrated in Fig. 1a, the lower part of the projected image being more remote from the optical lantern than the upper part, and therefore magnified to a greater extent. Since the transparency, or object, b is normal to the central light beam d, the plane of the real image is also normal to the central light beam d, as shown at c'. There will be a consequent loss of definition of the image c on the screen owing to the fact that the screen image c is not in the same plane as the plane of the real image c'.

The distortion which we desire to produce in the image beam, said beam being tested by the image produced on a screen placed in the image region perpendicular to the optical axis, is of a peculiar and unique type. It may be briefly symbolized by saying that one set of equidistant parallel lines in the object remain equidistant and parallel in the image, while the set of equidistant parallel lines perpendicular to the first set in the object appear in the image on the screen not as parallel but as converging toward a distant point in the plane of the screen.

In order to produce a distorted virtual image of the object with which to counteract the distortion of the projected image on the screen, a refracting element, or elements, is introduced between the transparency and the screen, preferably near the transparency, capable of magnifying or reducing the virtual image in substantially one direction only, namely, in the direction of distortion of the screen image, which magnification or reduction, or both, are qualitatively and quantitatively suitable for neutralizing the distortion of the screen image.

The example of such refracting element illustrated in the drawings is a plano-convex cylindrical lens L, the axis of which is tipped relatively to the transparency, thus producing a distortion of the virtual image similar to, but opposite to, that of the screen image. Such virtual image is indicated diagrammatically at b', Fig. 2. The parts of the cylindrical lens L nearest the object b cause a certain magnification of the virtual image, depending on the distance of the lens from the object and on the focal length of the lens, while the parts of the lens L at a greater distance from the object b cause an increased magnification and a removal of parts of the virtual image farther from the transparency. By suitably choosing the strength of the cylindrical lens (focal length), and its inclination with respect to the transparency, any reasonable magnitude may be given to the progressive magnification of the virtual image. In other words, the distortion effect which is desired may be obtained to any desired degree.

The relation of the object and virtual image are illustrated in Fig. 3, wherein the distance of the lens L from the object b, the inclination of the lens L, and also the distance between object and virtual image, are exaggerated for the purpose of clearness. Assume a beam of light passing through point 1 of the object b, of which one ray e passes through lens L and is refracted along the line e', while another ray f is refracted along the line f'. The virtual image of the point 1 will therefore appear at point 1', which is the point of intersection of the two lines e' and f' when they are prolonged backwards. Similarly, beams passing through a point of the object b immediately below the point 1 (indicated at 2 in Fig. 3a) will pass through the lower part of the lens L and along lines in the same vertical planes with e and f, and be refracted along lines e^2 and f^2. The virtual image of the point 2, therefore, will be at the point of intersection of the backward prolongations of the lines e^2 and f^2 shown at 2'. The other corners 3 and 4 of the object b in a similar manner produce virtual images 3' and 4'.

The virtual image b' is thus distorted, and when projected upon the screen by a beam oblique to the screen, appears as an undistorted image c^3 (Fig. 2a) because the distortion of the virtual image b' is equal and opposite to the distortion of the screen image due to the obliquity of the beam and therefore neutralizes it.

From the foregoing description it will be clear that not only may the keystone shape of the projected image be corrected, but also the vertical lengthening of the image on the screen which commonly results from the downward inclination or obliquity of the beam to the screen. The positive cylindrical lens magnifies the image in the direction perpendicular to its axis, as previously explained, and by suitably coördinating the curvature of the lens to the obliquity of the beam such lateral magnification may also be used to offset the vertical elongation of the image due to the obliquity of the beam to the screen. Thus, the apparatus neutralizes both types of distortion due to the obliquity of the beam to the screen, namely, the keystone distortion and the elongation of the image more in one direction than in the other.

The Reticulation of Gelatine

By S. E. Sheppard and F. A. Elliott

[Reprinted from the Journal of Industrial and Engineering Chemistry, September, 1918]

The reticulation of the surface of negatives is often a source of trouble to photographic workers. This trouble is most likely to occur in hot weather and is generally produced after fixation, either during or subsequent to washing. The wet gelatine layer becomes more or less finely wrinkled or corrugated, the network of puckers forming a pattern, generally extending over the whole of the negative, but sometimes only over part of it.

The "grain" of the network may vary considerably from very coarse dimensions down to very fine and even microscopic dimensions. This reticulation persists with only slight modification after drying. At the same time, if it occurs on a developed plate, the silver deposit undergoes a redistribution along with the reticulation of the gelatine, accumulating in the raised portions and diminishing or vanishing in the valleys or troughs between.

This reticulation has been utilized in some photo-mechanical processes; thus it is by the reticulation of gelatine that the "grain" of a collotype is produced. It has been employed in the production of irregularly grained "half tone" screens, in which the reticulation pattern takes the place of the cross line rulings of the regular screens.

An understanding of the conditions affecting and determining reticulation will not only be of practical use but will tend to throw light upon the physico-chemical nature of gelatine, and perhaps help toward the scientific specification of gelatines for photographic use.

Swelling of Gelatine in Water and Its Shrinkage on Drying

The immediate cause and mechanism of reticulation will be best understood if we first consider a few facts on the normal swelling and shrinkage of photographic gelatine film which takes place in this treatment and use.

There are two aspects to this: In one we have only to consider change of mass or bulk; in the other, change of shape. As to the first, any piece of gelatine placed in water within a temperature range of roughly 0° to 20° C. swells, at first rapidly, then more slowly, and finally reaches a limit. Fig. 1 shows the curve of this swelling plotted against the time.

The limit attained not only depends upon the temperature, but also upon the character of the gelatine, and, to a very marked extent, upon the presence of foreign substances, especially electrolytes, in the water. Acid and alkali in particular have a very great influence upon the swelling, as will be seen from the curve (Fig. 2), which shows results actually obtained with a sample of gelatine.

In this curve the ordinates give the amount of water absorbed by 1 g. air-dry gelatine on final swelling (about 48 hrs.) while the abscissae give concentrations of acid and alkali in normality. As is evident, the swelling or absorption of water is extremely sensitive to both acid and alkali or, in terms of the ionic theory, to hydrogen and hydroxyl ions. In fact, the actual sensibility is of the same order as that of the dyes used as analytical indicators. The minimum absorption probably lies in reality at a point represented by the dissociation of pure water, according to the equilibrium, but this is masked usually by residual acidity or alkalinity of the gelatine. The precise determination of this point for a given gelatine will probably prove of some importance in the specification of photographic gelatines. It is of great interest since in passing from an alkaline to an acid state the swelling goes through a very pronounced minimum.

$$H^+ + OH^- \rightleftarrows H_2O,$$

The influence of neutral salts in solution upon swelling is too complex to be discussed fully. It will be sufficient to note that some, such as iodides, act in the direction of increasing the swelling (hydration); others, as sulfates, in the direction of diminishing it. So long as only salts of the alkali metals and ammonia are considered, it is the acid part, or anion, which is of chief importance, and these salts have been arranged in a series, indicating their effect upon swelling. The effect of a given salt depends much upon its concentration and above all on the acidity or alkalinity of the solution.

Now, turning to the influence of shape upon swelling (and conversely) we find that a dominant factor here is that of the condition in which the gelatine first swelled or was cast and dried. Gelatine, in the abstract,, as a homogeneous material alike in all directions, should, theoretically, tend to swell or shrink uniformly without change of shape, only altering its mass or bulk. If gelatine could be dried very slowly so that the loss of moisture proceeded at the same rate in all parts of the mass then it would shrink without change of shape, but such a condition cannot be realized in practice and gelatine dries more rapidly on the surface than in the interior, thus producing stresses and distortion. In the case particularly important to us, the gelatine is coated on a glass or film support and firmly attached to it, so that one side is eliminated as regards drying, etc. The gelatine cannot spread off the plate, so that its swelling and shrinkage are limited to one direction, viz., that perpendicular to the plane of the support (Fig. 3). This state of affairs is determined in advance by the first drying down of the jelly (or emulsion) on the support; it is not peculiar to the photographic film, since ordinary sheet or leaf gelatine which has been dried on nets shows the same tendency to have its principal expansion perpendicular to the face of the sheet.

Production of Reticulation

A gelatine film, under normal conditions, can be repeatedly swollen and dried without losing its capacity to swell and shrink normally to the plate. It is evident that a certain strain must be imposed upon the gelatine in drying, which is removed by swelling. If we consider an ideal unit cube of the swelling gelatine, supposed free from all constraint, it would tend to expand uniformly in all directions. This ideal uniform expansion corresponds to a uniform swelling pressure, i. e., a pressure the same in all directions. We can consider this resolved into forces perpendicular to the surface and forces parallel to the surface. Actually, the gelatine layer in sheets or on plates does not swell uniformly. The forces parallel to the surface which would, of course, tend to remove the film from the glass or support, must be compensated. This compensation is in a measure external or initially external, being due to the adhesion of the gelatine to a rigid support, but it is chiefly internal, arising from a uniform strain or tension impressed by the mode of drying.

Now suppose the gelatine layer be subjected to drastic internal action, excessive swelling and excessive dehydration, either successively, or, in a measure, simultaneously, then gelatine jelly will be strained beyond its elastic limit, showing either a total or a partial reaction.

Total reaction would imply the detachment of the layer from its support, a result which is seen in frilling and floating off, as a result of excessive lateral expansion.

If, however, the adhesion to the support is maintained, but the newly disengaged tangential or lateral forces are not entirely compensated, then the strain distribution in the gelatine layer ceases to be uniform, and we get a local puckering or folding, similar in character to that produced in the earth's surface by tangential forces acting on restricted areas of semi-liquid igneous rocks.

Thus the immediate mechanism of reticulation is the production of restricted tangential dilation, which is partially arrested.

This, however, leaves unsettled the inner physical chemistry of the process, that is, the origin of an excess swelling pressure (the super-pressure), and of a partial or localized arrest of this. This can be discussed best in dealing with specific cases of the production of reticulation.

Liberty Loan Boosted in Los Angeles by Efforts of Cameramen

THE Cinema Camera Club of California played an important part in the sale of bonds for the Fourth Liberty Loan drive.

The club was requested by the Liberty Loan Committee of Los Angeles to assist them in their work by furnishing cameramen to photograph the various activities of the campaign workers.

The drive was opened by Mary Pickford at the Victory Tank in Central Park, and each buyer of $5,000 of bonds or more was photographed with Miss Pickford, and the film was later turned over to the purchaser of the bonds.

Numerous ingenious methods were adopted by the campaign workers to further the sales, one of which was to form groups on the Tank representing various states. Each group designating a certain state had movies made of them which were later forwarded for exhibition to their native state. Only those buying in excess of $100 or more were permitted to get before the camera.

The Cinema Camera Club donated the services of two of its members each night for the work, who were under the supervision of Edward Littell, a member of the C. C. C., to whom is due most of the success of the undertaking.

The films are being distributed throughout the country with proper screen credit to the Cinema Camera Club. A battery of lights were furnished by the Winfield-Kerner Company, while the laboratory work was donated by the Bloom Laboratories.

Solution of the Patriotic Music Problem

WHEN the various heroes of our Allies are portrayed upon the screen, the orchestra leader, considering it unavoidable, immediately plays the patriotic anthems of their countries. What is the inevitable result? The audience immediately rises, causing commotion and distraction, and above all, interfering with everybody's view, thereby losing the trend of the story.

To most people, this interruption during the progress of a picture is most annoying, but still musicians seem to be under the impression that this is the only possible musical accompaniment in such an instance.

However, the editor, while preparing the musical setting for that marvelous, patriotic feature, "LAFAYETTE WE COME," found himself confronted with this serious problem, for through the entire picture there were continual close-ups and long-shots of such men as Marshal Foch, President Wilson, Sir Douglas Haig, General Pershing, General Diaz and other Allied leaders, followed by awe-inspiring views of our boys in France, hordes of them on their march to Berlin.

Being in a quandary and fully determined not to suggest the patriotic airs of the various Allied nations, in order to preserve the continuity of the picture in the minds of the audience, after visiting all the publishers, the editor was fortunate to find certain marches which suited his purpose admirably.

They are "Over the Top Boys," "Blue Devils," "Aces High," and "Fighting Tommies." The main outstanding factor of all these above-mentioned marches is that they are so composed that they create the emotional atmosphere by each containing a reminiscence or faith suggestion of the respective national anthems, with original martial themes. This instills the audience with the same patriotic enthusiasm and fervor without being compelled to display visible homage and respect to their Allies.

For example, "Over the Top Boys" is a characteristic American march, portraying Yankee grit and courage and composed of an introductory bugle call, an original theme, and a strain of Dixie and Yankee Doodle. "Blue Devils" is dedicated to the Alpine Chasseurs and is typically French in character. The trio is broad and sonorous, in which bits of the "Marseillaise" are heard as a countra melody. "Aces High" is a bright, breezy aviation march, in which a figuration occurs, depicting the hum of the motor. "Fighting Tommies," true to its name, is an inspiring march displaying the bravery and valor of Great Britain's pride.

In this march are heard snatches of the "Grenadiers" and "Rule Britannia." A surprise occurs in the trio which is the Englishman's declaration from "Pinafore," "I would not be a foreigner," used very effectively as a countra melody.

The editor submits the following cue sheet of "Lafayette, We Come" which will at once demonstrate to the orchestra leader that the problem of patriotic music can be solved without resorting to "God Save the King," "Marseillaise," "Star Spangled Banner," etc.

"LAFAYETTE, WE COME"

Specially Selected and Compiled by M. Winkler.

The timing is based on a speed limit of 14 minutes per reel (1,000 feet).

Lafayette Theme: "Lafayette, We Come" (Steady March Tempo)—by Henry W. Geiger

Love Theme: "May Dreams" (Moderato Romance)—by Gaston Borch

Sinister Theme: "Sinister Theme" (Dramatic Misterioso)—by Sol. Levy

In order to give this picture an appropriate presentation from a musical standpoint, orchestra leaders, pianists and organists are kindly requested to note the following:

1—Cut No. 1, lasting about 40 seconds, is a combination of short scenes and titles portraying our Allies and all the national melodies of Italy, America, France, England, etc., should be performed in the above scenes to the extent of about four to eight bars of each hymn.

2—Cue No. 7 marked tacet for 25 seconds is very important, because after the expiration of this time, a concert is given, and in order to bring forth the musical contrast, this tacet mark is very essential.

3—Cues No. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15 and 16 are short scenes portraying tableaux of our Allies. The intervals between each tableau are marked tacet on the cue sheet in order to create a musical contrast between the national airs which are to be played for the respective tableaux shown.

4—Cue No. 17, lasting 1 minute, is a dance scene. I have mentioned a one-step for this scene and I suggest that musicians do not substitute with any ordinary dance number, as "Hunkatin" one-step suggested is in my estimation the most appropriate composition for this purpose. It is also suggested that orchestra leaders play this number to the tempo of the dance.

5—Cues No. 36, 37, 38, 39 and 40 should not be substituted by any other compositions than the ones suggested, because such marches as "Blue Devils," by Sol. P. Levy, "Aces High," etc., were specially written and published with this picture, and it is therefore not advisable to substitute them.

6—Cues No. 71 and 72 should also not be substituted, as the compositions mentioned on the cue sheet are in every way the most appropriate music for the purpose. The "Fighting Tommies" March, which is used in No. 72, is an original English characteristic March with the famous "Pinafore" song in the trio and has been especially composed for this purpose by Boulton and orchestrated by Sol. P. Levy.

7—The last five cues Nos. 86, 87, 88, 89 and 90 are a mix-up of short patriotic scenes of a stirring character and it was therefore impossible to state the definite length and time of every one of these scenes.

8—To insure a correct musical presentation with this film, the arranger earnestly suggests that in cases where a complete rehearsal is impossible, the orchestra leader should at least get acquainted with the nature of the picture covering the above mentioned notes.

9—The arranger is also aware of the fact that many of these compositions mentioned on the music cue sheet are not in the library of all musicians and in order to enable everybody to avail himself of the music as listed in the cues, he wishes to inform all concerned in playing this picture that complete music sets or in part are obtainable within the shortest mailing time from Belwin, Inc., 701 Seventh avenue, New York City, at the lowest possible professional rates.

"Safe for Democracy"

(J. Stuart Blackton Special Production. Seven reels)

INFECTIOUS humor, the patriotic thrill, and the dramatic element, are admirably combined in the latest J. Stuart Blackton production, "Safe for Democracy." The producer has shown stronger than in any offering that we have seen the power of contrast in his flashes and he has created a picture that stands out as one of the truly great expressions of the American spirit in the war. There is not a heart string that it does not play upon, and so long as we are at war, and probably for a long time after, we will laugh and drop a tear and get ready to fight alongside of the characters in this film.

It may be called a propaganda picture. It is founded on the "Work or Fight" order. We are first given the contrast of the two tramps who boasted that they never have worked with the young son of the patriotic shipyard owner. The young millionaire has a "weak heart" and he gets out of the draft, but we are shown flashes of the chip of the old block who is "over there" doing his whole bit to make the world safe. We have this idler marrying his father's stenographer, not because he loves her better than the others, chorus girls, but because he thinks that by marrying some one he will get out of the "work or fight" order. There is a strongly dramatic scene when this youth, who is playing the chorus girls strong, comes home drunk and tries to attack his wife. She rebels and leaves, and when she is out of funds she seeks to kill herself and is saved by the clever move and the American philosophy of the tramp.

It is truly a great AMERICAN picture. It is founded on the war, but it ought to last long afterwards.

There is a splendid cast, Mitchell Lewis, who plays the powerful and magnetic tramp, and Ruby DeRemer as the stenographer-wife were featured as the stars in the Rivoli advertising, but as a matter of fact this should be played as "the perfect picture cast." To our mind the dominating character among all of these real Americans was "John Craig," as played by John P. Wade, while Gus Alexander convinced everyone that he is a comedian well worth while by the scores of laughs that he got. Mitchell Lewis was clever in one of his best roles. Mr. Blackton picked his actors well; they all live their parts.

If you want to give your people a picture of American life, take this picture and tell them that is just what it is, and they will come and laugh a big part of the time, and cry a little, and thrill a whole lot and go out of your theatre with bigger and better hearts and tear-dryed and farer-seeing eyes. Your people will want to come back and see it again.—R. E. Pritchard.

"Roped," with Harry Carey

(Universal Special—Jan. 13. Directed by Jack Ford)

IN direction, one of the most difficult roles to handle is the transplantation of a character—usually the hero or the heroine—from a common environment to an aristocratic. Such an operation, when it concerns a serious subject, besides good judgment, requires skill. The Director must, at all times, have the player under control, as the least laxity or carelessness will cause the action to become nonsensical and burlesque.

It is very apparent in this case that, in transferring the hero, a millionaire cowboy, from his ranch into New York's exclusive society, the director was conscious of this fact, as a consequence, he has made the action convincing. The result is a production that, in addition to action of plot and suspense, combines genuine comedy and tender pathos, two of the elements that never fail to make a picture appealing as well as enjoyable.

In order to play a trick on the boss and thus have some "jolly good time," the ranch boys advertise for a wife in one of the New York papers, giving his name and address, as if coming from him. For the fun of it a society belle answers the ad, stating she would consent to become his wife. The hero is next seen departing for the big city. You can imagine the merriment he creates when, attired in a primitive dress, he appears in a fashionable hotel and registers.

He meets the girl. The mother is shocked at first, but, when told the prospective groom is a millionaire, and as her finances are at low ebb, feels differently. It results in a marriage.

Although the mother-in-law is provided with all the luxuries of life, she schemes to bring about a divorce so that her daughter may marry one of their set. In the meantime, love commences to awaken in the breast of the girl.

A child is born, but the father is not allowed to even have a look at him, because, not being sterilized, he might infect the baby. But he steals at night into the baby's room in order to have a glimpse of his son, a yearning that is denied him. This scene is pathetic and touching to the extreme.

The cowboys, after a decision, pay a visit to the hero, bringing a number of gifts for the son. It is not possible to describe the comedy they cause.

In the end, in spite of the trickery of the mother-in-law, a reconciliation takes place.

The picture is clean and wholesome. It should appeal to everybody. Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

Walsh's Fans Will Like It, But It May Not Make New Friends

GEORGE WALSH has created a good following, especially among the younger generation. To most of them, this offering will appeal immensely, as it has been produced along the lines that made this star popular to them. It affords him all the opportunities necessary for displaying his athletic ability. But spectators who don't see his pictures regularly, or who will see him in this one for the first time, I am afraid will grumble a little, as, outside of the star's stunts and the activity of the characters, the picture contains no other element that will appeal to any specific kind of emotions. Heart appeal, in particular, is absent in it.

This sort of a subject, treating with German spies during the pre-war period, as well as immediately after the declaration of war by the United States, has been done to death lately. The hero is always provided for, to save the abducted heroine from their hands.

The subtitles are numerous and consist of a multitude of words. No sooner than you, with great exertion, read one, another follows. They have been constructed so as to draw laughs. But whether they will succeed or not, is a question. They are far fetched at times.

THE CAST

Bill Durham.....George Walsh
Barbara Knowles.....Regina Quinn
August Myers.....William Bailey
Carl Vogel.....James Black
By Ralph H. Spence.

CATCH LINES

George Walsh, the breezy young Fox star in a picture of rapid-fire thrills and sensations.

The moral of this play: Flat feet are No Handicap If You Have a Level Head.

Bill was rejected in the draft because of flat feet, but this didn't prevent him from beating up a gang of Germans who thought to start a revolution on the border, nor did it interfere at all with his love affair.

They wouldn't give Bill a German hunting license because he had flat feet, so Bill became a poacher and bagged his game for Uncle Sam without permission. Uncle Sam didn't kick at all, however.

Instilling pep into the world was Bill's favorite pastime until he ran up against Pancho Villa —then he was obliged to reverse his tactics and take some pep out of this gentleman.

He was hitting on all six, but was possessed of a couple of flat "wheels," so the draft board turned him down. The Germans are such fast runners that the Government wants only men who can keep up with them.

AD TALK

George Walsh, the Fox star, whose ability presents an even break between acting and athletics is coming again to the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in his latest Victory picture, "I'll Say So." George (its impossible to call such a delightfully informal fellow mister) has seldom had such a good vehicle as Ralph H. Spence provided him in these five reels. He appears as Bill Durham, and like the other famous member of the family offers his services to the Government when war is declared. The Government, however, is making it a point to pick out fast runners, that the armies may keep up with the German retreat, and because Bill has boarding house feet he is turned down despite all the rest of him that's sound.

And Bill is rather sore of course. Why shouldn't he be? But he is far from being discouraged particularly when he encounters a very pretty girl in the hands of very wicked German spies. He pursues the young lady to the Mexican border, where her guardian is bent on stirring up a baby war between Villa and the U. S. A. He succeeds in stopping this before it is started, and then makes haste back to New York where he saves the girl from being married to another disciple of Kultur.

All these things keep Bill on the go from the start of "I'll Say So" to its very finish. And all these things keep George Walsh going, too. George and Bill are one in this instance. You couldn't separate them if you wanted to. The part fits the actor, and the actor fits the part. The support includes Regina Quinn as the only girl, and William Bailey and James Black as actors courageous enough to assume the roles of the spies. Don't by any chance miss "I'll Say So." It is a spy play, but—it's in a class by itself.

THE STORY

When Bill Durham learns that the United States has declared war on Germany he makes all haste to a recruiting station to offer his services. But he finds that his flat feet exclude him from all branches of the service. So he takes his pedal extremities out for a walk and encounters a pacifist, who is engaged in casting slurs on the flag. When Bill is through with this fellow, his map looks like the interior of Germany—very sick, but, despite this service in the cause of justice, Bill is taken off to jail. Barbara Knowles, a young person very fair to look upon rescues him from the bars, and Bill immediately falls in love.

Barbara, be it known, is an orphan, and her guardian is a gentleman of Kultur. His latest orders make necessary a trip to Columbus, N. M., where he plans stirring up a little sedition with Villa and his crowd. All that Bill hears about the destination is Columbus, and so he boards a train that sets him down in a Connecticut town of that name. Life here is slow for Bill, put through the medium of a misdirected letter he finds out where the right Columbus lies and hies himself there in all speed.

Here Bill proceeds to mix it up with Villa's band, and his smartness and daring make it impossible for the Mexicans to carry out their orders received from the gent of Kultur. But he loses the girl again. Her guardian has taken her back to New York, where he plans marrying her off to another German. But they don't reckon on Bill. He gives pursuit again, and only arrives at the church just in time to prevent the fatal wedding. But there has to be a groom, and so Bill nominates himself for the position being enthusiastically seconded in his motion by Barbara.

Mae Marsh in Dual Role Should Please the Whole Country

THE entertaining element in this offering is comedy, derived wholly from the witty expressions in the subtitles as well as the fine acting of Mae Marsh. It will undoubtedly please the many admirers of the star, also other picturegoers in the same degree.

The plot is of the dual role type, both parts being assumed by the heroine. It is of the somewhat improbable kind, as it doesn't seem credible that the husband would have failed to recognize the substitution of another woman for his wife, however close the resemblance may have been.

In the plot, the daughter runs away to Paris, France, with her lover. Her blind mother pines for her and hopes she will some day come back. At last she receives a cable announcing her daughter's homecoming.

A few days later her doctor reads a dispatch in the newspapers announcing that the boat the girl was to board is sunk by a submarine. Feeling sure that the news will kill the poor mother, induces the heroine to assume her identity.

Later the lover returns, but when he meets his supposed wife does not become aware of the substitution. A few days afterwards the daughter, who had not boarded the boat owing to sudden illness, also returns. Eventually the heroine brings about a reconciliation between the lovers and a subsequent marriage.

The love affair is not offensive as it has been handled in a refined manner.

SUGGESTIONS

"Hidden Fires" offers no unusual possibilities for advertising except in the name of the star. This, however, is a big asset so don't fail to use Miss Marsh's name whenever possible. It appears to be the heritage of a human picture to go without unusual advertising. This because it contains no sensational possibilities. The biggest possibility of such a picture lies, however, in its very character. "Hidden Fires" can be played up as a human picture and if you tie Miss Marsh's name up with some such announcement you will have the people coming for this is the type of stuff she is noted for.

The exhibitor's attention is again called to the high-grade line of publicity and advertising material prepared by Goldwyn on this and all other pictures. You will find a number of good stories in the press sheet and the cuts for both publicity and advertising are some of the best issued.

AD TALK

Mae Marsh, the charming young Goldwyn star, will be seen at the————theatre next————in her latest picture is "Hidden Fires," which will remain on the screen for————days thereafter. Miss Marsh has been awarded a dual role in this production and she handles the parts with skill and careful deferentiation. However the important part of the two is Peggy Murray, and in this the star appears to truly delightful advantage. Peggy tends the newsstand in a hotel lobby and is one of the fixtures of the place being liked and loved by all the regular patrons of the hotel.

One day a stranger, Dr. Granville, comes to the stand and makes a purchase. Afterwards he stands there gazing at Peggy. He tells her that she is the living image of Louise Treadway Parke, the missing daughter of one of his patients. He says that Mrs. Parke has suffered a nervous shock over the reported loss of Louise on a steamship and that if Peggy will take her place for the time she may be able to save Mrs. Parke from further suffering. So Peggy consents. And then begin for her a startling series of adventures, which we will not enumerate here. "Hidden Fires" has many original and surprising twists and to outline them in detail would be to spoil them for the patrons of the————theatre.

Miss Marsh is supported by a notable cast including Rod La Rocque as her leading man and Alec B. Francis as the old doctor. It comes from the pen of J. Clarkson Miller and was directed by George Irving one of the most able men in the art of picture production.

THE STORY

Peggy Murray tends the newsstand in a hotel lobby and is known and liked by all the hotel's regular patrons. They are, however, somewhat shocked by the company she keeps in the person of Jimmy Morton, a pool room hanger-on. Peggy excuses herself because Jimmy is the only man friend she has. One day Dr. Granville stops at the stand and buys a paper. He looks at Peggy and is obviously startled. She closely resembles the absent daughter of one of his rich patients, Mrs. Parke. Louise, her daughter, has sailed for Europe to complete her music lessons and the loss of her has affected Mrs. Parke's mind. Dr. Granville persuades Peggy to masquerade as Louise.

Peggy accepts the proposition because she sees that it is for a good cause and shortly afterward she is installed in the Treadway home. Mrs. Treadway really believes that Peggy is the missing Louise. In an automobile accident Peggy is saved by George Landis and thus real romance enters her life. Landis, however, sees her talking with Jimmy one day, who has visited her with purposes of blackmail and denounces her. Peggy then goes to Dr. Granville and says that she will pose as Louise no longer. Thereafter she takes up settlement work and on one of her trips to a particularly poor quarter she is astonished to encounter the real Louise. She had never sailed on the steamer but had remained in seclusion after having been betrayed and deserted by the man she loved. Peggy hunts up this man and brings him to the bedside. He rights the wrong done to Louise and later she returns to her mother.

And Peggy goes back to her newsstand but she does not remain there long for Landis hears the whole story and goes in search of her.

CATCH LINES

Mae Marsh in the first dual role of her career. The story of a newsgirl who assumed the role of a daughter of the rich in order to save a life.

In which a beautiful girl outwits grim fate.

The story of a girl who stepped into another's shoes and lives a lie to save a life.

Mae Marsh has been praised as the best actress on the screen. In "Hidden Fires" she essays a dual role and contributes notable characterizations in each one.

A worthy successor to Miss Marsh's big hit, "The Cinderella Man."

Mae Marsh in the sort of picture she does best. A story that combines the human interest element with the thrilling, that sparkles with comedy and romance, that grips with drama. "Hidden Fires" is probably the best of her Goldwyn pictures.

"THE SQUAW MAN"—ARTCRAFT

There's no Doubt of This One Pleasing; Should Draw Very Well

YOU can count upon this picture pleasing your patrons, as its predominating element is tender pathos. Owing to the story's construction along human lines, it is able to reach the emotions to the fullest extent. For instance, in order to save from disgrace his mother and his worthless brother, who gambled away the orphanage money, the hero assumes the blame. Such a chivalrous act, especially when it is undertaken for the sake of a mother, never fails to arouse admiration and win sympathy.

The scene showing the good hearted cowboys bringing gifts to the hero's son, their little friend, before the boy's departure for England, is sympathetic to the extreme. The presentation of a watch to the child as a memento, by one of his big playmates, is particularly touching.

Sad as the story is just before the close, due to the suicide of the squaw wife, who is broken-hearted at having her child taken away from her, the picture does not become gruesome or repulsive. It ends with the union of the hero and his former sweetheart.

"The Squaw Man" has been picturized by the Lasky Company once before, in 1914, with Dustin Farnum starring. But at that time, the picturegoing public was not as large as it is now. Many of the children, who are now grown, have not seen it, nor all the adults. Therefore, there is no doubt in my mind that, in the larger towns and cities, this picture will prove a good drawing card. But in regards to the small town, that is a local question which you alone can determine.—Length, 6, reels.—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

It was nearly four years ago that Cecil B. De Mille produced Edwin Milton Royle's play, "The Squaw Man," as a Lasky picture. It then created something of an epoch in the annals of motion picture history. Such a famous play had never before been attempted and its richness in drama and its varied setting gave Mr. De Mille the opportunity to develop his art along lines before unheard of. Today this director comes forth with another "The Squaw Man," an entirely new picture, produced with an all-star cast and surpassing in dramatic effect and scenic investiture the first production. It is this picture that the management of the ——— theatre has booked for ——— days, beginning on ——— of ——— week.

The story of "The Squaw Man" has become a classic in the history of the stage and its repetition here is not necessary. Mention of the cast is, however, imperative. Never before, to our recollection, has such an array of talent been assembled to interpret the roles in a single picture. Elliott Dexter has the title part and Ann Little is the squaw. Theodore Roberts is Big Bill, Edwin Stevens is the sheriff. Jack Holt is Cash Hawkins, Tully Marshall is Sir John Applegate. To go on through the list there are Herbert Standing, Katherine MacDonald, Thurston Hall, Helen Dunbar, Winter Hall, Noah Beery, Charles Ogle, Guy Oliver and many others. There is not a role, be it ever so small, allotted to a player at all mediocre.

Mr. De Mille has surpassed himself in the production of "The Squaw Man." He has derived the utmost from the Royle play and, if patrons remember the initial production, it will be interesting indeed to compare the two. Remember, "The Squaw Man" is NOT a reissue.

THE STORY

Jim Wynnegate loves Diana Kerhill, wife of his cousin, Henry, Earl of Kerhill. Henry embezzles money entrusted to his care by the orphanage and in order to protect Diana's name, Jim shoulders the blame and disappears. He locates in a Wyoming cow-town where he engages in ranching. Jim saves Naturich, an Indian girl, from Cash Hawkins and so incurs his enmity. Hawkins later attacks Jim just as Diana, Henry and a party arrive in the town while touring the States. Sir John Applegate, a member of the party, denounces Jim but Diana finds time to say to him that she believes him innocent. Hawkins makes another attempt on Jim's life but Naturich kills him. The sheriff would arrest Jim for the crime but Big Bill proves that he couldn't have been guilty, by circumstantial evidence.

While hunting stray cattle Jim is thrown from his horse and is found by Naturich. She nurses him back to health and the intimacy that this situation brings, finally results in a marriage. Thus does Jim become a squaw man. In time, Little Hal is born to Naturich and he proves to be the idol of Jim's ranch. But things don't go well with the squaw man. His cattle stray and are stolen and the sheriff is ever attempting to prove that he murdered Hawkins.

Then Henry is mortally wounded while hunting big game and before he dies he tells the truth of the embezzled money. Diana and Sir John visit Jim again and tell him that he must return to England to look after his estates. Henry insists that Little Hal go too, and Naturich, seeing the man she loves and her boy slip from her grasp, takes her life. Jim is deeply sorrowed at this but leaves the West and after a few years marries Diana.

CATCH LINES

Cecil B. De Mille's new and elaborate production of the classic of the stage and screen, "The Squaw Man," presented with an all-star cast.

How does this list of picture favorites strike you: Elliott Dexter, Ann Little, Katherine MacDonald, Theodore Roberts, Jack Holt, Tully Marshall, Herbert Standing, Edwin Stevens and Thurston Hall? You will see them all in the special Artcraft production, "The Squaw Man," made under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille.

Edwin Milton Royle's dramatic classic again produced by Cecil B. De Mille with an all-star cast of Lasky favorites enacting the principal roles.

Never before has the ——— theatre presented such a lavish production. And the word lavish applies to quality of production, quality of drama and quality of cast.

"SET FREE"—BLUEBIRD

Clean Picture, with Few Thrills and Lots of Entertainment

THIS picture will please picturegoers. It is of the light romantic drama class, containing also some comedy situations. Action of plot and suspense have been successfully introduced in the well constructed story, which holds the interest fairly tense all the way through.

The tricks of the little dog used furnish part of the entertainment.

A number of the situations have been blended with beautiful natural scenery, adding no little to the entertaining values of the attraction.

Towards the end the spectator is furnished also with some thrills.

The picture is clean and will have an appeal mostly among audiences that possess more or less refined tastes.

A more extensive review was published in our issue of October 19, on page 2607, under the temporary title, "Double Crossed."—Released Dec. 16.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

Scenario by Rex Taylor.
Directed by Tod Browning.

AD TALK

Edith Roberts, the young and vivacious Bluebird star, will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest picture, entitled "Set Free." This is a highly entertaining romantic drama seasoned by a plentiful supply of comedy and our patrons are urged not to miss a scene of it. Let it be said here, also, that Miss Roberts is one of the most talented of the younger actresses in the profession and her playing of the role of Roma in "Set Free" sets a high mark for interpretation of romantic roles that others will find it hard to reach, let alone surpass. Harry Hilliard, a well-known actor, appears in the opposite part while others are Harold Goodwin, Molly McConnell and Blanche Gray.

The story of "Set Free," prepared for Miss Roberts by James P. Poland, concerns a young lady whose idea of romance is as rosey as any ever painted. She pines under her existence in a stately old mansion on the Hudson where her only companion is an old maiden aunt who adheres to the ways of society a generation or two since. And so one day little Roma decides to follow the open road, lead the life of a gypsy. She dresses in their picturesque costume and sets out, landing eventually in—New York.

Not exactly the correct place for a gypsy to land is it? And Roma's adventures there are not all that she bargained for either. But the incidents of the final half of the picture are too amusing to enumerate. Suffice it to say that Roma is completely cured of her longing for the gypsy life. Through one John Roberts (Harry Hilliard), she learns that there is a good deal of dirt as well as romance in the open road.

THE STORY

Roma, who lives with her ancient aunt on the Wycliffe estate, only a short distance from New York, pines for excitement. She is full of romance and as the days pass, becomes terribly bored with her musty old surroundings. She finally elects to run away and dons the costume of a gypsy. Her trail leads her to New York where, seen by the police playing with a dog that sits in an automobile, she is arrested. She refuses to give her name, saying that she is merely a wandering gypsy. This gets her in bad, because the department is on the lookout for Gypsy Nan, pickpocket. However, the lady who owns the pup intercedes in her behalf and takes her home. Here she meets the son of the home, John Roberts, and immediately there is romance.

But the Roberts are almost as staid and old fashioned as Roma's aunt and when John finally proposes, Roma turns him down. She wants romance spelt with a capital "R." John gets the idea and one day confesses to Roma that he has secretly been leading a double life; that in reality he is the head of a gypsy band. He engages a number of rough individuals (he doesn't realize that they are an extra selected assortment of yeggs) and, dressing them in gypsy garb, installs him in an old house near Wycliffe. To this place he brings Roma. It doesn't take long for the hirelings, acting under orders from John, to make Roma see that there is dirt in the gypsy's life as well as romance.

She is about ready to cry enough when the house is raided by the local police. The "gypsies" had robbed the bank. Here is a situation that John finds it rather difficult from which to extricate himself but he finally manages it and shows so much resourcefulness that Roma thinks, after all, that he will make an ideal husband.

CATCH LINES

Which proves that the life of a gypsy doesn't consist of romance alone. There are "unwashed" days and plenty of dirt under foot.

The story of a girl who had been cooped up in a house smelling of old lace and lavender all her life and who broke out to search for romance. She found it, but not in the life of a gypsy where she thought it lay.

John thought to cure Roma of her longing for the life of a gypsy by hiring a bunch of nondescripts to dress and act the parts of the wanderers. But this assortment of humanity turned out to be an extra selected bunch of yeggmen and then there was trouble!

Edith Roberts, the bright and vivacious Bluebird star, in a romantic comedy-drama that will tickle the risibilities of even the cynics.

Think twice before you decide to follow the gypsy trail. The canvas-topped wagon may look inviting from the outside but the chances are ten to one that it contains a lot of dirt within!

PAPER:—There are two one-sheets, two three-sheets and two six-sheets on this production. All paper is printed in the style of past Bluebird subjects. The colors are attractive, the lettering striking and the selected scenes most suitable for this particular type of reproduction.

LOBBY DISPLAY:—There are a selection of scene and star stills in the usual standard sizes suitable for framing and will make an attractive lobby display. A title card goes with each set of stills.

CUTS:—Scene cuts are provided on this production in one and two-column sizes and may be used either in the text or advertising pages of your newspapers. For advertising, however, the exhibitor had best make his own selection of scenes to be used from the stills. There are also star cuts of Miss Roberts for this production as well as stock cuts with star in attractive pose.

SLIDE, MUSIC CUE SHEET, WINDOW CARD AND PRESS SHEET are among the other accessories provided on this production and may be secured by the exhibitor at any Bluebird exchange.

SUGGESTIONS

If you are in the habit of dressing your newspaper, lobby and general advertising in the atmosphere of the picture, you have the opportunity here of bringing out its romantic quality. This is its dominating note, and as it is by no means an unattractive one it should be brought out to its fullest extent. At the same time the picture is a comedy-drama and if you can get an idea of the comedy in your advertising do not fail to do so. The catch lines have been written with this end in view and probably there is one among them that will appeal particularly to you.

"I'LL SAY SO"

possess some clever lines fully descriptive of the character of the picture. The press department has also suggested a number of type-display advertisements in one and two-column sizes, facsimiles of which will be found in the press book on this production.

Slide, music cue sheet.

SUGGESTIONS

The Fox advertisements on this contain a number of snappy lines that the exhibitor will do well to duplicate in his own copy providing he does not use that which is already prepared. The picture is a breezy one in common with all Walsh pictures, and, although the plot is melodramatic in many senses, the main character is more light than heavy. So try to get this pep and dash in your advertisements and announcements of "I'll Say So".

The title itself offers you something quite full of possibilities. In any throw aways it can be used to advantage by using it as your own opinion of the picture itself, of course tying it up with a few other words. Walsh seems to be getting more popular each day, so bill him well. We would advise against the use of "Smiling" before his name. This tends to cast the production in the light of a short length comedy....

"MARRIAGE"—KEENEY-SHERRY

Calvert's Second Is Different Sort Than First; Good Film

AS the first picture in which Catherine Calvert appeared, "Romance of the Underworld," was of the suggestive sort, it is natural for you to think that this one also is of the same type. But it is not, except that, at times, some of the situations are so constructed as to lead you to believe so, but in the end everything is explained satisfactorily.

"Marriage" may be classed as a good picture, the kind that holds the interest and entertains. It is based chiefly on the element of heart appeal.

The fundamental idea of the story is a wife's willingness to sacrifice her honor by becoming a cheat at the card games, in order to earn enough money to help cure her blind husband.

The villain, who kept making advances to her, discovering the fact that the heroine and her partner are cheating, threatens to expose her, unless she submits to him.

At the dinner the villain rises to make the exposures, but the heroine forestalls him by confessing, also stating that his threats were powerless to make her deviate from her duty to her husband. This situation is very dramatic.

Miss Calvert's acting is splendid. She expresses emotion with ease. The supporting cast has also been successfully selected. The interior settings are good.

This picture should appeal to a wide circle of picture goers.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

Catherine Calvert, widow of the late Paul Armstrong, in her second photoplay "Marriage."

Guy Bolton, celebrated playwright, author of many stage successes including "Polly With a Past" has turned his hand to picture writing and has evolved the splendid photoplay "Marriage."

A wife becomes a card cheat to save the life of her husband.

Is it better to confess one's own misdeeds or let another tell of them with venomous intent?

Come and see if Guy Bolton, playwright extraordinary, has made a success in writing his first picture.

AD TALK

Patrons of the ——— theatre have an unusual treat in store for them on ——— of ——— week when Frank Keeney's second production "Marriage" will be presented. Mr. Keeney's first production "A Romance of the Underworld" will perhaps be remembered by our patrons. The same star, Catherine Calvert was presented in this feature and, astounding as was her appearance in her first picture, "Marriage" is guaranteed to be better.

Miss Calvert, it is widely known, is the widow of the late Paul Armstrong, a playwright whose many successes earned him immense revenues. On his death she took up the management of his estate and shortly afterwards entered pictures.

"Marriage" was prepared for Miss Calvert by another celebrated Broadway playright, Guy Bolton. He is co-author of "Polly with a Past," one of the most successful of Belasco productions, while on the other hand he has had a very important finger in many musical comedy successes in collaboration with P. G. Wodehouse and Jerome Kern.

The story of "Marriage" revolves about a highly dramatic episode, namely, the result of a systemized plan of cheating at cards instituted by a woman that she may obtain money enough to stand for an operation on her husband's eyes; resulting in the fact that the villain discovers her deed and threatens her with exposure unless she accept him as her lover.

Mr. Bolton has handled this situation skilfully both in building to it and with respect to the mighty denouement it creates. Miss Calvert has her support from David Powell, a well known and well liked leading man, Thomas Holding, Ida Darling, Walter Hiers and Hazel Alden.

THE STORY

Eileen Spencer is a member of a gay and fast gambling set. Her husband, Jack, is supposedly a power in Wall Street, but shortly the extravagant living of his wife and his own recklessness render him penniless. After a time he informs her that he is bankrupt and, to make matters worse, lets her know that he has an affliction of the eyes. Conscience stricken, Eileen, who has previously been receiving the ardent attentions of one Ballantyne, a novelist, dismisses him and swears to her husband that she will work her hands to the bone, if necessary, to provide for him.

Dolly Page, one of Eileen's friends, confesses to her her shortage of money and suggests the plan that they cheat at cards to provide for themselves. Eileen, loath to take the matter up, sees no other way out and finally agrees. In a short while both Eileen and Dolly have all the money they need.

Jack is sent abroad to have the delicate operation on his eyes performed. Ballantyne proves the fly in the ointment. He discovers the game that Eileen and Dolly have been playing and threatens the former with exposure unless she go to him. Eileen refuses, but Dolly urges her to do something for the sake of her unborn child. In desperation Eileen finally sends the key of her apartment to Ballantyne.

She goes out hoping to find Ballantyne at his houses to plead with him. He, however, passes her and gains admittance to her apartment. While he is there Jack enters. One sight of Ballantyne is enough—he withdraws in a rage. Ballantyne threatens Eileen with exposure that night at dinner unless she accept him as her lover.

Sure that Ballantyne will keep his word, Eileen makes a confession at the dinner table. Jack, who has hid himself with the idea of killing Ballantyne, forgives his wife readily and takes her in his arms.

"UNDER THE GREENWOOD TREE"—ARTCRAFT

Characters Sacrifice Action for Conversation, But Star Is Good

BARRING the first reel, there is hardly any action in the plot of this picture. It consists chiefly of talking among the different characters, or addressing the moon, waters, nature and so forth. With possibly an exception now and then, no picture can be entertaining when it is built on a plot as slow as this is.

The heroine is presented as a wealthy, titled young lady who loves nature. She has many admirers among young and old of her social set, but none of them attracts her. She invites them to the woods, promising to choose one of them as a husband. She masquerades as a gypsy, and while swimming in the pond, meets a young man of fine appearance. They are attracted to each other, and after many adventures, they become engaged.

The picture has been taken outdoors, natural scenery furnishing the background in the majority of the scenes. Had the story been stronger, there is no doubt in my mind that it would have furnished a satisfactory entertainment. This one doesn't come up to the talents of Miss Ferguson. An extensive review of this picture was given on page 2889, issue of Nov. 9.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

SUGGESTIONS

Miss Ferguson's name is one to conjure with as she has appeared in a number of Artcraft successes released during the past year. Use her name prominently in all display, whether it be newspaper or lobby advertising and mention some of her past successes such as "The Lie," "Hearts of the Wilds" and "Barbary Sheep." She is a talented actress and deserves prominent mention in whatever advertising you do.

The title itself offers you the chance to dress up your advertisements in the proper atmosphere. In the background you might arrange a picture of a large tree with gypsy vans encamped beneath, while in the foreground, in bolder strokes, show Miss Ferguson. Your artist should be able to make such a display by drawing the background figures in sketch, using cutouts from a still for the foreground.

AD TALK

"Under the Greenwood Tree," with Elsie Ferguson as its star will be the attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week and for ——— days thereafter. This is an adaptation of a play by Henry V. Esmond in which Maxine Elliott was seen when it was produced in New York in 1908. Miss Ferguson is seen in the role of Mary Hamilton, an English society girl who tires of the conventional routine of her existence and who takes it into her pretty head to lead the life of a gypsy for a while. So with her secretary she makes camp on forest land belonging to Jack Hutton. Hutton takes it for granted that she is what she appears to be and sends his men to drive her off his property. But when he catches sight of her himself he changes his mind.

The romance and adventure of Mary and Hutton form a photoplay that is charming in every respect. There is the delightful comedy introduced when Mary spreads a feast for Hutton on silver plate. He wonders where she procured it and for the joke of it she says that she stole it. Hutton, of course, can not understand this code of life (and for that matter neither can Mary) and the comedy is high as a result. The pair's experiences with real gypsies lends added interest to the tale and the romantic angle of the story is not the least of its many attractions.

Miss Ferguson, one of the most talented dramatic actresses on the screen today, performs with a rare appreciation of the requirements of the part and is responsible for the creation of a brilliant character. Eugene O'Brien, leading man for Norma Talmadge in many of her pictures, is Miss Ferguson's leading man, playing with rare power and skill.

THE STORY

Mary Hamilton, an heiress, wearies of her existence in conventional society and determines to have a fling. With her secretary, Peggy, she secures a gypsy van and outfit and camps back in the New Forest, living and dressing the life of a gypsy. The gypsies from whom she bought the van discover that she has money and attempt to bully her into paying more. Mary bids them to be gone at the point of a gun and they go, but with vengeance in their hearts.

Sir Kenneth Graham, one of Mary's admirers, comes to see her in camp and also dons gypsy garb. At this time Jack Hutton, who owns the ground where Mary's camp is made, decides to run all gypsies off his property. Sir Kenneth is apprehended and cast in jail despite his objections. But when Jack catches sight of Mary he changes his mind about this particular gypsy. It is a case of love at first sight. Later in the day he returns to partake of a feast Mary has prepared for him on her very best plate. She tells him that she stole all this silverware and Jack is horrified.

Peggy, who loves Sir Kenneth, goes to liberate him and, after Jack's departure, Mary is set upon by the angry gypsies. Jack returns to Mary's defense but is knocked senseless by the band. Peggy and Sir Kenneth return to the rescue and Mary, because she wishes to watch over Jack through the night, administers a dose of laudanum. In the morning Jack insists that Mary marry him that he may transplant her into a decent environment and it is not until then that he discovers the identity of Mary. So, with Peggy and Sir Kenneth happy and with Jack and Mary happy the ending of this romance is actually four-power happiness.

CATCH LINES

"THE SQUAW MAN"

SUGGESTIONS

You have a magic title, a magic cast and the name of a big producer to go the limit on with this production. First be sure and distinguish between this present picture and the old "The Squaw Man," also produced by Mr. De Mille. This is positively a new production, as is proven by the fact that Dustin Farnum was the star of the earlier production. Just run a line in your newspaper and lobby advertising announcing this fact.

The play by Edwin Milton Royle was one of the most successful of the Belasco productions and was seen by many thousands. It ranks with the biggest hits of the stage and don't overlook this fact in advertising it. Play the title up big. Then you have De Mille's name. De Mille is one of the best known, and rightly best known, directors of the time. You will recall his previous successes. The national billboard advertising inaugurated by Paramount has thrown his name and picture before the vast majority of the public. He is a "star" and a good deal better known than many stars that appear before the camera.

You can go the limit on the cast too. Look at the array of names in it! Of course it contains no star in the strictest sense of the word. But it does contain the names of many players who have been featured. Elliott Dexter, Jack Holt, Ann Little, Katherine MacDonald and Thurston Hall have appeared opposite many stars and are well known themselves. The list of character men in the production is notable too. And for that matter, every member of the cast has become familiar to picturegoers by their appearances in Lasky pictures.

"TONGUES OF FLAME"—BLUEBIRD

Interesting Story and Heart Appeal Should Help Put This Over

AS it was said in the review published in our issue of Nov. 9, on page 2889, this picture will offer your patrons satisfactory entertainment, as it is based on an interesting story. It contains also the element of heart appeal.

The plot is based on the book "In the Carquinez Woods," by Bret Harte. It treats of the love of a botanist for a former dance hall girl, whom he had met in the woods, while studying plants. The woman had escaped from the hands of the sheriff, who arrested her for stabbing a man who attempted to harm her.

The picture opens with a view of the heroine on horseback. She is seen cutting the rope with a concealed knife, shoots and wounds the sheriff, and then escapes. Towards the end, it develops that the sheriff is the father of the botanist.

The natural scenery used as a background for the picture is very beautiful and adds to the entertaining values. A remarkable artistic feat is also accomplished in the photographing of the sun's rays between the branches of the trees in the form of light-shafts.

The picture is clean and should please.—Released Nov. 25.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

"Tongues of Flame" is adapted from Bret Harte's famous story, "In the Carquinez Woods," one of the classics of the literature of the west.

Bret Harte wrote of the west as no other. He wrote in bold, vivid strokes and painted the land of his heart with the utmost fidelity upon the printed page. "Tongues of Flame" is an adaptation of one of his best known stories, "In the Carquinez Woods," and the producers have brought out the wonderful atmosphere of the original work with amazing attention to detail.

Marie Walcamp, popular Bluebird star, in a visualization of one of Bret Harte's classics of the western land of old.

Sheriff Dunn sought Dormant, the half-breed, with murder in his heart. Dormant, fleet of foot, with agile brain, was ready to fight to the death with the clumsy sheriff, when he came upon evidence that showed the man was his father!

AD TALK

A real western picture will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week when the Bluebird photoplay, "Tongues of Flame," will be shown for the first time. We say real because the picture is based on Bret Harte's well known story, "In the Carquinez Woods." Harte was the man who set down on the printed page the true spirit of the west of old. As O. Henry saw more in New York City than any other author, so Bret Harte saw more in the west. To these men their respective fields offered the richest possibilities, and so the literature from each one of them is bound to live for all time.

"In the Carquinez Woods" is perhaps one of the best known of all the western author's works. It contains ideal picture material, and the producers were by no means lacking when it came to utilize it to its fullest extent. It tells the story of the love of a half-breed for the fiirt of a western town, and how he, in turn, was loved by a dance hall girl he had befriended. Like all of the author's works, the tale builds to an exceedingly vivid and surprising climax in which the half-breed's blood relationship with the sheriff, his bitterest enemy, is disclosed.

Marie Walcamp is the featured player, giving full life to the role of the dance hall girl, Teresa. Al Whitman, Lilly Clarke and Alfred Allen interpret the other principal roles in excellent style. The adaptation was entrusted to Lanier Bartlett, a well known writer for the screen, while Colin Campbell, noted as a dramatic director, took charge of production details. We feel sure that all our patrons will feel amply rewarded after witnessing this release. It is one of those westerns, all too scarce, that is "different."

THE STORY

Through the Carquinez woods passes Sheriff Dunn, his deputy and a captive girl, Teresa. During the night the girl succeeds in killing the deputy and after inflicting wounds on Dunn makes her escape. She is found and protected by Dormant, a helf-breed, who lives in the hollow of a giant tree. He recognizes her as a girl of the dance halls who stabbed her lover in a quarrel. Dormant protects her and Teresa grows to love him. He, however, is attracted by Nellie Wynn, daughter of the country preacher, who is a flippant girl, attracted to Dormant because he is different.

They often meet each other in the woods. On one of these occasions Dormant asks Nellie for a dress, telling her that it is for the wife of a poor trapper. Instead he gives it to Teresa, who is almost in rags. Teresa wears it, and one day is seen in the forest by a suitor of Nellie's, who believes that the girl is Nellie herself. He goes to Dunn, also a suitor for Nellie's hand, and tells him of this, saying that the girl goes to the forest to visit Dormant. Dunn, crazed with jealousy, rushes to the woods to kill Dormant, but Teresa learns of his plan and goes to the tree to warn the man she loves.

Dormant has found a note book which gives him the information that Dunn is really his father, having betrayed his Indian mother years before. So he refuses to combat with Dunn when he comes in search of him. And then a forest fire sweeps through the woods and Dunn, Teresa and the heartbroken Dormant perish in the flames.

SUGGESTIONS

In order to get the full worth out of this picture don't stop after you have handed out the information that it is a "western." Be sure to mention the name of the author, Bret Harte, for he ranks high among the American authors of the previous age. His many books dealing with western life have been read widely, and "In the Carquinez Woods," from which "Tongues of Flame" is adapted, is one of the most popular. Give all this information in your newspaper advertising and you will attract unusual attention. It is quite probable you will bring new patrons to your house besides, as Bret Harte readers who, perhaps, look with some disfavor on the motion picture, will welcome the opportunity to see what a producer has done with this one of his works.

In a high class neighborhood district Harte's name should be featured even above the star's. However, you who will run this picture know just how popular Marie Walcamp is in your neighborhood, and if you think it advisable play her name up in the usual way. It is our opinion, however, that the author's name will draw the money in this instance.

"WOMEN'S WEAPONS"—PARAMOUNT

Contains Plot That Is Sure to Go Over; Heart Interest Is There

ALTHOUGH there are no new situations treated in this picture, intelligent handling by the director, assisted by several human touches that have been inserted in the story, make a clean and wholesome entertainment.

The employment of two little children, a boy and a girl, neither of them over four years old, add to the entertaining values. The story depends on them a great deal.

The plot deals with the heroine's efforts to win back her husband, who has become infatuated with an adventuress. She pretends to have been hurt and can't do any house work. The adventuress, who is visiting, is requested to do the cooking, but proves a failure. The husband then is glad to fall back on his faithful stand-by, his wife.

The action of the plot is speedy, the photography good.

It is a picture that will appeal to the human emotions, therefore should please all.—Length, 5 reels.

CATCH LINES

A sure way to cure a man of a vampire: Place the lady next the kitchen stove and ask her to get dinner. The man, on sampling the dinner, will straightway eject her from the house. This is how Elliot learned in "Women's Weapons."

In order to save her husband from the wiles of Esmee, Anne invited her to their home. Then she suddenly took to her bed on a pretense of illness and Esmee was obliged to make an attempt at housekeeping. And she made a poor attempt. Anne was triumphant.

Ethel Clayton, who, among emotional actresses has few equals, seen in her second Paramount picture, "Women's Weapons," by Beulah Marie Dix.

Women's Weapons are more effective than men's. The manner in which Anne Elliot saver her husband from a vampire who preached of a "higher life," by the use of these weapons makes an absorbing photoplay admirably told in five reels of "Women's Weapons," now at the ——— theatre.

AD TALK

Ethel Clayton will make her second appearance on the Paramount program next ——— of ——— week in "Women's Weapons," a story of modern day society written expressly for the star by Beulah Marie Dix. "Women's Weapons" tells the story of a man, his wife and another woman—the triangle that will be of interest for all time—but Miss Dix has provided many an original twist, many a satiric thrust and many situations of delightful humor as well as heart appeal in her treatment of this trio of characters. Her people are humans and they deal with their problems quite in the manner of persons of the flesh. There is none of the wild melodrama attendant on so many productions based on this theme. In fact, the author has treated the whole thing rather lightly, and as a result has turned out a story of refreshing originality.

The wife of the play, seeing her husband infatuated with another woman, invites this woman to their home and there, by sheer natural contrast, shows her up in her true colors and brings the man around to a realization of his folly. Miss Clayton, as the pivotal angle of the triangle, plays with a charming ability and a deep sincerity that have long since established her as one of the most skilled actresses on the screen. Elliott Dexter is seen to advantage as the husband, while the third angle is realistically portrayed by Vera Doria.

Robert Vignola, director of many of Pauline Frederick's successes, took "Women's Weapons" in hand and has succeeded in producing a picture that will probably rank as his best. All our patrons are urged to see "Women's Weapons" as, without a doubt, we consider it one of the most entertaining features presented thus far this season.

THE STORY

Until their children are stricken with scarlet fever, Anne Elliot and her husband, Nicholas, a novelist, are perfectly happy. When this occurs, however, the house is quarantined and Nicholas is forced to live away from his wife. During this time he becomes attracted by Esmes Hale, an artist at work on illustrations for his new book. Esmee is a false Bohemian and takes it upon herself to "save" Elliot from his too "commonplace" existence. When at last the fever has passed, Anne comes to the realization of her husband's intimate relations with the artist. However, she says nothing to him.

Esmee, though she is a supposed aesthetic, must live and Elliot must pay the bills. And Esmee is extravagant, so Elliot takes to plunging in Wall Street. He loses, while Anne, on the other hand, makes several wise investments and succeeds in trebling her capital. She keeps this good fortune from her husband and suggests that they take a little cottage by the sea and begin work on a play that they have long had in mind. Elliot consents to this plan, but he must have Esmee, so she takes up her quarters with husband and wife.

Here Elliot learns the value of contrast, and Anne, seeing her opportunity to bring him to his senses, dismisses the maid and then takes to her bed pretending to have scalded her foot. Esmee is, therefore, obliged to tend to the duties of the household and here she fails miserably. Removed from her confining sphere she proves to be a slattern, an incompetent house-keeper. Furthermore Elliot discovers that she is considerable older than he thought. And so Esmee makes her inglorious exit and Elliot begs Anne's forgiveness, which she is ready to offer.

SUGGESTIONS

Besides having a talented and popular star in Miss Clayton to exploit in this production, the producers have offered you a good title and one which will certainly arouse curiosity if you put a little thought into your advertising. You might use a line such as "Man uses his fists but woman uses her tongue. Which is the strongest weapon? in your advertising, of whatever character. The picture has many subtle comedy moments and so strive to gain a light tone in your advertising. Reports indicate that the public is changing more and more to the lighter type of picture during these times and if you wish to appeal to them, get away from the heavy stuff in your advertising or lobby display.

An idea that would suffice to bring out this lighter side of the production and at the same time appropriately designate the character of the production could be fixed up by your artist if you had him draw a picture of a man, standing with fists clenched and otherwise showing his rage, while opposite him is a woman laughing. Underneath this picture run your announcement.

The wife got the vampire to come and stay with them, and then matched her at cooking and housework right in front of the misled husband.

Talk about a victory! The wedding ring certainly came out on top.

Priscilla Dean Subject Not Up to Her Mark, But Should Please

THIS offering was reviewed lengthily in the issue of November 9, on page 2889. Although it does not compare with some of the best Priscilla Dean pictures, it should give satisfaction just the same. Action of plot, suspense and some heart appeal are the elements upon which it has been built.

The star acts in a very peculiar, nevertheless interesting and pleasing, way of her own. She portrays the role of a fearless and impulsive but kind-hearted girl convincingly.

There are some improbabilities in the story, but they will be overlooked by picturegoers, because the picture is entertaining.

It is a clean attraction and suitable for any theatre.—Released Dec. 2.—Length. 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

SUGGESTIONS

While "She Hired a Husband" is something akin to a one-reel title there is no denying the fact that the producing company has again supplied the exhibitor with a caption that opens the way to distinctive advertising with quite a number of angles to work from. A glance at the synopsis here will indicate the character of the story. It can be seen that it has a number of original twists that make refreshing a much-used theme.

In advance announcements in your own program in general and in newspaper advertising play up the title. If you plan showing the picture for any length of time it might do well to institute a teaser ad campaign. Use the title of the picture, and after it such lines as "Would You?" "But She Got Her Money's Worth," "And he elected to stay hired," and "He refused to quit the job." In later announcements dress up display with one of the catch lines provided here.

And do not forget that Priscilla Dean has come into great vogue recently. Her pictures have touched an exceedingly high mark, and the star herself is accomplished. Cash is on their personality and record of hers by referring to her past performances when you present "She Hired a Husband." At any rate, give mention of "The Brazen Beauty," which was Miss Dean's greatest success to date.

AD TALK

"She Hired a Husband" is the title of the Bluebird attraction that the management of the ———— theatre will present on ———— of ———— week. This feature has as its star, Priscilla Dean, the young actress, who rose to her present position of importance in the short space of a year. Miss Dean has had numerous successes of late, but it is safe to say that "She Hired a Husband," besides being exceedingly clever in plot, provides her with a role of the richest possibilities. She appears as Daphne Trowbridge, who lives with her aunt and uncle, and who makes life miserable for them by her constant perversity. They finally decide to marry her off, but when Daphne gets wind of their scheme she rebels, even though the man of their choice, Tom Dunstan, is also the man of her own selection.

She avoids all the matches prepared for her, and finally decides to hire a husband. She goes in search of this article, and finds a fellow to her liking in the person of a woodsman, heavily bearded, apparently, just out of the forest wilds. He consents to her proposition to become her husband in name only. Back in the house he shaves and discloses himself as Tom. Daphne, however, refuses to believe that the man she married and Tom are one and the same and the manner in which he convinces her of his dual personality, and at the same time cures her of her perversity, makes a tale of great dramatic strength which is at the same time subtlely amusing.

THE STORY

Daphne Trowbridge is a most perverse young person who worries her aunt and uncle from morning until night by constantly going contrary to their wishes. In time they are unable to bear it longer and decide to marry her off to—Tom Dunstan, a young man, who lives on the estate next door. They sing his praises to Daphne, and she, perverse as usual, turns him down when he proposes. Tom departs quite broken up about it. The next suitor the Trowbridges select for their neice they speak of in no kind terms, and their plan works for a while for Daphne accepts his proposal. However, she discovers the trick just before the wedding and refuses to partake. Determined that they shall see her secure a husband for herself, she goes out in search of one and picks a heavily-bearded stranger she meets at the station. They are married with the understanding that it is to be a "name only" contract.

At home the "stranger" removes his beard and proves to be Tom, and he, wise fellow, decides to cure Daphne. She does not recognize him as the man she married, so Tom paints her husband in an array of horrible colors. Tom then disappears to the north woods again to look into his lumber interests, and later returns as the "stranger." This time he kidnaps Daphne, and takes her off to the wooded wilds where he proceeds to practice the tactics of the caveman upon her. Eventually she becomes a dutiful wife. She is again kidnapped by Tom's enemies, and after a fierce fight he rescue her. An old scar on his shoulder reveals his identity to Daphne, and she is more than happy to discover that her husband and the man she really loved all the while are one and the same.

CATCH LINES

Daphne bought a "bearded stranger" for a husband; merely to oblige her aunt and uncle, and when the beard came off she discovered hubby to be the man she always loved!

Daphne Trowbridge suffered from a severe case of plural perversity until her lover disguised himself and practiced the well-known caveman tactics upon her.

Priscilla Dean, an actress so competent that she just had to become a star.

Daphne Trowbridge wasn't hard up at all. She could have had any one of a dozen young men for a husband, but to save herself from such suitors she hired a husband. This purchased article proved to be the man she had loved all the time.

If you want to get anywhere with a perverse young person just be contrary yourself. This is the way the Trowbridges figured Daphne, the only trouble being that they let her in on their game, and then there was the very dickens to pay.

"THE GROUCH"—WORLD

Average Entertainment, with Good Stars and Adequate Settings

THIS picture which centers around the romance of two strange outcasts provides entertainment of an average order. The two principal characters, ably interpreted by Montagu Love and Dorothy Green, are in the limelight of the spectator's sympathy from start to finish.

The picture contains some highly unusual and pretty settings. The company went to a southern state to get the swamp scenes that are shown in the opening reels. These are most extraordinary and have been excellently photographed in the bargain.

Director Oscar Apfel's hand is seen in the majority of the scenes of the picture. He has the happy faculty of getting the most from his players and this was never more in evidence than in this picture, particularly with the case of Dorothy Green. There are a few scenes in the latter part of the picture that fail to ring as true as the others, but this may be due to the fact that the story, with respect to its titles at any rate, takes rather an artificial turn.—Released Nov. 25.—Length, 5 reels.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Donald Graham.....Montagu Love
Fleurette.....Dorothy Green
Captain of Okfees.....Albert Hart
Narciso.....John Davidson
Cure.....Arda La Croix
John Cabin Branch.....Geo. De Carlton
Corinne Branch.....Margaret Linden

CATCH LINES

The story of an outcast of society and an outcast of savages, superbly told before a background of a most unusual order.

Montagu Love, a star by right of ability, was never seen to better advantage than in "The Grouch," his latest World picture.

The pirates of old were outright in their plundering, the pirates of today use more subtle but far more treacherous means. See how Donald Graham won out in battles with the pirates of the swamps and the pirates of finance.

Fleurette used a dagger for revenge. Graham attacked his enemies through the market, and Fleurette couldn't understand "civilization."

A story pictured, in part, in the famous swamp land of North Carolina. You will see some of the most amazing scenes ever unfolded on the screen.

Graham wanted to take a cruel revenge on the woman who caused his ruin, but because of the woman who loved him he desisted.

AD TALK

The management of the ——— theatre takes pleasure in announcing as its attraction for ——— of ——— week the World picture, "The Grouch," starring Montagu Love. "The Grouch" is an unusual picture in many ways. Firstly, Mr. Love is one of the few male stars of the present day who refuse to rely on smooth hair and poses to put his work before the public. He is an actor, every inch, and his many character portrayals in World pictures have brought him deserved success.

In the second place, "The Grouch" has some of the most unusual scenes ever seen on the screen of a picture theatre. The story called for a tractless swamp as its background in the first part, and in order to obtain exactly the proper atmosphere Director Oscar Apfel took his company to a vast swamp in a southern state. Here the foliage was dense, the undergrowth rank, while the waters of the swamp covered an exceedingly large area. It was the ideal location for the earlier scenes of the picture and the company remained there for several days taking the exteriors. Remarkable camera work obtains in these scenes and this is rare. Usually in damp climates the film becomes moist and as a result the photography is poor. In these scenes, however, it is superlative.

As for the story, we will leave that for the picture to tell itself. Suffice it to say that Mr. Love interprets one of the strongest characters of his career, while Dorothy Green as Fleurette, the girl of the swamp lands, creates a character the like of which has never been seen on the screen before. Mr. Apfel, one of the pioneer directors in the business, has done his usual superlative work.

THE STORY

Donald Graham is an ex-convict and is shunned by all men. After being discharged from a surveyor's troupe busy lining out an almost impenetrable southern swamp, he takes a position as caretaker of a house near by. To this place comes one Fluerette, a member of the band of Okfees, pirates' descendants who still steal, ravage and plunder. Fleurette has flown her wedding feast because the man she was to marry proved himself a coward when struck down by the chief. Graham, bitter toward all women because of his wife's faithlessness, greets Fleurette coldly. He insists that she dress as a boy and take the name of Bill. One night the Okfees attempt to take Fleurette away and Graham fights for her. Afterwards the two strike out along the road together.

In one town Graham learns that he has inherited a fortune. By this time he has grown to really love Fleurette, and with her as his wife he returns to the city. There he plans a revenge. Corinne, once his wife, has married again. Through the market Graham attacks this man, Branch, and succeeds in accomplishing his ruin. Then Corinne, fickle and selfish as of yore, again offers herself to Graham. He pretends to accept her proposal and meets her at a road-house. Here, however, he tells her that it is all his revenge. He is about to strangle Corinne when, in desperation, she tells him that he will find Fleurette with her husband.

This is true, Fleuerette had gone to Branch in order to give Graham grounds for divorce. But, wild and impassioned, she had, at the last moment, set fire to the house, intending to die and take Branch with her. Graham arrives just in time to save her. Branch, too, is saved, and his greatest punishment is to remain alive with the mercenary Corinne.

SUGGESTIONS

The most novel thing about this production is the swamp stuff that is shown in the early scenes of the production. You may be able to devise some distinctive advertising around the mention of this swamp land, and in any advertising you prepare take a still showing one of these scenes and incorporate it in the advertisement. This angle is certainly more refreshing than the rather conventional one which the plot itself offers you, that of revenge prevented because of the love of a woman.

Talking and Posing Do Not Make a Good Picture, Says Reviewer

HAVE you ever met a talkative friend, who kept pounding away at you, for an hour or so on a variety of subjects, none of them of great importance? Didn't that penetrating talk of his afterwards remain in your memory for hours, sometimes days, haunting you wherever you went? This is exactly the effect the subtitles in this picture have on you. They stand out prominently in your mind, long after you have seen the picture. They insist upon remaining imbedded in your thoughts.

This picture consists mostly of talking and posing, two things that never make a satisfactory picture, or the kind an exhibitor could show to his audience with pride. The story belongs to the fiction class in which the imagination usually has a free rein. It is the kind that has always fascinated children, but is out of place among adults of the present generation, except when produced as a comedy. A serious attempt has been made towards the latter end, unsuccessfully, however, owing to the ever present drawback that a cast, which is admirably suited for dramatic parts, is out of tune in comedy. The result is a picture that will hardly appease the picture-hunger of a spectator.

The views showing the hero in an intoxicated condition, by no means help to make the picture acceptable to family audiences.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

SUGGESTIONS

Be sure you bring out the comedy of this picture in your advertising. You have a corking title to work with and one which will suggest any number of angles to work from. The lines given in the advertisements compiled by Paramount will give a good idea of the right angle to plug from. Don't let a serious note enter your advertising or any publicity stories you may send out regarding the picture and, unless we miss our guess, you will have the people coming.

If you care for contests you might inaugurate one on this idea: "How much money would a man have to spend in order to diminish forty million dollars in one year, the money all the while drawing regular interest?" This should interest the children at any rate. On the other hand you might suggest that the man in "Too Many Millions" is up against just such a question and needs help to solve it.

AD TALK

Wallace Reid is to be seen at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in his latest Paramount photoplay, entitled "Too Many Millions," a happy adaptation of Porter Emerson Browne's successful novel, "Someone and Somebody." Mr. Reid is a versatile actor, and has been seen on the screen of the ———— theatre in subjects of both a serious and a humorous nature. While he is generally well liked in either comedy or drama, his forte seems to lie in interpreting the former type of entertainment. His pleasing personality, good looks and ability serve him in excellent stead for assuming the role of Walsingham Van Dorn in "Too Many Millions."

Walsingham is a book agent when first introduced, and not a very successful one either. He is about to partake of a light repast in a cheap restaurant when word reaches him that he has inherited the sum of forty million dollars. Now Walsingham being more or less of an intelligent fellow, even though he isn't a successful book agent is rather shocked at this. Twenty million would have suited him just as well, but when two kind uncles wish a fair-sized Liberty Loan on him he doesn't know how to take it.

Suffice it to say, he does take some of it, but he has just gotten a fair start, when a gentleman of bad habits takes it all away from him. So in company with the girl he loves (even book agents love girls), Walsingham gives pursuit, but is unable to recover the money. So he settles down to work, and the girl settles down as his wife, and they are getting along happily indeed when the crook returns with the money. It's too much for him, and he hands it back. The trouble is that the newly-married pair have been so happy without it that they don't exactly know whether they want it again.

THE STORY

Walsingham Van Dorn is a book agent and not a very successful one. One day he is shocked almost to insensibility on learning that he has inherited forty millions of dollars from two uncles who passed out hand in hand. He visits the offices of the lawyers and meets Wilkins, an old rogue who turns out to be his personal attorney. Van Dorn places all the details in his hands and starts out on an attempt to make a hole in the forty million. He doesn't get very far into it when he tires of the wild life and asks Wilkins if there isn't a nice place where he can settle down. Wilkins leads him to the home once belonging to Mr. Lane. The gentleman has succumbed after being fleeced by Van Dorn's late uncles. His daughter Desiree has been forced to take a job as waitress.

She learns of Van Dorn's fortune, and resolves to retrieve her share. The next morning Van Dorn awakes to find Desiree demanding the money. At this juncture a messenger comes in and announces that Wilkins has decamped with the millions. Van Dorn and Desiree decide to give pursuit, but they don't get very far. In fact, they get no further than a hotel, where they are obliged to spend the night. The hotel takes a notion to burn down, and the two young people barely manage to escape. Their clothes are burned and, to prevent a scandal, they get married.

Van Dorn secures employment in a garage, and with Desiree as his wife is perfectly happy until, quite a while later Wilkins appears at the door of their home and hands over the fortune—all contained in two bags. Van Dorn and Desiree have been so happy without it, however, that they hesitate to take it. The audience's advice is asked on this question.

CATCH LINES

Wallace Reid in another Paramount comedy in which the fascinating Ora Carewe appears as his leading lady.

Do you think you could make forty million dollars look smaller after you had had access to it for a year? Perhaps you have thought that you could, but at the rate of a wine party every night, two automobiles a month, all silk shirts and made-to-order clothes, and generous contributions to charity, you'd still have over forty millions when you come to count up. Walsingham Van Dorn despaired of ever spending such a fortune.

Suppose, young man, that you woke up one morning and found a pretty girl seated at your bedside demanding two million dollars! This would be embarrassing enough, but when you had to refuse the little request!

A clever adaptation of Porter Emerson Browne's "Someone and Somebody."

James Cruze, whom most of you remember from the "old days" makes his debut as a Lasky director with "Too Many Millions." And it's some debut!

Wilkins tried to give Van Dorn forty million dollars! Van Dorn wouldnt take it. Such a predicament to be in!

State Board in Madison Lets Up on the Ban

WHILE many communities throughout the State of Wisconsin have lifted their ban, the greater part of the state is still under the orders of local health officers who are taking great precautions. An order issued by the State Board of Health in Madison Thursday afternoon authorized local boards of health throughout the state to raise the ban wherever conditions will warrant.

The order specifies that if there is a recurrence of the epidemic in any locality where the ban has been lifted restrictive measures shall be immediately taken to bring the epidemic once more in check. The order follows:

"The local health authorities should warn the public that the danger from a recurrence of the epidemic is not passed and, therefore, the people should be warned to exercise every reasonable precaution in safeguarding their health during the next few months. These precautionary measures are especially applicable to localities in which the disease has not appeared to any considerable extent, as well as to localities in which the disease has been extremely prevalent.

"Epidemics of a similar type and character in the past have subsided slowly, and we have every reason to believe that the final disappearance of this epidemic will be slow. Therefore for the next three or four months, and possibly for the coming year, danger from pneumonia will still exist as a result of the serious and widespread infection."

It is easy to see what effect this is going to produce upon the moving picture industry of the state. Every newspaper in the state will carry articles warning the public against crowding and congregating, with the result that the attendance may be cut to a considerable extent.

The epidemic has secured a strong hold on Wisconsin and no place worse than Madison, the capital city. The people have become thoroughly aroused to the situation and are taking precautions that would have been declared excessive at other times. They have developed the habit of avoiding crowded places, and it will take some time before their fears will be allayed. Moving picture managers are looking forward to a hard fight to win back the people.

Madison promoters have gone over their playhouses where it has been necessary and installed new ventilating systems. They are installing washed-air systems that insure the best possible air for their patrons and will do anything reasonable to prove to the people that movie houses are willing to prevent the spread of the infection.

An army health officer upon visiting Madison this past week stated that at no place had he found the epidemic worse than in this city, and advocated a week or two more of inactivity.

The epidemic is beginning to spread into the northern communities from reports received, while in the western section it is not serious. Small communities are practically immune to the epidemic and will lift the ban beginning next Monday.

Local managers have been in the film exchanges booking the best pictures with which to conduct their opening campaign for the favor of the people.

Lansing Public Becomes Anxious for Theatres

WHILE the influenza epidemic in Michigan is improving, no orders have yet been issued setting any date for the removal of the ban against theatres, churches and all public meetings. However, if the situation continues to grow better it is unofficially reported that the lid may be lifted by November 9th.

Telegrams have poured in upon Governor Albert E. Sleeper and Dr. R. M. Olin, secretary of the State Board of Health, at Lansing, both urging and opposing the reopening of all public places. Messages have been especially numerous from churches, particularly Christian Scientists, asking that they be permitted to resume services Sunday. One telegram carried the threat that the "wrath of God" would be directed against them unless they brought about the opening of the places of worship.

W. S. Butterfield, Battle Creek, representing the Michigan Circuit of vaudeville and combination theatres, and Charles Seaman, Grand Rapids, with John H. Kunsky, Detroit, called on the Governor to have the theatres reopened. Their viewpoint was changed and they left pledging their co-operation in the fight against the disease.

Dr. Arthur Hume, Owosso, president of the State Medical Society, emphatically protested against reopening at present. Dr. William De Kleine, health officer at Flint, wired advice to go slow about opening as the situation was still serious. Experience of Eastern communities and advice of government officials and health officers favor keeping the ban on for some time. Hundreds of new cases are developing and there have been many deaths.

The public is becoming anxious to attend the theatre again and see motion pictures, so when the lid is taken off there is every reason to believe that the attendance will be unusually large.

Show Pictures at University of Wisconsin

IT has been reported from Madison, Wis., that arrangements have been completed to show photoplays for the amusement and education of the 5,000 S. A. T. C. men at the University of Wisconsin. Committees were appointed from the various companies, and they in connection with the Army Y. M. C. A. are making the necessary arrangements to provide the cantonment boys with the best in pictures.

Picture Stars Are Made, Not Born, Says Samuel Goldfish

"WELL, I hope they won't insist on making a star of him, too," said Samuel Goldfish moodily as we watched a beautiful new leading man at work in the Goldwyn studio.

"What do you mean, they?" we asked; "don't you make your own stars?"

"Of course we don't and never did," he replied. "It isn't the producer nor the director nor the newspaper that makes stars. It is the public—the moving picture fans. They pick their own stars. They select the authors, they determine the style and line of each particular star. They do everything, in fact.

"A few months ago, for instance, it became obvious that 'they' had decided to star Tom Moore. It was no decision of mine. In fact, it was with a wry face that I realized it. Tom Moore was the best leading man we ever had—a perfect juvenile because he is good-looking without being a mere pretty boy, and there is no such thing as a part too difficult for him. He was an ideal foil for either Madge Kennedy or Mabel Normand. So you can see that it was an infernal nuisance when he became a star; it meant not only organizing a new company but finding a new leading man; and that just at present is about one of the hardest jobs in the world.

"The draft has taken so many of them. And those who, for one reason or another, are exempt have acquired an idea that moving pictures came into existence to pay them bank presidents' salaries."

"How can you tell when the public has made up its mind that an actor or actress should be starred?" we asked breathlessly.

"By the size of their mail every morning," replied Mr. Goldfish dryly. "If it fluctuates or is only moderately large I know I have a popular leading man or woman and needn't worry. But when it reaches a certain steady volume—say 300 letters a day—then we have an unfailing sign.

"It is curious, but the stars of the screen seem to engage the imagination of their public far more powerfully than the actors and actresses whom people hear as well as see. Of course, the public is much wider. You would be astonished at the bulk of mail that arrives at the Goldwyn studio every week from far countries. Japanese fans are great letter writers—so are the South Americans, it seems.

"Then, too, the appeal to the eye is stronger than the appeal to the ear. Scientists will tell you that the visual sense is more keenly developed in the great majority of people than the auditory sense. On the other hand, many persons with sensitive ears are more and more inclined to avoid the spoken drama just because their ears are sensitive. Many American actors and actresses are like children—should be seen and not heard."

"But what do you mean by saying that the public selects the authors and the line of work for each particular star? Can't an actor be the master of his fate or the captain of his soul if he wishes to be?"

"He may think he is," said Mr. Goldfish. "But the moment he thinks it too strongly the public promptly puts him in his place. Let a comedian take it into his head that he wants to do serious parts and he will soon be on the rocks. It is the public that decides. And it has a ruthless, positive way of enforcing its decisions."

"The difficulty is," we suggested, "to find out what its decisions are."

"Not at all," said Mr. Goldfish calmly.

"Not difficult? Then why aren't there more successful showmen?" we asked, with the air of one who has just sprung a poser.

"Because most of them try to impose their own tastes on the public, and the public resents it. There is a terrible lot of hocus-pocus talked and written about the show business. It is a matter of plain common sense, calculation and observation."

"Does that mean you think anybody can go to work producing pictures or plays and wait for the public to show him how to do it?" It sounded so easy.

"No, of course not. It requires a certain peculiar quality of imagination, though the most important thing is to be decently humble, to approach the job without an attitude of superiority. There are producers, for instance, who have had the luck to produce one picture which the public liked. They immediately began to think they were a combination of Barnum and George Cohan and Charles Frohman and it was up to them to teach the public.

"Now, if you ever see me trying to convince Mabel Normand and her public that she is not a comedienne—and I am sure she is the greatest comedienne on either the screen or the stage today, that she will be as great some day not very far off as Chaplin—if I ever lose sight of that fact and try to convince the public that she is a Margaret Anglin, you may sit right down and write my obituary. Or if I ever cast Madge Kennedy for a vampire! Of course, these are extreme instances of imaginary foolishness. And yet I have seen things done on the screen only slightly less foolish."

"For instance?" we said, wishing to get away from generalities and hear some real gossip.

But Mr. Goldfish shook his head and hurried away to talk to Los Angeles on the telephone.

Carry On—and On

Is Your morale weakening? No, we thought not.

When they tell you the industry is in a bad way—carry on. Being "Up Against It" is merely the signal to come back stronger than ever.

They Say in Chicago That—

F. C. AIKEN, the world-known Chicago manager of Select Pictures, is now comfortably settled in new and magnificent quarters on the 19th floor of the Consumers Bldg.

AFTER two and one-half amusementless weeks all Chicago theatres are opened, after undergoing a rigid inspection by the health officials as to their sanitary conditions. Houses failing to live up to the regulations issued by the Health Department will be closed again.

DR. ROBERTSON will keep health officers at all of the houses to see that the Health Department regulations are carried out to the letter. Woe be unto to those who trifle with the orders as they stand today. Representatives of the Health Department are to appear regularly on the platforms and stages of all theatres and deliver two-minute talks on "How to Escape the Influenza." A systematic campaign will be waged in this manner to stamp out the disease.

MISS E. M. HOPKINS of the Doll-Van Corp., Chicago office, has just suffered the loss of the one dearest to her. Killed in action—James McClune; the message read.

I. L. LESSERMAN, manager of the Universal Chicago office, is a happy man; with both hands full of telegrams covering the bookings of various exhibitors in the territory now opened up.

ALLEN ROCK, the publicity man for "Lafayette, We Come," has been in Chicago arranging important matters for his company.

JAMES O'NEIL, manager of the Lake Forest, Ill., theatre, has committed suicide, according to reports.

CRESS SMITH, the active manager of the Metro Chicago office, is now happy and wearing a smile—answer: The theatres are reopening.

HARRY WEISS of the Central Film Co.—he who never sleeps—has been spending his enforced vacation traveling through Indiana by automobile.

MAX BALABAN, of Balaban & Katz, is now stationed at Great Lakes, but finds time to run into the city and visit his many friends.

AARON J. JONES, of Jones, Linick & Schaeffer, has returned from West Baden, having entirely regained his health and ready to handle the large volume of business that he is looking forward to this season.

C. E. ELLIOTT, of the Playhouse, Chicago, has recovered from his recent attack of the "Flu."

LINCOLN SQUARE THEATRE, Decatur, Ill., has been purchased by the Decatur Theatre Co., who will operate it from November 1.

A. A. NELSON, manager of the Colonial theatre, Galesburg, Ill., has been seriously ill for the past four weeks.

C. SANFORD HARRISON, general manager of the Bear State Film Co., reports that their production, "The Vigilantes," has been taken by the Central Film Service Co. of St. Louis for the State of Missouri.

C. J. HAFFERKAMP, formerly manager of the Troy theatre, is now in charge of the Plaisir, Crawford and Irving Park Blvd., Chicago.

IT it reported that a deal is on foot whereby the Hoyburn Theatre Company is about to purchase the Bodkin and Keane interests in Evanston, Ill., thereby giving the Hoyburn people the control of the town.

C. C. WHELAN, manager of the George Kleine System, Chicago branch, reports that the exhibitors are coming to life in all quarters, supplied by the Chicago office as evinced by telegrams, letters and personal calls that are increasing daily.

NATE ERBER, of the Lincoln Square theatre, Decatur, Ill., has resigned as manager.

CHAS. DAHLER, of Abingdon, Ill.; Carl Mueller, of Rock Island, and Pete Wales, of Lanark, Ill., have been Chicago visitors, arranging their bookings pending the raising of the "Flu" lid.

MR. AND MRS. NATHAN ASCHER have returned from their New York trip.

FRANK J. REMBUSCH, the well-known Indianapolis exhibitor, and manufacturer of the Rembusch screen, has been a busy gentleman in Chicago for some few days.

THE DOLL-VAN CORPORATION has purchased the Wm. S. Hart picture, "Lion of the Hills," which is said to be a brand new picture, and not a re-issue.

SID GOLDMAN, Chicago manager of the Jewel Productions, has secured the Ziegfeld theatre, Chicago, for a run of their new production, "The Yellow Dog," Henry Irving Dodge's big story, vividly dramatized from the "Saturday Evening Post" and Harper & Bros. book.

OTTO MARAUGHN, manager of the Lincoln theatre, Fulton, Ill., is now stationed at the Great Lakes Training Station, but is a frequent visitor in Chicago.

FROM indications winter will soon be here.
A. J. Jones has his winter top on his automobile.
George Moore, of the Orpheum theatre, is trying out his radiators.
Harry Weiss bought a set of skid chains.
R. C. Seery is organizing a Poker Club.
Sig. Faller, of the Bijou Dream, has bought a fur coat—Class.

JOE FRIEDMAN, of the Celebrated Players Film Corporation, wonders if you know what an optipessimist is. If not, he would be glad to enlighten you.

GEORGE KLEINE and his able assistant, Myrel Smith, made a flying trip to New York. Rumor has it that there will be some big doings presently. Something that will make all branches of the industry sit up and take notice.

MRS. EMMA COHEN, manager of the Casino theatre, located on Madison street, has the distinction of being the first one to open in the Loop, Thursday, October 31. The lady beat them all to it and was reaping a harvest long before the others started.

News and Gossip of Springfield Theatres

SPRINGFIELD theatre managers are an optimistic lot—not one of them being very much excited about the enforced shutdown caused by the influenza epidemic.

W. W. WATTS, owner of the Gaiety and Vaudette theatres, says: "If by closing down our theatres for three or four weeks we can safeguard the health of the public, we are perfectly willing to do so. Lives are more important than all else. Of course we stand to lose a great deal, but it is all for a good cause. We have no complaint to make. During the shutdown we have made many alterations and improvements, and fixed things up generlly, and we hope our patrons will appreciate the changes when the opening time comes."

HARRY LOPER, of the Lyric, stated to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS' representative: "We look for increased business after the epidemic passes, and believe the public will attend the theatres in larger numbers than before. The closing down for a couple of weeks does not make a great deal of difference one way or another. We only hope that our closing has resulted in checking the disease which has proved so deadly, at least helped the health authorities in stamping it out. We have utilized our idle time in completely renovating and decorating the theatre—a matter which could not have been done had we remained open."

W. D. CAVE, of the Chatterton, says: "We will stay closed as long as the board of health wants us and without a murmur. In fact, we believe we are saving money by being closed. As an example of how badly scared Springfield people are of influenza, the leading restaurant of this city, which is always crowded, served several hundred less people on last Saturday than usual. Since then business has again decreased. If folks will not go to a crowded place to eat, they will not go to the theatre. We have again set back the engagement of 'Hearts of the World,' and will not bring the picture here until the situation has been restored to normal. We think it most unwise to open the theatres at this time—from a financial standpoint."

ED KUNZ, of the Princess, had the following to say: "I really believe we have saved money by being closed. With high priced films on, and the papers warning the public to keep away from crowds, it is almost a certainty that all theatres would have had poor attendance, had we been allowed to remain open. So, in this respect, I am not sorry the board of health issued the closing order, in fact we expected it sooner. I believe that business will be extra good after the opening—and maybe at the end of the year we will find ourselves as far ahead in the long run."

GEORGE RIORDAN, of the Majestic, states: "Business was cut to half the last week we were open. I feel that we would have suffered greatly had we kept open, because the public would not have attended our shows—no matter how good they might have been. The closing order has really saved us money."

W. W. WATTS, owner of the Vaudette and Gaiety, and Harry Thornton, manager of the Gaiety, were in Chicago the first of the week of October 20th. They had a look at the new Riviera theatre, and pronounce it the prettiest playhouse they have ever seen.

ADOLPH KUNZ, one of the owners of the Princess, has been ill for several days with influenza, probably contracted in Chicago on a recent business trip.

ED MAISEL, of the Capitol, has been putting his house in order for the past two weeks. Ed is not being worried about the closing order and says: "We will make it up when we open again."

ISADOR BURNSTINE, of Lincoln, and former owner of the Casino and Capitol theatres of this city, lost another brother this week with influenzt. This makes two of Mr. Burnstine's brothers to die within seven days.

THE outlying theatres—Pekin, Empress, North End Circle and Palace—are being overhauled preparatory to opening.

MAJOR H. T. LOPER and Mrs. Loper returned to Chicago after visiting with their son, Harry Loper and family. The Major expressed his delight at being able to get away from business for a few days. The Lopers operate the Kinbark theatre, on the south side of the big town.

SEVERAL of the theatres will be short of operators when the reopening takes place. It is understood that some of the boys have secured better paying positions, and that they intend sticking to them. The high wages being paid in some lines—due to the labor shortage—has been an obstacle theatre managers have had to contend with here for some time

GEORGE PEHLMAN, former publicity man for the Lyric, writes from Liverpool that he and his company are O. K. George is with Hospital Unit "W," Dr. Ottis' crack outfit, and they are stationed at a base hospital for the duration of the war. Pehlman tells about making a flight, in which the aviator gave him cold-blooded chills by looping the loop, flying upside down, and making nose dives and tail dives.

OFFICE seekers who had prepared slides to be used in the picture theatres during the now fast waning political campaign will not be able to use them. This has always been a popular way of getting before the public—and a profitable way for the theatres who felt that they could show them.

TOO bad the theatres could not have been open to take advantage of the extra hour's business caused by the turning back of the clock on Sunday, October 27. The houses really lost business when the hands were moved up last spring, and it is safe to assume that there will be some gain from the giving back of the lost minutes.

Central States Edition Brings Results Promptly and Plentifully

THE Savoy and Royal theatres, owned and managed by the Kerasotes boys—Louis and Gus—are being painted and fixed up in grand style.

HARRY LOPER has received word that his brother, Lieutenant Russell Loper, is stationed near the Verdun front in France.

THE following editorial was printed in the Illinois State Journal the morning after the closing order, under the caption "-Closing the Theatres":

"Springfield's theatres responded promptly to the closing order of the state department of health. The houses were darkened promptly, and with cheerfulness the proprietors prepared to make the best of the situation.

"In thus evidencing their disposition to co-operate with the public authorities, the theatre managers show the same disposition which has characterized their conduct with respect to war work. Every patron of these places of amusement has been impressed with what they have done in aid of Liberty Loan campaigns, the Red Cross activities, and their contributions along these lines have been the subject of much favorable comment.

"The closing of the theatres means a heavier sacrifice than any heretofore made. In every instance, it represents a direct money loss, accompanied with a suspension of serious consequence to the business. To darken a playhouse is always disastrous, particularly where the suspension occurs in a theatre which has a steady daily patronage. In view of this fact, the attitude of Springfield's managers furnishes an excellent example of public spirit to others who may be called upon to make sacrifices."

Michigan Lifts Ban on November 8

AT a special conference held in Detroit on Saturday, November 2, Governor Albert E. Sleeper, of Michigan, said that the state wide ban on amusements and public gatherings would positively be lifted on and after Friday, November 8, and possibly a day sooner. However, he felt sure that it would be possible to do so on November 8th, unless meanwhile there was a sudden increase in the epidemic which was almost impossible in view of the preventive methods being used to combat the disease. The governor publicly announced that the closing of theatres, amusements and public gatherings was not a political move but was forced upon him by the state board of health and the mayors of 25 of the leading cities of the state. "In view of their recommendations after investigating conditions in their respective localities, I could take no other step than to close public gathering places until the crisis had passed and until the state board of health felt sure there would be no further danger. In times like this with people sick in every section—with many lives being wiped out by the epidemic, it puts every business man in a rather sensitive position. Of course, the loss is heavy in dollars and cents, but on the other hand, the safeguarding of public health is always the first thing to be considered. Many people do not realize the seriousness of disease until it hits their own family and then they take an entirely different attitude of the situation."

The Detroit film exchanges will continue to follow their original plan of booking—setting all dates back and practically starting bookings from where they left off. This is entirely satisfactory to exhibitors.

Will you send a package of home cheer to a lonely American boy in France?

HE doesn't want to come back home till his job is done—he doesn't mind the hardships and the danger—all he asks is that once in a while a "bit of cheer" be sent to him to ease his lonely vigils on the rim of "No Man's Land."

Tens of thousands of American Lads are today fighting our battles in France. Soon there will be millions. They will want letters from home—they will want "smokes" from home. Tobacco eases the shell strain. It comforts the wounded. It is a "first aid" to the surgeons and Red Cross nurses.

If you knew what comfort and pleasure and satisfaction the tobacco bought with your dollar or your five dollars (go as high as you like) gives to American boys in the trenches, you'd forget the money, or the little sacrifice, or anything else.

25c buys 45c worth of "smokes."

$1.00 buys a month's supply of tobacco

$5.00 buys enough to keep 5 men in tobacco for a month.

And remember: Every package of tobacco sent to our boys in France contains a return postcard, addressed to you, which he'll mail to you if he can possibly do so. That's a war souvenir worth having. Dig down—deep and quick!

"I wish you all possible success in your admirable effort to get our boys in France tobacco."

Heard in Detroit

GEORGE W. TRENDLE, of the John H. Kunsky Enterprises, Detroit, was down to the office for the first time in two weeks on November 2. He battled with the influenza disease and finally rallied.

THROUGHOUT the three weeks' closing, Charles H. Miles of the Regent and Orpheum theatres, Detroit, ran advertisements in the newspapers on his coming picture attractions. He was the only Detroit theatre that used an inch of newspaper space. When the Regent reopens Henry Santrey will again conduct a Victory Sing in connection with 3,000 trained voices.

UP to the time of writing no successor had yet been appointed to Dave Prince, Triangle manager, in Detroit.

A. J. REED, George Kleine manager in Detroit, is arranging to transfer his headquarters from the present Kleine exchange in the film building to the offices of the General in the same building. This will not take place, however, for several weeks.

WHEN W. W. Hodkinson productions are released through Pathe about November 23, C. A. Meade will be in charge of the Detroit selling. He was appointed Hodkinson representative several weeks ago, and will continue to act in that capacity when the change in distribution is made.

JOE HORWITZ has purchased the half interest of George Backer, New York City, in the Foursquare Exchange, Detroit, giving him complete control and sole owner. Mr. Horwitz has been a half owner of the exchange which is conducted in the film building. Mr. Horwitz has had a rather interesting career. He came to Detroit originally from New York about 18 months to sell for the Universal exchange. Within a few months he had built up a large following and was one of the most popular film salesmen, being given the nickname of "Hustling Joe." Then he went with Foursquare Pictures through friendship with M. H. Hoffman, later buying a half interest. He is now the sole owner. His success in Michigan within such a short space of time is due to his fair treatment to everybody and the confidence which exhibitors place in him. He is now the sole owner also of Today and the Mad Lover for Michigan, and is in the market for other big productions.

JERRY ABRAMS, representing The Wharton Producing Co., David Horsley, representing his own productions, and M. H. Hoffman, who came in the interest of his new picture, "Suspicion," were recent visitors in Detroit.

THE Delft Theatres, Inc., have purchased the Strand theatre in Escanaba, giving them two houses in that city. This gives the corporation complete control of the theatre situation in Escanaba, Marquette and Munising, of northern Michigan. H. S. Gallup is general manager of the corporation, which L. L. Jacobs is in charge of the situation in Escanaba.

COL. W. S. BUTTERFIELD, owner of the Butterfield circuit of theatres in Michigan, anticipates that theatre business will be better than ever when the theatres reopen as people will "want to make up for lost time."

A BABY BOY, eight pounds, named Alfred Merle, was born to Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Reed (manager of the George Kleine exchange, Detroit) recently. His middle name is taken after Merle E. Smith, general manager of exchanges for George Kleine.

ARTHUR S. HYMAN has decided to operate in the future under the style of the Arthur S. Hyman Attractions, Owen building, Detroit, instead of the Dawn Masterplay. His first new release will be "Wives of Men." He also has purchased "The Million Dollar Mystery," revised edition, and several other productions.

Flagg Interested in Musical Scores

THE publicity department of Famous Players-Lasky this week announced that the matter of suitable musical accompaniment in the presentation of screen comedies has aroused the interest of James Montgomery Flagg. Exhibitors, even some of those who pay a great deal of attention to their musical programs, for the most part fail to study carefully the possibilities which these short subjects offer, is the opinion of the creator of the delightful screen satires known as Paramount-Flagg Comedies. Speaking on the subject the other day, Mr. Flagg said:

"From the earliest days of motion pictures almost to the present time, there has been but one type, generally speaking, of screen comedy. That is the so-called slapstick variety. I freely grant their popularity and their value, too, as entertainment. Now, there is a certain kind of music that is played with all these comedies. It is rag-jazz-biff-boom-bang music. It has to be, there is no alternative. But I wish that orchestra leaders would not play that kind of music with my pictures. They are not that kind of comedy.

"These comedies of mine are different. They are not, and they are not intended to be, mile-a-minute, catch-as-catch-can laugh riots. The tempo is much slower. They are not even meant to fill the plac of the other kind or even to compete with them. They appeal—if they do anything—especially to people who like to watch themselves—their own characters, or preferably their neighbors' characters—unfold before them on the screen—their human foibles, their failings, the absurdities of American life. While the other type of comedy yanks a guffaw out of the system, these pictures of mine, I hope, will call forth chuckles.

"I have sat in motion picture super-theatres while some of my pictures were shown, and I have squirmed as the 'symphony' orchestra strained its esteemed lungs, arms, legs, fiddles, drums and watchman's rattles in a supreme effort to live up to tradition and bust the eardrums of the audience—so that I could hardly see the screen. Why shouldn't exhibitors exercise their artistic judgment in the selection of instrumental accompaniment for my pictures in proportion to their effort in presenting the five-reel dramas?

"Broadly speaking, the Paramount-Flagg comedies require a more subtle kind of music—waltzes, humoresques, ballads, etc.—not the explosive jazz of the cabaret. It will harmonize with the pictures, where the whizbang brand only irritates because it is discordant. Harold Edel, who shows my pictures at the Strand, has the right idea. He studies them carefully and his accompaniments are invariably harmonious. I wish that every Paramount-Flagg exhibitor in the country might drop in at the Strand when one of mine is shown, and then pattern his music after Mr. Edel's methods. Then, I am sure, my cause for complaint would be removed."

Review of Latest Publications

1—"Oriental Suite" by Irenee Berge. 1. Arabia (Arabian Festival March)—2. India (Hindu Prayer)—3. Spain (Moorish Dance)—4. Egypt (Homage to the Sacred Ox)—5. Japan (Geisha Dance)—6. China (Dance of the Mandarins). Pianists and organists will be much interested to know that Irenee Berge, whose moving picture music has achieved international fame, has made another valuable contribution to this class of literature. These numbers are not alone highly characteristic of the different countries, but the themes employed are of classic beauty. This work is only issued for piano solo. The orchestration will be brought out in the near future. (Ross Jungnickel, 15 Whitehall St., N. Y.)

2—"Grande Marche Triomphale" by Irenee Berge. This grand march of noble and heroic measure has been sponsored by "The American Relief Legion" as the American Wedding March. This number will prove a boon to the average pianist, for while it is tremendously effective, the technical difficulties have been reduced to a minimum in this piano solo edition. (Ross Jungnickel.)

3—"Rainbow March." Mr. Louis Maurice, the well-known composer, has just published through the house of Feist an inspiring march, the "Rainbow March." It is respectfully dedicated to the soldiers and sailors of the U. S. A. and is considered a sequel to that other popular march "The Great Divide," written by the same composer for the famous dramatic story of Henry Miller.

4—"When You Come Back." Want to start a riot! Then play Geo. M. Cohan's latest hit. Great one step—bigger than his previous one—"Over There." Play it, sing it, whistle it, and help win the war. (Fischer-Witmark Orch. & Band Dept., Cooper Square, N. Y. City.)

5—"Do-Re-Mi." Fox-trot by Otto Motzan. Here's a distinct dance novelty for you. Leaders call this the classical fox-trot and it's some dance favorite. A mighty good number and a masterly arrangement. (Shapiro, Bernstein & Co., 228 W. 47th St., N. Y.)

6—"Liberty for All." By Alfred Francis. The snappiest, brilliant and most effective march hit of the year. It's the greatest military march of the age, the kind of a march that made Sousa famous.. (Shapiro, Bernstein & Co.)

7—"You'll Find Old Dixie Land in France." Fox-trot by Geo. W. Meyer. Here's a brand new one that is simply a gem. (Feist Edition.)

8—"A Rainbow from the U. S. A." The big hit of "Everything," the New York Hippodrome super-spectacle. Fox-trot by Percy Wenrich. (Feist Edition.)

9—"When I Get Back to My American Blighty." A new 6-8 number that is full of American "pep." One-step, by Theo. Morse. (Feist Edition.)

10—"Berg's Descriptive Series," by that famous composer of music for the film, Gaston Borch. "Silent Sorrow" (Characteristic Andante Pathetique), "Peacefulness" (A Beautiful Andante Simplice Idyl), "The Crafty Spy" (An Original Descriptive Mysterioso), "Battle of Ypres" (A Characteristic War Scene), "Turbulence" (A Melodious Allegro Agitato Con Fuco), "Perpetual Motion" (An Allegro Agitato a la Tarantelle), "Slimy Viper" (A Mysterious Tone Picture). Colorado Experiences Fifth Week of Influenza Ban

ON October 28th Colorado theatres entered upon the fifth week of inactivity due to the closing order of the State Board of Health on account of the epedimic now raging throughout this and other states nearly all over the country. So far as Colorado was concerned on October 29th, there is small hope of the ban being lifted much before two weeks. The situation in the state is still very serious and the authorities are inclined to take no chances on a premature opening.

For several days past new cases reported in Denver daily have averaged two hundred, and there has been a total of approximately 250 deaths. The mortality records for the whole state have been broken. Pueblo's daily average of new cases is about two hundred.

New Mexico, Wyoming and Idaho report little improvement in the situation. The epidemic is abating in Utah with the exception of Salt Lake and Ogden, where strict quarantines have been maintained.

The Nebraska authorities have rescinded the closing order in several sections of the state, effective on midnight, November 1st, but quarantines will be maintained in localities where the disease is not under control.

Omaha lifted the ban also at midnight November 1st. Theatres there opened on Saturday, and several houses started with a program beginning at one minute after midnight on October 31st.

Clift Believes Day of War Play Is Gone

DENISON CLIFT, special feature writer for William Fox's West Coast studio, and formerly of the Lasky and Ince scenario staffs, believes that the war play, with its battle scenes, will soon vanish.

"But there will be war plays and war plays for fifty years and more," declares Clift; "not the kind of pictures that have won popularity during the war, but stories dealing with the myriad social questions and problems growing out of the war. The influence of the war will be felt in stories, plays and literature in general for several generations."

Clift has completed scripts for several Fox stars, including "The Coming of the Law" for Tom Mix, "Quicksands" and "The Sneak" for Gladys Brockwell, "The Danger Zone" for Madeline Traverse, and is now at work preparing versions of other stories for winter work at the studio.

Merle Davis Takes Management of Ansonia Amusement Company

THE most important theatre sale of the year in Montana was consummated at Butte when Phil Levy, largely interested in the Ansonia Amusement Company and its general manager, disposed of his interests to Joseph Oppenheimer, well-known Butte capitalist.

Mr. Levy, who is president of the Montana Exhibitors' League, having served at the head of the state picture men's organization for the past four years, retires. He will remain in Butte looking after other business interests.

Close on the announcement of the sale of the Levy interests in the amusement company comes the official report that Merle Davis, well-known advertising man and artist, has been selected general manager and E. Marshall Taylor, former manager of the Orpheum, will serve as assistant general manager.

The Ansonia company is the largest in the state, operating the Ansonia, Orpheum and Broadway theatres in Butte, the New Marlowe in Helena, and the Pantages in Great Falls, as well as booking Pantages through Montana.

Mr. Levy has been in the show business in Butte for seven years and has been successful. With his retirement also comes the resignation of W. W. Wisner as manager of the Broadway. Mr. Wisner will devote his entire time to his advertising business.

For seventeen years Mr. Davis, new director of the Ansonia houses, has been advertising manager and artist for the Symons Dry Goods Company, a leading Montana store.

The new management is taking advantage of the "flu" shutdown by making extensive improvements at the Ansonia and Orpheum. Both houses are being dressed up a bit. The inside ticket office at the Ansonia is being eliminated and the usual custom of a ticket booth near the street will be adopted.

Selected pictures will be a feature. The old Princess theatre, now closed, will be used as a projection room where every picture shown at any of the Ansonia houses will first be reviewed. The patrons will be given only such selected and reviewed pictures. The censorship will be in the hands of the managers and if it does not measure up to the requirements the picture will simply not be shown.

At the Ansonia the full picture program will be shown and in addition two Hippodrome acts booked by the Kelly-Burns circuit. C. W. Eckhart will continue as manager of the Marlowe of Helena, a new house featuring moving pictures and also playing the big road attractions.

Rosebaum Elected President of Northwest Board of Trade

H. G. ROSEBAUM, newly elected president of the Northwest Film Board of Trade, is manager of the Seattle branch of the Famous Players-Lasky Film Corporation and one of the best liked men on Film Row. He was elected because of this and because the members wished to continue to have a man with energy and force at the head of the organization. The Northwest Board has made a wonderful name for itself. Many Eastern Film men have praised its work and have commented that it did better work then the Eastern boards. Mr. Rosebaum has always believed that the exhibitor is the most important link in the industry and in order to uphold it, he believes that the board should do all in its power to make things as easy as possible for the exhibitors.

The retiring president, J. A. Koerpel, manager of the Seattle office of the World Film Co., is given great credit by his colleagues for giving the name of The Northwest Film Board of Trade the wonderful one it has for efficiency, consideration and willingness to help the government in every way possible. One of Mr. Koerpel's latest ideas has been to establish "Emergency Stations." This will, in many instances, bring some of the small country show houses 4,000 miles closer to Broadway. These emergency stations are nothing but railroad station houses, where films will be left in care of railroad men, so that in case an exhibitor does not receive his films on account of the poor train schedule, a snow storm, etc., he can travel to one of these stations and obtain some sort of a film. This is but one way of co-operating with the producer.

The board also co-operates with Uncle Sam, who has praised it, by helping sell his bonds and producing pictures that show war events.

H. G. Rosebaum, Manager of Seattle Branch of Famous Players-Lasky, Who Has Been Chosen President of Northwest Film Board of Trade

Portland Exhibitors Want Allowance for Time They Are Closed

SINCE October 10, all picture houses and theatres of t city have been in darkness, but at the present time, inc cations are that the quarantine ban will be lifted in about t days.

On Thursday, October 24, a meeting of all theatrical a amusement interests men was held at the Heilig theat there being present more than 30 members of the amuseme fraternity. Among the matters which were introduced in t discussion were those of the influenza ban, the new tax b which is now before the Senate, and the matter of rents du ing the time in which the closing order is in effect. A cor mittee composed of the following men was elected: Walt Armstrong manager of the Strand theatre, chairman; secr tary, Walter W. Kofeldt; W. W. Ely, Hippodrome theatr Sol Baum, manager of the Universal Film Exchange; C. I Hill, of the Paramount Art-Craft Exchange; William Pang manager of the Heilig theatre; Joe Bratt, manager of the Ecl theatre; G. T. Holtzclaw, of the Circle theatre; Larry Hea ing, of the Lyric theatre; Frank McGettigan, of the Orpheur and Calvin Heilig, of the Heilig theatre.

This committee of men met in the office of Mayor Bak Friday morning with Dr. Parrish, City Physician, and D Sealy, of the State Board of Health. The committee r quested that more drastic action be taken in regard to t quarantine ban which had been put on the city. It w pointed out that numerous department stores were holdi sensational sales, which resulted in drawing large crowds their establishments. It was pointed out that in several par of the city the orders of quarantine were not being obeye The committee stated that so far, it would seem as if the th atres and churches were being discriminated against. The requested that the ban be placed on the city tighter than eve

The committee also appointed drew up a set of resolutio to be submitted to the various landlords whose premises a being occupied by the theatres. In these resolutions it w requested that the landlords make some allowances to the tenants for the time that they are closed, and it is expecte that the landlords will be very fair in this matter, as son four or five have voluntarily signified their intentions to me with the unusual conditions.

A telegram was sent to senators McNary and Chamberlai at Washington, D. C., reading as follows: "At a combine meeting of all of the Oregon theatrical interests held in Por land today, a resolution was unanimously passed that on a count of the influenza epidemic causing the closing of th atres which naturally is resulting in a great loss of revenu to the parties concerned, we ask that you will use every e fort to afford some relief in the bill increasing the war ta on amusements. Inasmuch as the immediate levying of suc a double tax coming on the heels of the closing order it wou cause great financial embarrassment."

Latest News Around Seattle

AS to the closing of the theatres in Seattle, no one manager wishes to give his opinion for publication. The consensus of opinion, however, has been that a little politics has been brought to play, together with the "flu" scare. All managers and exhibitors have willing to help the city administration do away with the "flu." Nevertheless, they could not see why the theatres could not stay open in Seattle when they were open in New York. One manager remarked that as far as cleanliness and ventilation were concerned, there were very few houses all over the country that could, as a whole, compare with those of Seattle, and that if the city officials would allow the houses to stay open the managers would fumigate them as many times a day as the officials desired. All seemed to think it perfectly proper that the houses should be closed until all were perfectly cleansed and arrangements were made to keep them in that order. They would be glad to ask anyone to leave in case they sneezed.

AMONG those recently seen on Film Row were N. E. Hoff, Fred Mercy of Yakima and T. E. Edmundson.

AFTER the City of Prosser was closed for a few days on account of the "flu," the Mayor opened it again. The manager of the Prosser theatre then ordered "To Hell with the Kaiser" and after two big days the town was closed up again.

L. P. CATTER of Baker, Oregon, is remodeling the Baker theatre and is making it ready for high-class road shows. On account of war conditions he will employ girl ushers, who will wear white shoes, blue stockings, white skirts and blue middies. S. J. Idem was promoted assistant manager.

EUGENE LEVY, manager of Levy's Orpheum, has decided that he will add musical stock productions to his motion pictures. Changing off from one to another.

Ruffner Expresses Opinion of the Four Weeks Close Down

THE cessation of film manufacture for a thirty-day period may prove a boon to the producer, but the enforced shutdown of theatres is almost disastrous to the exhibitors, according to the opinion expressed by Ralph Ruffner, manager of the Rialto theatre, Butte, to a Motion Picture representative.

The Rialto is one of the leading houses of the Northwest and is devoted exclusively to moving pictures and music. It is one of the celebrated string of Jensen-Von Herberg theatres.

"The theatre managers are called upon to face a crisis in their business which is without precedent. The closing orders came like a bolt from the blue and we had no time to adjust ourselves to the new conditions so suddenly brought up. We simply had to obey the orders and think at leisure."

In this manner did Mr. Ruffner express himself. "We are not complaining, but every theatre closed is hit just in proportion to its size," he continued. "But from the standpoint of the employes do I see an even more vexatious problem. For instance, at the Rialto alone forty-five employes are out of work and will be until resumption, the date yet being indefinite. All of these bought Liberty Bonds of the fourth issue. In fact this house and employes subscribed 100 per cent. Some of them, I personally know, went the limit and now will be unable to meet the next instalment. It is up to the banks or the Government to permit them doing so by some arrangement or other.

"What goes for the Rialto in this respect may be said of every other house in the city."

Another item referred to by Mr. Ruffner was the loss of revenue resulting to the Government. In Butte, from the theatres alone, if the shutdown lasts a month, the tax loss will be $10,000.

"Not in a spirit of criticism do I wish to point out this defect in the orders of the Board of Health, but so that it may be helpful should another such calamity ever befall us again," he said. "It is evident that the Board has not gone far enough. It should be 'all or none' in respect to shutting up everything possible or else nothing. In Butte only the theatres, churches, schools, public gathering places and pool halls were closed. The danger to exposure to the 'flu' germ exists at non-essential stores and many other places."

Speaking of conditions in the theatre as regards ventilation and fumigation the manager stated: "We have one of the most complete ventilation, cooling and heating systems in the country. We can freeze or steam people on short notice. We can fill all space quickly with disinfectants. In fact the Rialto is a good place for people to come if they want to be disinfected."

Mr. Ruffner commented on the fact that the month of business which is plucked from the theatre calendar is one of the best of the year. "The average theatre, generally speaking, overcomes its inevitable natural losses resulting during the summer months by way of retrievement by November 1. Now that opportunity is snatched away. A cream month is gone."

In and Around Denver

DENVER theatres are ready for the opening on short notice, and it is certain the fans will require equally short notification. Several of the Curtis street houses have undergone extensive alterations during the enforced closing period, including the Rivoli, formerly the Paris, which changed hands a few weeks ago. This popular rechristened show house will open with Thomas Dixon's "The One Woman" and a special musical program.

AT Colorado Springs, Frank Tammen, owner of the American theatre, has completed extensive improvements which included the remodeling of his entire front and redecorations, which involved an outlay of $20,000. He will open with the First National's production, "Romance of Tarzan," or Sessue Hayakawa in "His Birthright," released just before the closing order through Mutual.

M. H. TODD, manager of the Princess at Cheyenne, and his wife are staying in Denver until the ban is lifted. He says conditions in Wyoming are very bad.

WALTER S. RAND, district manager for General, has successfully dodged the "floo" and is spending ten days in Denver. When asked about business in his district he said: "Just fine"; but quickly corrected his statement and added that his answer was merely force of habit.

R. H. McCLUSKEY has resigned as salesman for Mutual out of Denver. He will operate the Strand at Hoisington, Kan., which was closed several months ago by W. T. Hollar.

E. B. REMINGTON, another Mutual salesman, is working in the beet fields in northern Colorado at $5 a day and find yourself. He will return to Mutual when the game is on again.

EDWARD ARMSTRONG, district manager for Universal, is back from Butte and Salt Lake. He says that "floo bird" ought to be sent back to Germany.

MAX ISLAR has taken over the Gem theatre here, which was formerly operated by Mrs. Anna Jordan, who is now in Seattle.

P. G. ARMBUS, owner of the Royal at Gehring, Nebraska, has purchased the Liberty at Lusk, Wyoming, and the Opera House theatre at Manville. He expects a big business at his new houses on account of the oil boom in that section.

R. J. CHURCHILL, former local manager for Fox, has left for Camp Kearney in California on a general call. Mr. Churchill resigned his position with Fox early in August, expecting a call in September. He was experienced and very popular here and his departure is a matter of much regret. He was formerly salesman in Kansas City territory for Artcraft when that organization first opened an office there, and later opened with Geo. Klein when he established his service in Kansas City. He was also connected with V. L. S. E. when they first opened at that place. He was in charge of the Denver Fox headquarters fourteen months.

Unfinished Productions Bridge Gap at Famous Players-Lasky Coast Plant

IN connection with the closing of the picture theatres in various parts of the country temporarily and a resultant suspension of releases, Frank Garbutt, West Coast business manager of the Lasky studio, outlined the conditions at the big Pacific Slope plant of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and at the Morosco studio. Mr. Garbutt stated that Cecil B. De Mille began work on a new picture, as did Ethel Clayton. These two pictures will be completed, as will those of Vivian Martin at the Morosco plant and Bryant Washburn, when all will take four-week lay-offs. Lila Lee and Wallace Reid have both completed their pictures and have stopped work for the same period. Those stars who are now in work will take their lay-offs at the end of the pictures, as to shut down in the middle of the productions would entail great loss and extra expense. As the lay-offs will not all occur at the same time, the studios will not be entirely shut down, and as a consequence only a certain proportion of the workers will be idle at any time during the period of partial inactivity.

There is every belief that the climatic conditions of the West Coast will result in an early victory over the disease that is now prevalent.

Cecil B. De Mille made a fine start on his new Artcraft picture, written by Jeanie MacPherson, while Ethel Clayton, under Robert Vignola's direction, is doing a mystery picture by Carolyn Wells. Lila Lee has gone to New York to spend a month's vacation with her guardians, Mr. and Mrs. Gus Edwards. Wallace Reid will probably go on a vacation. Ann Little, his leading woman, declares she will stay at home. Vivian Martin is busy with a new production under Chet Withey. Bryant Washburn is getting on famously under Donald Crisp with "Venus in the East," supported by Margery Wilson and Anna Q. Nilsson. He will take a rest following the completion of the picture.

The weekly drill of the 51st Company (Lasky) Home Guard was called off in deference to the Health Department orders. It is hoped that drills may be resumed shortly. For the same reasons the maneuvers in the San Fernando Valley have been indefinitely postponed. The minstrel show may yet be held as planned on November 16, depending on the state of affairs. But unless the ban is soon removed it will not be possible to hold rehearsals, which may delay the performance. Everybody is hoping for the best.

A recent visitor to the Lasky studio was Mrs. Gerard, wife of the former ambassador to Germany, and a party of friends. They viewed the studio with much interest.

A rumor locally to the effect that Cecil B. De Mille would sever connections with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, of which he is director general, is emphatically denied by Mr. De Mille and all concerned. He may do considerable war work, but his affiliation with the concern remains absolutely unchanged in any degree.

News of Los Angeles Studios

PRINCE AXEL, of Denmark, upon the occasion of his visit to Los Angeles during the latter part of last week, insisted upon visiting the "movies." Accordingly, he was entertained by Cecil B. DeMille at the Lasky plant, and later by Charlie Chaplin at his studios in Hollywood.

ELBERT W. BIBY, father of Edwin Biby, of the publicity department at the Chaplin studios, died this week at his home in Long Beach. He has two sons in the service, one at a training camp in Texas, and another in the Red Cross work in France.

A RUMOR was current in Holywood that Charlie Chaplin had been attacked by the "flu," but this was denied by Chaplin in person when he appeared two nights in succession in the lobby of the Alexandria hotel. Chaplin expects to begin "shooting" on his new picture soon. The subject is yet unnamed, but the scenes will be laid in a rural community, it is announced.

A NUMBER of stories appeared in the Los Angeles press that Priscilla Dean, Universal star, was engaged to be married to Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, former race driver, but now one of the American flying aces in France, but the story was denied by Miss Dean. She says she is a "sturdy" friend of Rickenbacker, and nothing more. Her next picture will be called "The Gutter Rose," and the story is now being prepared under the supervision of Director Ted Browning.

ELINOR FRIED, formerly film editor of Universal, stationed at the New York offices at 1600 Broadway, has reached the Pacific coast to collaborate with Frank Lawrence, the coast film editor of Universal, on Universal and Bluebird productions.

THE recent picture made by Charles Ray under the working title of "Dreamy Dub," will be released under the title of "The Girl Dodger," it was announced at the Ince studios this week. In this play Ray is seen as the bookworm who evaded feminine association. He eventually fell into a situation that is said to have changed his ideas of the fair sex.

J. BARNEY SHERRY has been reengaged by Thomas H. Ince to play the part of a millionaire stock broker in a photoplay now being produced. Sherry has interpreted so many milionaire parts that he is now called "the millionaire of the screen."

ENID BENNETT has begun work on a new picture, which is to be a drama with a desert setting. The story was written by J. G. Hawks and will be directed by Fred Niblo.

DOROTHY DALTON has begun work on a new film play which it is said will be one of the most elaborate in which this star has ever appeared. She will play the part of an ambitious New York society woman.

THE stages at the new Thomas H. Ince studios in Culver City are nearing completion. It is claimed they will be the largest and lightest in the country. The administration building will be completed within about three weeks.

GEORGE McDANIEL, who played opposte Theda Bara in one of her last pictures made on the coast, completed the lead this week in Harold Bell Wright's screen interpretation of his novel, "The Shepherd of the Hills."

MAY ALLISON, who recently finished "Thirty Days," her last production for Metro before the closing order was received, spent last week at home, announcing that she would take a vacation in the mountains before returning to work.

Agnes Marc Has Been Engaged As a Member of the Stock Company at Famous Players-Lasky West Coast Studios

RALPH ROBINSON, publicity director for Metro, has been placed in Class A1 of the draft, and he is expecting a call to the colors any day. His brother, Carlyle Robinson, who was personal representative and publicity director for Charlie Chaplin, has received his commission as second lieutenant at Camp Pike, Little Rock, Ark. Lieutenant Robinson expects to be soon sent to Camp Funston, Kans., now under command of Maj. Leonard Wood. It is understood that another promotion is in prospect for him and that he will be placed in command of a company

TAKING advantage of the lull in production activities, a party composed of Charles and Al Christie, George Beban, Sessue Hayakawa, Scott Sidney, E. Mason Hopper and Jack Pratt, spent the week duck hunting in the vicinity of Elizabeth Lake. Statistics of the hunting expedition willl be furnished by the publicity men of the various studios.

LOTTIE PICKFORD, sister of Mary Pickford, who has been ill at the St. Vincent's hospital, is on the road to recovery, it was announced at the hospital this week. She is suffering from an affliction of the ears, which at one time threatened to develop into pneumonia. Her condition was regarded as being so critical two weeks ago that her mother, Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, and sister Mary, rushed to her bedside from widely separated points. Mrs. Pickford was in New York, while Miss Pickford was touring the Northwest.

CECIL B. DeMILLE'S superproduction, which has reached its second week's production, is yet unnamed, but it was announced this week that it is a story of the eternal triangle. Production, however, was interrupted for a few days because DeMille was confined to his home with a bad cold. He refused to be classed as an influenza victim.

THE Bessie Barriscale Company, now producing for Hodkinson release, has just finished the filming of "Two Gun Betty" which was directed by Howard Hickman who is the author of the story. Jack Cunningham prepared the continuity. The Barriscale Company has been organized, incorporation papers having been taken out under the laws of Arizona. Howard Hickman is president. J. D. Frothingham, vice-president and treasurer, and M. C. Levee is secretary. The attorney for the company is now in New York completing negotiations for the release of pictures made by this company. Si Snyder has been engaged to direct the publicity and advertising matter of the company.

What Exchanges and Theatres Are Doing

HARRY BALLANCE, branch manager of the Paramount-Artcraft exchange, has recovered from an attack of influenza that kept him in bed for twelve days. He was back in the Paramount-Artcraft exchange this week, and predicted a big rush of business when the theatres are again allowed to open for business.

PERSISTENT rumors that all theatres in Arizona will be opened next week were received Saturday and Monday by film exchange managers. Manager Ballance, of the Paramount-Artcraft exchange, was informed the theatres in Deming, New Mexico, would be open not later than Wednesday of this week.

SPECIAL Representative Harry Lustig of the Metro is shortly to leave on a trip over the western territory which will embrace the exchanges of Denver, Salt Lake, Seattle and San Francisco. He had prepared to leave on this trip, when Mrs. Lustig was taken ill with typhoid fever, but she is now practically recovered after a very severe attack.

MAE MARSH, popular Goldwyn star, arrived in Los Angeles last Thursday. She was greeted at the train by Mr. and Mrs. Ben Fish, of the Los Angeles Goldwyn exchange; J. A. Quinn, manager of Quinn's Rialto on Broadway; Norma and Constance Talmadge, and Dorothy Gish, all friends of the little star.

SINCE the Rex Beach production, "Laughing Bill Hyde," featuring Will Rodgers, was exhibited at the Kinema theatre, the Goldwyn exchange has been flooded with inquiries from exhibitors as to why more pictures of the same kind are not being produced, according to announcement this week by Branch Manager Ben Fish.

BEN FISH, branch manager of the Goldwyn exchange, and his salesmen, Bernard Fish and Harvey Gausman, this week are planning a drive on Bill Parsons' comedies as soon as the influenza ban is lifted. If the exhibitors refuse to book these comedies, after the campaign is under way, these three musketeers will demand the reason why.

GEORGE SARGENT, manager of the Liberty theatre at Camp Kearny, last week asked David Bershon, branch manager of the Universal exchange, to provide the Liberty theatre with film for outdoor shows in the camp, all indoor performances having been prohibited. Mr. Bershon conferred with Metro, World Film, All Star Features, Mutual, and Kleine, with the result that enough feature pictures were sent to Camp Kearney to keep five different shows running at five different points in the camp every night last week. The system will continue this week, and every week hereafter, Mr. Bershon said, so long as the closing ban is in effect in the big cantonment. Manager Sargent wrote a letter to Branch Manager Bershon thanking Mr. Bershon for his interest and quick action in supplying the picture so badly needed in the camp.

THE Universal exchange at Phoenix, Ariz., was closed last week. All territory formerly served by this office will be handled hereafter from the Los Angeles branch, it was announced. The new arrangement is being made, according to Branch Manager Bershon, so as to give Arizona exhibitors quicker service on the newest releases. Instead of sending such releases to the Phoenix exchange, and booking them from that point, the pictures will be sent direct to the exhibitor from Los Angeles, thus gaining much time. "And as everybody knows, time is money," Mr. Bershon said.

LARRY E. LUND, manager of the Broadway theatre at Oakland, motored to Los Angeles last week. He was accompanied by Mrs. Lund.

AL TUCHMAN, head of the supply department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company of New York, was a visitor at the Universal exchange this week. He is touring all the Universal exchanges in the United States. He held a number of conferences with David Bershon, branch manager of the Los Angeles exchange, and made special trips to Universal City.

S. S. MOOR, formerly connected with the Universal office in New York, has been transferred to Los Angeles and he is now attached to the Universal exchange in Los Angeles.

TAKING advantage of vacation time afforded them by the closing of theatres in the Los Angeles territory, eleven branch managers and salesmen of Los Angeles exchanges last week slipped away from the city for a hike in the Sierra mountains. They were the guests of Bernie Loper, son of B. E. Loper, manager of the Select exchange, at his lodge cabin in Santa Onita canyon. Members of the party were B. E. Loper, of Select; David Bershon, Universal; C. L. Theurkauf, Bluebird Universal; Harvey Gausman, Goldwyn; Guy Gunderson, Kleine System; Thomas Hancock and Harry Merritt, of World Film; H. A. McBride, of the Ham Beall Publicity Bureau; L. D. Purdy and A. B. Lamb, of Metro. While every member of the party reported sore feet from the long hike, yet each one remarked that the vacation had acted as a tonic, with the result that when the theatres are again open these "peppery" managers will be out after the business with greater energy than ever before.

FRANK DUFFY, special representative of Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, left last week for San Francisco and Seattle on his way back to New York. He spent about two weeks in Los Angeles.

E. R. WILLIAMS, salesman for All Star Features, who was ill last week with influenza, was able to return to the exchange offices this week.

E. O. VAN PELT, advance business manager of "Hearts of the World," D. W. Griffith's great picture, has survived a severe attack of influenza and was this week at the All Star offices.

ALVIN G. FORRY, of the All-Star Features exchange, and acting branch manager in the absence of Louis Hyman in San Francisco, this week received information that he has been chosen to attend the officers' training school at Fort MacArthur, Texas. He will leave for the Texas camp within two weeks, he said.

BILLY SNELL, manager of the Topic theatre at El Centro, wired the M. & R. exchange this week that he believed the theatres of El Centro would be open by the latter part of the week.

GEORGE M. MANN this week resigned as district manager of the Fox Pacific Coast exchanges. He will be succeeded by Paul Mooney, district manager of the Fox exchanges in the Middle Western States, and well known in film circles. Mr. Mooney has had charge of the territory served from St. Louis, Chicago and Cincinnati for several years. He will make his headquarters at the Fox exchange in Los Angeles. Announcement of these changes was made by Branch Manager M. A. Walsh.

TOM MIX, Fox Western star, went to the hospital last week to undergo an operation for the removal of lead from his hip that is said to have been there for fifteen years. He was under ether for three hours. A story is told on Old Blue, faithful horse belonging to Mix, that the animal refused to eat or to be led or to be entertained in any manner while Mix was absent. Accordingly the horse was taken to the hospital, according to this same story, and when he got a glimpse of his master, he proceeded to act as all good horses are expected to act.

Complete San Francisco News Condensed

ALL indication of opening theatres depends upon the course of the influenza. For a week the entire city has been wearing "flu" masks, and today's reports from the Board of Health seem to indicate that they are proving effective. The report shows a falling off of 50 per cent. in new cases in the past twenty-four hours. Any such improvement continued a few days would make November 10th a very likely date for the reppening. In the meantime, every theatre in the State is closed, although Visalia has written to inquire for films for November 3d. As the theatres were closed by the State Board of Health, it is not believed that Visalia will be permitted to open until the disease is fully checked in San Francisco.

THE management of the Tivolo theatre in San Francisco and the T & D theatre in Oakland is making extensive improvements in both houses. In both the pit is being cut out and arrangements being made to greatly increase the size of the orchestra. How many men these orchestras will be increased has not yet been decided, but it is said it will rest with the leaders. Both houses are being thoroughly renovated and new installations are being made for stage effects. The other houses belonging to the T & D circuit are being generally overhauled and such work as is necessary to put them in first class condition is being done.

SOL L. LESSER, chairman of the United States official war film division, State Council of Defense, has received notice from Charles Hart, director of the national division of films, that the third Government film feature, "Under Four Flags," will be ready for distribution in California about November 15th. "Under Four Flags" is exclusively a fighting picture. Its scenes will present a vivid story of welfare as waged by Yankee troops. The activities of the French, British and Italian soldiers, under the master direction of General Foch, will supply the remainder of the material of the film. The initial showing of this new film will be made in San Francisco immediately after the withdrawal of the Health Board's influenza order. It is intended to have the premier private view at the Greek theatre, University of California, Berkeley. This preview will be given to invited guests only and will be the first ever held in this classic theatre. Incidentally an open air display of a motion picture in the middle of November will form an additional advertisement for the balmy atmosphere of this State. The circulation of "America's Answer" has been greatly hampered by the prevailing influenza, and it is understood that the theatres which have contracted for this second film will have to use it before they will be allowed to have the third.

ISADORE BERNSTEIN, representing the National Film Corporation of Los Angeles, stopped over in San Francisco a day or two on his way back from the East to convince some of his friends that the report of his recent demise was anticipatory. He says that he never felt better.

E. H. EMMICK, president and general manager of the Peerless Film Service, Inc., accompanied by Mrs. Emmick, left for the East immediately after Mr. Emmick's return from his duck hunt. As he got away before your representative had a chance to see him, and the others on the hunt decline to talk, it must remain a mystery how many ducks the party secured.

THE Spanish influenza has laid its heavy hand on nearly every exchange in the city, although so far the Paramount people report they have had no sickness. While several theatre managers in the State have passed on from the effect of the disease, no one connected with the local exchanges has as yet died. J. T. Turner, of Turner & Dahnken, is reported to have been very low from pneumonia following an attack of the influenza, but the latest reports indicate that he is on the mend. H. J. Henrioulla, assistant manager of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., and Ed Rowden, clerk in the same exchange, were stricken this week, although neither case is regarded as serious at present.

ALFRED A. BERARD, proprietor of the Modesto theatre at Modesto, Cal., died October 25th from pneumonia, following an attack of the influenza. He was thirty-five years of age and was one of the best known and best liked exhibitors in the State. The body was brought to San Francisco, where the funeral services were conducted in accordance with the Masonic ritual. L. Reichert and G. C. Blumenthal, both of the Metro, were the representatives of film row at the funeral.

FRANK ROGERS, manager of the Apollo theatre in this city, is also a victim of influenza. He died from the effects of the attack this week.

MOST of the film exchanges in the city are running on half time. In this way the mail can be taken care of, the cleaning up process can proceed, and at the same time the employees can get as much fresh air as possible. A good many heads of exchanges and the managers of many of the closed theatres have seized the opportunity to go to the country and a number have started on long automobile trips. Among those who are out of town for a week or so is Floyd St. John of the World Film Corporation. He is spending a week at Paterson, Cal.

HARRY LEE KNAPPEN, manager of Select Pictures Corporation, says that he has been notified that "Big Mich" Lewis, who has made such a reputation in Rex Beach stories, is to be the star in six big specials which will soon be released. The first of these is "Vengeance is Mine," and this is said to be a very powerful photoplay.

G. C. PARSONS, branch manager of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, has just returned from the hospital, where he went a week ago to have his tonsils removed. The fact that Mr. Parsons did not go to the hospital with influenza, makes his trip there all the more remarkable.

CHARLES PERRY, formerly of the Winter Garden, New York, and other theatres, has been appointed manager of the Rialto theatre in this city.

J. McCULLOUGH, formerly manager of the Jewel theatre in this city and later connected with the Mutual Film Corporation, left last week for France, whither he goes in hte service of the Y. M. C. A.

J. A. KRAKER, formerly with the Vitagraph, is now in France with his regiment. He was heard from this week and says that he is prepared "to teach the Hun a new goose step" if he ever gets in contact.

THE Bining theatre, Ashland, Ore., has just installed a new foto-player, made by the American Photo Player Co., of this city.

THE American Photo Player Co., of San Francisco, announces that it has sold five foto-players to the Lynch Enterprises, and that they will be distributed among the corporation's theatres in the south. This is a duplicate of an order given about a year ago.

Short Notes of San Diego

MANAGER W. H. HILTS of the Alhambra theatre has temporarily dismantled the house during the influenza embargo on public gatherings, and the place has been equipped for use by a shoe dealer.

THE plans for the construction of a new theatre on Eighth street, between Broadway and E street, on the Post property, have been abandoned for the present.

LOCAL motion picture houses, since their enforced closing, have been using their lobby display space, in a number of instances, for advertising the fourth Liberty Loan and the war savings stamps.

J. M. DODGE, of Dodge & Hayward, of Spreckels (Hippodrome) theatre, while the house is closed has been taking a vacation trip to San Francisco and other northern points.

KENT G. BUSH, of the Broadway Amusement Company, operating the Broadway and Superba theatres, has been making good use of his time in taking the bag limit of ducks on the back-country lakes and reservoirs.

THOROUGH renovation of all the motion picture houses is the order of the day, so that everything may be spick and span as soon as the ban against shows is raised. The public is looking forward to this release. Fortunately conditions have been much more favorable here than in most other cities throughout the country.

What Butte Is Doing

C. W. ECKHARDT, manager of the Marlowe theatre, Helena, motored to Butte this week to confer with the new general manager of the Ansonia Amusement Company, Merle Davis.

THE theatres at Scobie, Mont., resumed on Monday, September 28, according to George Bourke of the Universal exchange, his company getting orders to start service on that date. The "flu" lasted just a month there.

THE D. B. LEDERMAN system of booking and office work has just been adopted at the Universal exchange here and Manager Bourke is loud in praise of it. This is a uniform system to be installed at all Universal exchanges.

R. J. KLEIN has purchased the Crystal theatre, McQueen's addition, Butte. The new proprietor is getting ready for the reopening of the house as soon as health authorities permit. The former owner, J. A. Maguire, is reported to be in the army.

H. K. BRIN, traveling out of Salt Lake for the Universal, was in Butte this week.

EDWARD ARMSTRONG of Denver, district manager of the inter-mountain region for Universal, was here this week.

Butte Considers Closing Order a Blessing

THAT the forced stoppage of film production by the big manufacturers of the country is a blessing in disguise is the opinion of George Bourke, manager of the Universal exchange in Butte, Montana.

"Overproduction has been badly overdone," he said. "A big percentage of pictures never found the screen in Butte and even in New York. The exhibitor out this way will not miss a month's suspension of releases in the least."

Mr. Bourke reports that there is "nothing doing" at his exchange, the entire state being closed up at this time, with the exception of Scobie, a little town in Northeastern Montana, where the "flu" first made its appearance and where after a month's shutdown houses have reopened, and one coal camp, Bear Creek, near Red Lodge, was still open at last reports.

There are rumors that Great Falls may reopen, and in Butte it is felt the worst is past and that the closedown will not continue very much longer.

"We are getting ready to book houses where we left off, when the resumption comes," said Mr. Bourke, "and while we don't relish the inactivity, it may really result in good and open the eyes of manufacturers to the wisdom of limiting new productions."

Famous Players-Lasky Studios Buy Bonds Liberally

THE FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION'S two studios in Los Angeles went one hundred per cent on the Liberty Loan, with a total of $153,000, the sum of $23,000 being raised at one studio and $130,000 at the other. Every employe of the studios bought one bond and 65 per cent made additional subscriptions. This amount, added to the $428,000 subscribed on Zukor Day in New York, raises the Famous Players-Lasky subscriptions to $581,000, with none of the branch offices reported.

The biggest subscriptions at the studio were made by Cecil B. De Mille, Frank A. Garbutt and Ethel Clayton. Miss Clayton sold $22,500 worth of bonds in three hours by offering to double all subscriptions taken at the studio on a certain afternoon. When the total was added up, Miss Clayton made out a check for $15,000—this in addition to her first purchase of $10,000 made on Famous Players-Lasky night at the tank in Central Park. Other big subscriptions were made by Elliott Dexter and Bryant Washburn.

"THE IRON TEST"

VITAGRAPH'S LATEST AND GREATEST PHOTOPLAY SERIAL

FEATURING

ANTONIO MORENO and CAROL HOLLOWAY

Your new serial, "The Iron Test," which I am now running in my theatre, appears to be the best yet. And it will have to go some, too, to beat "The Fighting Trail," Vengeance and the Woman," "The Woman in the Web" and "A Fight For Millions."

The public has learned to expect something big when Vitagraph serials are announced, and as a result my audiences from the first episode of "The Iron Test" have been large and enthusiastic.

"Miss Ambition"

A FIVE PART BLUE RIBBON FEATURE

Written by REX TAYLOR

Directed by HENRY-HOURY

In "Miss Ambition," the Exhibitor finds his ideal feature—one that, having all the qualities to attract patrons, pleases them after they are in, and brings them back again.

This powerful role of a beautiful girl who climbed the social ladder and then went back—for love—has proved a most fitting one for Miss Griffith, one of the most successful screen delineators of the society girl.

Supporting her in the unweaving of this strong, colorful story are such well known favorites as Betty Blythe, Walter McGrail, Denton Vane, Templer Saxe and Harry Kendall, while the artistic direction of Henry-Houry is reflected in the exquisite settings, novel lighting and fastidious correctness of detail.

Your Audiences Have Had Time To Think

WHILE your theatre was closed your patrons have had more time to read the newspapers and magazines. Even an epidemic could not dull or destroy their interest in the motion picture.

The motion picture has become a part of the lives of the American people.

While reading about their favorite heroines and heroes of the screen they were barred temporarily from seeing, your audiences have had time to think.

They have had time to wonder why you have given them some of the poorer pictures and the lesser stars instead of the better pictures and the bigger stars.

They have had time to weigh pictures and screen personalities in the balance. And they've now decided to ask you, the exhibitor, to raise the grade of your pictures. They expect more of you now than ever before.

You can meet all of their demands, you can anticipate their desires, you can head off some possible complaints right at this moment by booking Goldwyn Star Series productions in your theatre.

ALL audiences want to see Geraldine Farrar, Pauline Frederick, Mabel Normand, Madge Kennedy, Mae Marsh and Tom Moore. All healthy, normal human beings desire to see Rex Beach's famous characters on the screen.

ALL audiences want to see Quality pictures, made from powerful stories by the ablest directors in the industry.

ALL audiences desire to see finely made productions in preference to poorly-made pictures.

YOUR audiences are receptive to Goldwyn Pictures. The name Goldwyn "out front" and on your screen means increased strength, power and reputation for your theatre.

These Successes Launched This As "A Goldwyn Year."

GERALDINE FARRAR in a modern society and mystery melodrama was just what you and the public wanted. "The Turn of the Wheel" made good and will continue to be a profit-making attraction throughout the year. Booked at The Strand, New York.

MABEL NORMAND returning to broad comedy in "Peck's Bad Girl" caused the screen public to cry "Hurray!" Exactly what they wanted—and a big success in theatres everywhere.

TOM MOORE an instant hit as a Goldwyn star in "Just For Tonight." Fast, speedy, romantic comedy—the kind of story that made audiences forget about the war.

MADGE KENNEDY'S most liked picture—"The Kingdom of Youth." Exhibitors were so enthusiastic about it that they conducted big personal advertising campaigns—and business was heavy. Booked at The Strand, New York.

REX BEACH'S "Laughing Bill Hyde" with Will Rogers introduced a brand new star to the American public and such notices as the critics gave him have rarely ever been equalled in screen history. Booked at The Rivoli, New York.

MAE MARSH in "Hidden Fires" has what dozens of exhibitors rank as her best picture since "Polly of the Circus" and "The Cinderella Man." Booked at The Rialto, New York.

All of these productions are brand new hits since September 1. Two thousand additional theatres, including yours, should book and begin playing them before Christmas. Productions like these are the basis of Goldwyn's power. They are confidence-builders—and for you they are patronage builders.

How To Do Eleven Months Business in the Next Ten.

THAT'S your problem—and your intention—as an exhibitor. You reopen your theatre under a new head of steam. While closed up you've been thinking. You know now that you cannot hope to pull out ahead with lesser stars and average pictures.

Big stars build patronage and prosperity just as big guns win battles. Goldwyn means in the public's mind big stars and big productions; the screen's best known personalities. We announce for forthcoming release:

Nov. 17. TOM MOORE in "Thirty A Week" from the stage success by Thompson Buchanan. Booked at The Rialto, New York.

Nov. 24. MABEL NORMAND in "A Perfect 36." By Tex Charwate. A big, broad comedy-drama. An even greater success than "Peck's Bad Girl."

Dec. 1. GERALDINE FARRAR in "The Hell Cat." A big western melodrama by Willard Mack. Booked at The Strand, New York.

Dec. 8. MADGE KENNEDY in "A Perfect Lady." By Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf From their big stage success. Booked at The Strand, New York.

Dec. 15. REX BEACH'S "Too Fat To Fight" with Frank McIntyre. A great international comedy of the Y. M. C. A., K. of C., the Y. M. H. A. and the Salvation Army. Booked at The Rivoli, New York.

Dec. 22. MAE MARSH in "The Racing Strain." By Tex Charwate. A thrilling racetrack romance of the Blue-grass with a romantic climax at the Saratoga handicap.

When you give audiences what they want you never have to worry about your profits. Your box-office takes care of itself.

Mrs. Martin Johnson and young girls of the Solomon Islands

Vulgarity is peculiarly the heritage of civilization. The naked young girl of the Solomon Islands is as free from self-consciousness in her untrammeled, ear-ringed estate as she is unaware that clothes are a matter for legislation in the greater part of the world. At maturity, immediately preceding marriage, she paints her body with yellow ochre according to tribal custom. After marriage, she may wear ornaments of shell or feather or twisted grass, or even the semblance of a dress.

To Our Patrons

IT is not often that I permit myself to become enthusiastic to the extent of endorsing a film production, but the beauty and novelty of Mr. Maurice Tourneur's latest spectacle, entitled "Woman," compels me to proclaim it one of the most remarkable motion pictures I have ever seen.

It gives me pleasure to announce that this masterpiece will be shown at the Rivoli for the week beginning Sunday, October 27th.

The production will be given a musical and scenic setting worthy of its superlative merit.

Owing to the length and magnitude of the work, no additional pictorial feature other than the current release of the Creel Committee's official allied war review will be shown on the program.

I earnestly urge every devotee of the motion picture to witness this latest example of Mr. Tourneur's art.

Faithfully,

THE DOOR'S WIDE OPEN

AN exhibitor should not be expected to hunt among a score of exchanges in each city to find a day's show. He could find it just as well among three or four exchanges. He could find it most easily at any General Film Company exchange, established since 1910.

Nor should manufacturers be expected to scatter their product among a score of exchanges to reach the same exhibitor in each city.

Furthermore, distributors should not be expected to build and maintain a separate exchange in each city. It multiplies their overhead expense and reduces service efficiency. It makes film cost more to the exhibitor.

However the old situation is improving. The government has taken the nonsense out of railroad routing. And General Film Company is taking the nonsense out of motion picture distribution.

General Film Company long has advocated conservation and warred upon extravagance. It leads in practical conservation by presenting itself as a ready-to-use medium between any manufacturer or distributor and the exhibitor.

Why do thirty, and more, individual producers route their product through General Film Company exchanges? Because its exchange system, the oldest established and most splendidly equipped, was unreservedly open to them. No wonder that they adopted General Film in its completeness rather than the casual exchange here and there.

Why do the most experienced distributors like George Kleine and Wm. L. Sherry discard their own circuit of exchanges and adopt those of General Film Company? They have told you. Looked at calmly, an exchange is a plain, unadorned utility which can serve many interests at a saving. General Film exchanges can do it particularly well. And these men, standing on their own platform of conservation, have shown the strength of their convictions by applying them.

Progressive people see the absurdity of film distribution in the extravagant way, when it can be done better at a minimum of outlay. They naturally turn to such a smoothly-running, permanent service concern as General Film Company, which circulates their film while they retain full control of it.

For over a year General Film Company has been inviting progressive people to employ its facilities.

The invitation still holds good!

OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW

The war has reached into every home; it has affected every individual. Not alone because with the millions of men in khaki nearly every family has its representatives in the service, but because the food on the table, the clothing that is worn—every article that is bought or sold, has paid its tribute to war.

Thus there is a universal desire to be informed of the progress of that which has become the biggest part of our daily life. The newspapers and magazines can only tell a part. The motion picture supplements and makes clear. It shows things at the front as they really are!

Every exhibitor should show these official pictures, taken by the Governments of France, Great Britain, Italy and United States. Thus he may satisfy a universal demand!

Unconditional Surrender

Back of everything is the Idea from which it sprung.

Back of Fox success is the Fox Idea—the plan of producing only the kind of motion pictures that the most people want to see.

Back of Fox success is an IDEA so big and broad and sound that it couldn't do anything else than succeed.

Any man is bound to win out, who is clever enough to know what the public wants—and wise enough not to haggle about the cost of giving it to them—for the public is more generous in its pay than the most generous philanthropist with his gifts.

The public will not only PAY for what it wants, but will pay liberally to the point of extravagance.

William Fox has succeeded for the very reason that he gave the public what it wanted—succeeded far beyond his own ambitious dreams of only a few years ago.

The public has surrendered to the Fox Idea.

An Amazing Tribute

By ROB REEL

Give 'em credit. The Fox people with their filmed life of GENERAL PERSHING, their "18 TO 45" draft picture, "THE PRUSSIAN CUR", not to mention their expose of current European public scandals, are first on the streets—or the screen—with the news.

—CHICAGO AMERICAN, Oct. 8.

The timeliness of WILLIAM FOX productions is the talk of the trade.

It smashes all precedent and surpasses all expectation. Never previously have exhibitors found available such a remarkable and sustained series of opportune pictures as WILLIAM FOX now is offering.

Trade papers have recognized this and discoursed extensively on the changed conditions—on this new era which WILLIAM FOX has ushered in.

Exhibitors generally have been amazed at the wealth and diversity of the offerings. And they have been quick to seize the opportunity to make the busy ticket taker's chair the only vacant seat in their houses.

The good news has spread even further. It has become a common topic of home conversation and of newspaper comment.

It has made WILLIAM FOX at once the marvel and the envy of the most resourceful producing organizations in the land.

No wonder then that an editor of the Chicago American says: "Give 'em credit" !

The biggest productions dealing with events of today are WILLIAM FOX productions.

These pictures have been planned—made—printed—long in advance of the chosen release time. They have come onto the market at the psychological moment—have had the tremendous impetus of popular enthusiasm—have set new and hitherto impossible records of profit.

They are the result of WILLIAM FOX IDEA—the Idea that lets you cash in immediately on the big, vital events of the hour—the Idea that increases the strength of your program and the value of your theatre!

And it's a fixed—definite—steadily growing Idea—an Idea so soundly established that the editors of the leading newspapers recognize and comment on it.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS

It is the Idea that foresaw public interest in the German espionage system in America and enables you to show HORST VON DER GOLTZ, the chief spy, in your theatre as the principal character of "THE PRUSSIAN CUR."

It is the Idea that witnessed the dawning of public interest in the career of GENERAL JOHN J. PERSHING, recognized the value of that interest, and months ago began the filming of "Why America Won," the picture biographical, unique in the history of the cinema industry.

It is the Idea that has made available to exhibitors everywhere such timely productions as "QUEEN OF THE SEA," featuring ANNETTE KELLERMAN, and "WHY I WOULD NOT MARRY," a tremendous morality picture dealing with social problems of the hour.

It is the Idea, developed to its uttermost limits, without duplication of theme, that is enabling wide-awake, live-wire exhibitors to capitalize public interest as they never have done before. It is the Idea to tie to—the Idea of promise and profits—the one big, progressive, courageous Idea of the new 1918-1919 season.

The WILLIAM FOX BIG TIMELY PRODUCTIONS will be money makers whether you show them now or later, but the unusual profits—the turn away crowds—will be the reward of those exhibitors who link up opportunity with TODAY.

WILLIAM FOX has made these productions possible—has given them to you, each on an individual basis. It's up to you whether you will go over the top to Prosperity, or content yourself with being a camp follower.

"UNCONDITIONAL SURRENDER"

NOW that the cry "Kamerad!" has come from the Kaiser—

Now that the world is asking what fate is in store for the arch-foe of mankind—

Film buyers are offered this big, gripping, up-to-the-minute drama that shows the Kaiser punished as the public wants to see him punished; that tries the Hohenzollern before the court of World Justice, pronounces and carries out his fate.

It is the picture of the hour, but it is also a picture of permanent value. The beauty of its scenes, stretching back into the dawn of history; its thrilling panorama of present events; its spectacle of humanity triumphant over its would-be crucifier, make it a drama that will live and earn money for the exhibitor long after ordinary screen dramas are forgotten.

The man who acts quickly will draw big profits from this picture.

"The Better 'Ole" at the Greenwich Theatre Scores Hit

"THE BETTER OLE" has caught more authentic war spirit than any other play of the trenches and back areas which has come to town It is concerned only with one phase of the life of a fighting man, and that a subordinate one, but the fact that within its scope of humorous terpretation it keeps consta on the key puts it above the plays of the shattered school

HERALD

BAIRNSFATHER CHARACTERS IN DELIGHTFUL WAR COMEDY

Three figures which have become classics in the lighter side of war's horrors stepped into real life Saturday night. They are Old Bill, he of the sonorous mustache, Alf and Bert, that trio of humorous characters in the trench sketches of Captain Bruce Bairnsfather, British Army, which have made the world laugh through its tears. They are the chief characters in a comedy-drama called "THE BETTER 'OLE," by Captain Bairnsfather and Captain Arthur Eliot.

OLD BILL, BERT AND ALF COME INTO REAL LIFE

Those three musketeers among the fighting Tommies of England, Old Bill, Bert and Alf, who have endeared themselves to hundreds of thousands of readers of The World in Capt. Bruce Bairnsfather's war cartoons, have at last appeared in the flesh Their creator, with the aid of Capt. Arthur Eliot, has turned them into characters in a war play with the somewhat cryptic title, "THE BETTER 'OLE," which has all the persuasion and force, both for humor and pathos, of the famous pictures on which it is based.

"The Better 'Ole" Cleverest War Play of Current Season

When the box office speaks, the ears of managers are always listening. Therefore, Mr and Mrs. Coburn, who are responsible for the American production of this English work, are considering no less a theatre than the Manhattan Opera House or the Lexington Opera House—home of war plays—where "You Know Me, Al," and "Yip, Yip, Yaphank," got the money.

GERMANY SIGNED THE ARMISTICE but not on November 7th, as most of the newspapers erroneously announced. It all reminds me of the reports that come to Inter-Ocean about new films released on the American market. Ninety-nine per cent. of them are declared to be "just the thing for the foreign market," but Inter-Ocean doesn't recommend, much less buy, them until its entire staff has had a chance to look 'em over at the Inter-Ocean Building projection room. When Inter-Ocean does buy a picture, you may be sure it isn't on the strength of premature information, but because our staff of world-market experts have decided that the film WILL MAKE MONEY FOR YOU. If you are a genuine buyer of American films for export, I would advise you to write me to-day for "THE INTER-OCEAN GLOBE," the only monthly bulletin about films published by any film exporting firm. Dear Mr. Sherry:
Last night marked a termination of the very successful engagement of Mr. Frank A. Keeney's latest production, "Marriage," featuring Miss Catherine Calvert.

It would be very unjust on my part to withhold from you the word of praise I have for this, your latest release.

From every angle it has proven satisfactory and our records bear testimony that "Marriage" played to one of the biggest weeks in our history.

Gentlemen:—

The Members of the Institute appreciated the opportunity of viewing your great film Picture entitled "Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief." Every chair in our Hall, seating about 2400, was filled and many were unable to secure admission.

The Picture is an interesting and vivid portrayal of the History of Belgium and of her period of devastation and suffering.

In the course of the hour and three-quarters that the Picture was on the screen, I saw no one leave the Hall, a striking tribute to the interest aroused.

We are glad to be able to announce to our Members that two additional presentations of the Picture will be given.

Yours very truly,
CHARLES D. ATKINS,
Director.

The pictorial paper furnished with "Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief" is from Original Drawings by noted French and Belgian Artists and has never been equaled by any Motion Picture publicity. Twenty four, eight and six sheets, two threes and three one sheets, lithographs, designed by a noted Belgian artist and printed in National colors. The National Song, La Brabanncon, for souvenir. Also story in attractive book form entitled Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief.

What the New York Critics Say!

"William A. Brady has reached the top notch in photoplay achievement. 'Little Women' at the Strand is one of the most satisfactory pictures ever produced."
Evening Sun.

"William A. Brady's production of the screen classic is the most satisfactory thing we have seen."
Harriette Underhill, Tribune.

"Admirers of the original 'Little Women' will find delight in the animated illustrations of the story—charming—spectators at the Strand seemed to respond with mirth and quick sympathy as gay scenes and grave were flashed before them." Times.

"The story is acted most sympathetically and the production created an impression that few motion pictures have done in a long time. So absorbed and responsive was yesterday's audience that the picture should draw full houses at every performance."
Evening Telegram.

"Cast is excellent. Charm all its own—very appealing and quaint—telling incidents—distinct characterizations." Sun.

"One of the most successful adaptations of well known stories to the moving picture screen. Stirs heart interest. Homely sentiment and genuine appeal. Finely presented at the Strand." World.

"Praise of tears won by photoplay 'Little Women'—this tribute not often paid to photoplay. Filled with fun and good nature." Herald.

"Audience yesterday cried and laughed over it. The picture has been produced in beautiful taste." American.

"A delightful photoplay—will linger in the memory of everyone—cast is excellent."
Journal of Commerce.

"Quaint and charming—cast is excellent. Whether or not one has read 'Little Women,' which for forty years has been read and loved the world over, this screen presentation should be seen." Telegraph.

Write That Letter!

OF course you didn't get time to write us a letter this week regarding that bomb-shell which J. A. Quinn, of Los Angeles, exploded in our last issue.

There was too much peace in the air for all of us—the days of note-writing seemed at an end.

But don't forget that we are still in the motion picture business; the three-a-day bread and butter has still to be provided by the motion picture business.

Dig up your copy of last week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS and find that Quinn article. He said some sizzling, rip-snorting things about productions and production policies.

You will either agree with him emphatically or disagree with him—equally emphatically. In either case you will feel like saying a few jarring words yourself.

Obey the impulse.

Remember—we dared you to! And, "by the same token," you can dare us to publish every word you send.

As we said before—let's start something.

J. D. Williams on the Job

BETWEEN closing the details of the First National-Mary Pickford contract and celebrating peace, J. D. Williams found time during the week to send us a scorching letter regarding J. A. Quinn's views.

You will find it on Page 3045. Read every word of it, and when you write your own letter discuss both of these contributions.

Mr. Williams places an enthusiastic endorsement on every word spoken by the Los Angeles exhibitor. He indicts our Times Square friend, the producer, in no uncertain terms.

Mr. Quinn did not deal in generalities—neither does Mr. Williams.

But there is one point made by the prominent exhibitor which Mr. Williams does not take up. Mr. Quinn's letter, heartily endorsed by the Southern California Theatre Owners' Association, included these sentiments: "The exhibitor will be better served and better satisfied when you cut out most of the costly printed matter that now fills our waste-baskets, and the senseless placing of advertising in every sort of medium—and confine it to two journals."

Don't forget that point.

Dr. Royal S. Copeland

NOW that reports from every section of the country show over eighty per cent of the theatres once more open for business the industry probably has time to say a word of thanks to Dr. Roy S. Copeland, New York's Health Commissioner.

In the face of the most determined opposition Dr. Copeland kept firm in his belief that a well-ventilated, cleanly theatre was not to be feared; that the value of amusements in keeping up the spirits of the public gainsayed any possible danger.

The theatres were kept open—and the influenza is disappearing in New York with much less of a black memory than it left in many other cities.

Dr. Copeland won out—but requires no vivid stretch of the imagination to picture the abuse and calumny that would have been heaped on him had he failed.

He fought a propaganda led by former office-holders and aided by panic-stricken but illy-informed citizens. He fought for the motion picture theatre. He won.

We don't know of a word more of thanks that we can say than the above statement of fact.

Unless we add the words of one manufacturer to us. He was speaking during the period when ninety per cent of the country's theatres were closed.

"Frankly," he said, "I don't know what the picture industry and especially the distributors would do if it were not for this man Copeland in New York. He has given us the only chance we have to balance a single dollar of income off against the terrible overhead loss we are suffering."

Perhaps It's the Last

IF the letters we receive from exhibitors are any criterion, there is a widespread feeling of resentment against the promoters of each new "drive" and their habit of taking up collections in motion picture theatres.

The showmen hesitate to speak. For they desire to do all that is within their power to aid each worthy drive for funds.

But they are becoming more and more of the conviction that the amount of nickels and dimes collected at a picture theatre performance bear no proportionate relation to the inconvenience caused the audience and the actual loss inflicted on the theatre owner.

At the present moment—when theatres are making a valiant effort to recover from the effects of the influenza epidemic—the situation is particularly trying.

The use of the screen to aid the various drives is proper. The message to "Give" can be conveyed to the public there in even more forcible manner than by means of the press.

No dissatisfaction will be aroused—and if we are any judges of psychology, more financial benefit will accrue to any cause. But heckling interruptions and long-winded speeches are out of place.

(Editorials continued on next page.)

A New Step in Service—This Week

THAT popular service feature of Motion Picture News—the Exhibitors' Box Office Reports—will be found this week on page 3125 in a new and advanced form.

The Complete Plan Book made the service hit of the year with exhibitors big and little. It is being filed in theatres everywhere as the only complete guide to pictures—giving the review and complete exploitation aid all in one spot.

Now the Exhibitors' Box Office Reports have been merged with The Complete Plan Book—a ten-strike in service, and making the Plan Book more than ever the one indispensable tool of the exhibitor.

In one spot the exhibitor will now find a complete record of all pictures released during the previous three months; the name of the star, the producer, the release date, the issue of The Complete Plan Book in which the review and exploitation aids appeared, a brief summary of the Motion Picture News review, comments in the exhibitors' own words as received by our Box Office Reports Department, and a "Consensus" grading of all reports received.

All in one spot!

And all in The Complete Plan Book!

This forward stride will be followed in the weeks to come with further improvements in the Box Office Reports Department and The Complete Plan Book. For we know that you know—that—

Motion Picture News never stands still!

S. Barret McCormick—Teacher

ONE of the biggest men in this business told us one day, "If I could get a man like S. Barret McCormick on salary I'd hire him tomorrow just to work with us in helping exhibitors to put over our pictures the way he puts the Circle shows over."

Yet this same manufacturer would probably expect a word of explanation to understand that Motion Picture News actually dominates the exhibitor reading field as we know it does.

There are fifty-seven reasons—more or less. One of them is S. Barrett McCormick.

This successful showman is a regular and exclusive contributor to Motion Picture News. And he doesn't write press stuff—but plain, straight-forward lessons in the advertising and presentation of productions. He lays his cards on the table—for the benefit of all News readers.

This week appears the second article of a new McCormick series. It is called "At the Zero Hour"—the moment when a manager or advertising man goes "over the top" to consider his next bill.

You'll find it on page 3065.

And as we said before—McCormick is just one of the reasons.

Dealing in Personalities

"One Regular Feller"

WHEN we had the cut made for this likeness of Watterson Rothacker we had intended heading this column with the word "Lost or Strayed."

For all our best sleuths had reported to us since Monday that the debonair Chicagoan was in New York—and yet he hadn't been seen in Motion Picture News office.

Which was not according to either law or tradition.

But on Wednesday he made his appearance. So we won't have to offer a "Reward and No Questions Asked."

But having made the cut we must use it. And use it to tell you that alongside of this thin column of type is the face of the one man in America who is happier than either Harry Schwalbe or J. D. Williams over the signing of Mary Pickford by First National.

That man is Watterson R. Rothacker.

And he's celebrating because he is going to do the laboratory work on the new Pickford subjects.

We are not celebrating. We foresee all the columns of space we will have to use up publishing letters of commendation received by Watterson R. with each succeeding release.

"Joe Lee's Boss"

LOUIS MAYER deserves a word of mention here now that the war is over and most producers with war subjects on their hands and losing sleep worrying over them.

When Mr. Mayer got Anita Stewart's signature to the dotted line of a contract he was bombarded with war subjects by every playwright, novelist and scenario writer who had a typewriter.

But Louis is a clever showman. He had made a few clean-ups on war pictures, but when he started to pick a production in which to put his own money and time he chose "Virtuous Wives," "Old Kentucky," and a string of always sure-fire subjects like that.

And now he's laughing up his sleeve.

Williams Replies to Quinn Letter

[Editor's Note—In the last issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, dated November 16, was published an article which J. A. Quinn, of Quinn's Rialto theatre in Los Angeles, read at a recent meeting of the Southern California Theatre Owners' Association. The theatre owenrs endorsed every word in the article in very emphatic measure, and adopted a resolution pledging Mr. Quinn full support in his plan for betterment of conditions now existing.

The whole industry read the article, but J. D. Williams, of First National, was first to come under the wire with a reply. As he wrote his letter immediately after arranging with Mary Pickford for the release of the latter's future productions, Mr. Williams finds opportunity to speak a word for the well-known star.

Incidentally, Mr. Williams takes occasion to say a good word for Mr. Quinn in many respects, admitting that the latter's arguments are convincing and adding that more moral courage of the Quinn type would be a boon to the exhibitors and the industry.]

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York City.

Dear Sir:—

YOUR editorial prologue to the straight-from-the-shoulder statement by Mr. J. A. Quinn in your issue of November 16 is a challenge to the industry to disprove his charges of incompetency or to admit that he is right.

Mr. Quinn makes a sweeping accusation against manufacturers. And he gives it force by hitting straight and hard. He makes a convincing argument because he is specific. Generalities mean nothing when criticism is intended. More moral courage of the Quinn type would be a boon to the exhibitors and the industry.

Mr. Quinn declares that "what the business needs is a 'doctor' quick."

This is written on Tuesday. Since Saturday afternoon I have met and talked casually with three of the industry's most prominent producers. Each of them expressed the following general opinion on Miss Pickford's contract with our organization:

"What's the idea of Miss Pickford paying $40,000 for the rights to the story of 'Daddy Long Legs,' and the same sum for 'Pollyanna?' She does not need big, high priced stories of that kind. Her popularity is great enough to get the public in to see her in stories that would cost a whole lot less. She is going to waste a lot of money foolishly that way."

Would Mr. Quinn or any other exhibitor take any pride in presenting Miss Pickford to their patrons in a production cheapened by an inferior story? Would Miss Pickford's popularity grow? Do people pay just to see Miss Pickford on the screen, or do they give her such phenomenal tribute in memory of "Tess of the Storm Country," "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" and "Stella Maris," constantly hoping that the newest and latest Pickford offering will be on a par in quality with those released.

The answer is obvious—to exhibitors, at least.

MR. QUINN speaks as an exhibitor when he challenges George Kleine's statement that of 1,300 features released in 1917 1,000 were good ones by the reduction of that number to approximately 100. I agree with Mr. Quinn.

The internal conditions responsible for such an appalling record have got to be remedied. And straight-from-the-shoulder criticisms and discussions are the most certain means of shaming those responsible into a corrective policy or out of the industry entirely.

History is repeating itself in this industry, despite the fact that its progress has been rapid and consequently difficult to keep pace with.

LET'S go back for a moment to the heyday of the old Biograph Company. Every exhibitor knew the Biograph standard and the box-office value of Biograph productions. The word Biograph spelled capacity business for practically every theatre. Today Biograph is a memory. Why? Five or six commercial parasites, tumbled by a combination of fortunate circumstances into executive control of the distribution of the work of real talent, made it a club with which to pound exhibitors into supporting associated output of lesser quality. Exhibitors could easily have afforded to pay five or six times as much as they did pay in those days for Biograph productions, but—they didn't. Biograph productions cost more money to make than other releases on the same program. They featured capable, popular players. The stories were good. The direction was of the best. But Biograph did not get rental prices five or six times as great as the inferior releases of other producers distributing through the same exchanges.

If Biograph had received what it was properly entitled to by merit and the exhibitor value of its output, Mr. D. W. Griffith would undoubtedly be the directing genius of its organization today and the name Biograph would lead the industry in quality and box-office popularity.

I intend no affront to any individual in this connection. Some of the producers of those days are my friends and probably if I had been in their positions then I would have done very much as they did. It is merely a question of method.

And there are exact parallels today for the Biograph situation of five, or six years ago. And today, as then, it is a question of method that is the fundamental error in the correlation of the three prime elements of the industry.

THE position of a big star on a program today is relatively the same as was the position of Biograph productions on a program in the Biograph time. The star's productions stand out as beacon lights to exhibitors. But beware of the hidden shoals and the jagged rocks of disaster in the guise of "regular releases" surrounding the work of any big star. A manufacturer with a program franchise signs a contract with a star. Six or eight productions a year are agreed upon. Exhibitors are told about the wonderful box-office value of the star. His or her contract is described as further evidence to exhibitors that the foundation of the producing or distributing company is laid on the ground of quality.

Exhibitors know, much better than the manufacturers, what stars are popular and profitable. They send in their applications for bookings. The manufacturer is elated at prospects. Why not pyramid the chance for a moderate profit? The way is simple. Contracts with three, five or seven or more second, third and fourth rate stars. Exhibitors are "clamoring" for the big star's productions. Make him take the releases of the others as a condition of his contract. Result, the manufacturer dreams of a theoretical profit from the release of "one-a-week" instead of "three-a-year."

And, as Mr. Quinn aptly charges, the exhibitors pay.

DOES the producer, under such an arrangement, get as much for the productions of the big star as they deserve in the proportion of their merits to the merits of the releases of the second-raters? He does not, and he cannot. And the result is that he is unable to pay the big star what he or she is rightly entitled to.

It is a method that is a three-sided boomerang. The star does not enjoy a remuneration in keeping with his or her actual box-office earning power. The producer works an injustice to the star, to himself, to all of his releases and to the exhibitor. And the exhibitor is forced to book and pay rental for productions he does not want and cannot show to a profit to support the manufacturer's effort at monopoly.

Mr. Quinn says of Miss Pickford: "She is on top of the ladder and draws the people because she has the ART and PERSONALITY and ABILITY to deliver the goods." Mr. Quinn and every other exhibitor whose backbone is his greatest asset will perhaps be interested to know something of Miss Pickford's confidence in the policy of quality with its consequent elimination of waste, extravagance and exhibitor burden.

Country Notes Reopening Progress

Estimated That More Than Eighty Per Cent of Theatres Are Again Open—St. Paul and Minneapolis Still Closed—Merchants Register Kicks

STEADY improvement in the influenza situation was noted the past week throughout the country, many additional reopenings being reported through the special service which MOTION PICTURE NEWS has maintained for the benefit of keeping the industry well informed.

At last reports it was estimated that more than eighty per cent of the nation's motion picture theatres which had been closed because of the epidemic, have reopened and that exhibitors are most optimistic over the prospects of future business. St. Paul and Minneapolis have secured the limelight by closing at a time when other places were reopening. It is expected November 24 will see the end of the Minneapolis ban.

The most cheerful reports come from the West, where the majority of theatres are open. Los Angeles expects to reopen November 21.

Dayton Fans Fail to Respond Loyally

The Dayton, Ohio, representative of Motion Picture News wires that business in the Dayton motion picture theatres has fallen down considerably since the influenza ban was lifted on November 2. Two probable reasons set forth are that some people are still afraid to come out where the crowds assemble, and that parents with children under sixteen years of age do not attend the shows because the theatres will not admit the youngsters.

The Strand theatre offered an exceptional bill in "The Marriage Ring" as the main attraction.

All of the Dayton theatres have undergone a change since they were closed.

Buffalo Recovers and Forges Ahead

With all theatres in full swing again, Buffalo, N. Y., local managers this week are lending their aid to putting Buffalo quota in the United War Work campaign over the top. Thursday evening all the neighborhood houses will give 25 per cent of their receipts to the fund and Sunday evening all the downtown houses will give benefit performances, with a general admission of $1 to any theatre. Houses cooperating in this stunt are the Teck, Star, Majestic, Gayety, Shea's, Academy, Olympic, Garden and Lyric. Coupons are printed in the local papers which are exchanged at the box office for tickets. Harold B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, is manager of the features bureau of the campaign and has staged an attractive setting at Lafayette square.

Exhibitors Peeved at Health Officials

Minneapolis, Minn.—In its fifth week of motion picture "darkness" Minneapolis is showing signs of anger towards health authorities. Some exhibitors feel that Dr. Guilford, who has handled the dictatorial end of the closing, has been playing with them.

For two weeks past Minneapolis' influenza conditions have been such that the ban could have been lifted without fear of the malady getting a fresh start toward hazardous ends. Doctors have stated as much and public officials have verified the authenticity of such statements.

At one meeting of health officials and theatre men, church men and others, Dr. Guilford said that theatres might open at their pleasure should they provide each patron with a mask.

With the closing of St. Paul theatres November 5 Dr. Guilford stated that Minneapolis' ban would not be lifted for at least two weeks because, he stated, that he feared "St. Paulites might carry influenza back to Minneapolis." St. Paul and state health authorities are not of that opinion.

Minneapolis exhibitors are hopeful that they may open their doors about November 17 but it appears that November 24 might be a better guess as to the time.

APPRECIATES AIDS

At a meeting of the Area Committee of the Y. M. C. A. Military Service Department in Toronto, a special vote of thanks was passed for the co-operation of Manager T. S. Cooper of the General Film Company in the entertainment of soldiers at various camps and hospitals.

Supervisor Percival J. Lee, in reporting this action, wrote: "Only the Entertainment Committee know to what extent you have sacrificed personal gain to the Country's good by your great work in this way, and I am sure the glorious morale of the Canadian troops is due in a large measure to the recreation given them by you."

Ban Lifts on Whole of Pennsylvania

Harrisburg, Pa.—The influenza ban has been lifted from the theatres in practically the whole of Pennsylvania, the restrictions on November 9 having been ordered by State Health Commissioner Royer to be removed from the last of the 64 counties, Franklin, the order having become effective there last Saturday, November 9. The theatres still under restrictions in the state are a few in isolated sections of certain counties where the epidemic has lingered a little longer than in the state as a whole.

Saturday, November 9, the theatres of Pittsburgh were released from quarantine, but thirty-seven theatre owners of that city are confronted with charges of having violated the state order for having opened their houses in advance of the state health commissioner's official sanction. The managers acted on the proclamation of Mayor Babcock, who encouraged the reopening of both theatres and saloons in Pittsburgh, on the contention that the danger of the epidemic had passed before the date set by Dr. Royer for removing the restrictions. This attitude of the mayor resulted in Dr. Royer sending a corps of agents to gather evidence against the picture houses, with the result that arrests followed. After the arrests there was no further trouble in Pittsburgh, the rest of the theatres waiting to reopen until the day set by the state authorities.

Section Reports

Ogden, Utah.—The influenza situation is improving and the ban may be lifted on November 18, reopening the theatres.

Butte, Mont.—The ban was lifted in Anaconda November 13, following the reopenings in Butte by five days. Theatres in Butte were closed 29 days. It is said by health authorities there is no further danger from the epidemic in Butte. All theatres are doing exceptional business, and exhibitors are satisfied. Other Montana and Northwestern towns were expected to follow in the footsteps of Butte, as the epidemic is said to be under control.

Cleveland, O.—Cleveland theatres opened Monday evening, November 11. Fifty per cent of Ohio houses have reopened. Cleveland exhibitors report big business since the passing of the influenza.

Cincinnati, O.—Motion picture theatres of Cincinnati reopened November 12, the ban having been fully removed.

Salt Lake City, Utah.—The influenza epidemic has abated here, but health officials up to November 13 had not decided upon the date of reopening for theatres. The prospect was that with continued progress towards stamping out the epidemic the order for reopenings would be given to be effective about November 23.

San Francisco, Cal.—The situation here is much improved. Official action on reopening the theatres was to be taken

Close-ups of the Week's Events

The limelight of the industry gleamed upon Pittsburgh exhibitors last week, insofar as the influenza situation is concerned. It appears the Mayor of the Smoky City encouraged the reopening of the theatres on the contention that the danger of the epidemic had passed. But this was before the date set by the State Health Commissioner, who ruled that the houses could reopen November 9. Listening to the Pittsburgh Mayor, thirty-seven exhibitors opened their picture palaces before November 9—and have been confronted with charges of having violated the State order. It is said the city of Lancaster was also lax in observing the order, but that exhibitors were very cautious and kept out of trouble.

Nearly the whole of Pennsylvania is "open" now.

Exhibitors of North America have been so "wrapped up" in their own troubles incident to the influenza closings that they have not had time to wonder if anyone but themselves suffered. Reports indicate that theatres of Brazil and many other countries of South America were closed on account of the epidemic. But the chap who said that "Misery loves company" may be mistaken in this case, as exhibitors in general declare the closing period has done much good to the exhibiting business. No kicks have been registered.

The "brotherly love" which has always been in evidence at St. Paul and Minneapolis is again active, being revived on the eve of peace. St. Paul prospered for a time in the epidemic crisis at the expense of her neighbor, and was then closed tight. This brought forth word from Minneapolis that the latter's theatres would remain closed for at least two additional weeks, as it was feared St. Paul inhabitants would import germs to Minneapolis.

They're at it again.

Observing personages within the industry have noted that the independent producers are planting pictures solidly on Broadway as a result of the influenza. And, judging by the box office reports, the fans like the films immensely. "The Woman the Germans Shot," which Select has secured, is one of them. "A Romance of the Air" was at the Rivoli. The Rialto had "A Woman's Experience." At the Strand was "Little Women," a Brady picture. "Marriage" played the Broadway. "Lafayette We Come" was also in evidence.

The merchants of the country have been awakened to the fact that motion picture theatres are necessary to their business. From all sides the shopkeepers are registering kicks at the enforced closing of the theatres, claiming that without motion pictures they have practically no trade. Which appears, on the surface, that the time is ripe to encourage cooperation between the merchants and exhibitors.

Thursday night, November 14. On good authority it was stated the theatres would be permitted to reopen on November 23.

SPOKANE, WASH.—The picture theatres and churches planned big programs in celebration of their reopening Sunday, November 17.

SEATTLE, WASH.—The ban in Seattle was lifted Tuesday, November 12, and all motion picture theatres are open. Patrons must wear masks in all houses and when shopping in the stores.

SAN DIEGO, CAL.—The ban on theatres, schools and churches here was to be raised November 17.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—The theatres here have been rejoicing at reopening November 16. All motion picture houses have booked excellent attractions in anticipation of big business.

Influenza Hits Yakima Employees

The epidemic of influenza, which resulted in closing practically every theatre in the United States, has been particularly a blow to the Mercy Amusement Company, Inc., of Yakima, Wash., which operated three theatres in that city.

Three employees of the company have died either from influenza or from pneumonia resulting. The first of the three to succumb was Frank Read, for four years drummer in the Empire theatre orchestra, and who died October 26 of pneumonia. Walter E. Jordan, property master for two and a half years at the Empire, died of influenza October 29. Mrs. Jordan, wife of Walter E., died of the same disease two days following the death of her husband, leaving a four-year-old son. Fergus D. Shaw, for three years projection operator for the company, but who for the past two months in military service, stationed at Pullman, Wash., where he was an instructor in the radio corps, died of influenza at Pullman October 27.

Besides losing three valued employees, the three theatres of the Mercy Amusement Company have been closed since October 9. Prospects are, however, that the ban will be lifted in another week.

Los Angeles Hopes to Open November 21

A wire from Los Angeles on November 13 stated that Los Angeles exhibitors believe the Board of Health will permit theatres which closed October 11 to reopen November 21. A petition asking the closing of all business places or the reopening of the theatres has been filed with the City Council. It included the names of many ministers, officers of labor unions and all exhibitors and managers of other theatres. The hearing was set for November 14.

A Los Angeles report asserts that all theatres in Arizona were still dark on November 13. On the same day it was announced that seventeen theatres in southern California which had been closed were again in operation. These included Riverside, San Bernardino, Pomona, Fullerton, Redlands and Whittier.

The majority of towns in the Northwest territory, including Seattle, Portland, Spokane and others closed October 12 were to reopen November 18. Denver and most of the towns in Colorado and New Mexico reopened November 11. Salt Lake City and territory are closed, with no definite date set for reopenings. It is said that San Francisco may not reopen until December. Health departments declare they will not permit the places still closed to open prematurely, or until their is no illness from influenza. It is estimated that less than ten northern California towns had reopened up to November 13.

Edel Buried in Buffalo

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Harold Edel, former manager of the Strand theatre, Buffalo, and the Strand, New York, was laid to rest in the Mitchel H. Mark mausoleum in Forest Lawn. Many local friends attended the ceremonies, the arrangements being in charge of Moe Mark, Mr. Edel's uncle. Mr. Edel is mourned by a wide circle of theatrical men in Western New York.

Weber Directs Anita Stewart

Productions to Be Made at Studio in Hollywood—First National Will Do Releasing—Work at Once

WITH the reshaping of motion picture events on the West Coast, which included the marriage of Charles Chaplin and Mildred Harris and the reported withdrawal of the latter from Universal, came the definite statement to Motion Picture News on Nov. 13 that Lois Weber will direct the Anita Stewart productions. Miss Weber formerly directed Mildred Harris, and it is presumed that the latter's marriage to the screen comedian changed her motion picture future considerably, in so far as engagements are concerned.

Lois Weber is probably the best known among women directors, and her acquisition by the Stewart organization has been the cue for numerous messages of congratulation to the Louis Mayer forces. To a representative of Motion Picture News in Los Angeles it was made known that the new producing arrangements will not change the method of distribution of the Anita Stewart productions. The First National Exhibitors' Circuit has been handling these features, the most recent being "Virtuous Wives," and will continue to release them. The studio staff will also remain as formerly, it is announced.

Plans for the immediate future call for production work at Hollywood, which city Miss Stewart is expected to reach this week. Upon her arrival it is presumed that work will be put under way, and that no time will be lost in putting the first of the Weber-Stewart features through the camera.

Among the productions which Lois Weber made for Universal are "Borrowed Clothes," "Forbidden" and "There's No Place Like Home," all starring Mildred Harris. Regarding the future business plans of the latter no statement has been made.

In regard to "Virtuous Wives," the most recent Stewart picture, Louis B. Mayer said: "It is a story that will have a direct, intimate appeal for every girl and woman in the United States. It will be available through the exchanges of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit."

It is understood that the Mayer organization confidently expects Miss Stewart's productions to have an even greater appeal with Lois Weber at the helm of the directorial end. Miss Weber's name is well known among the fans of the country, who have come to know her productions for the skilful direction with which they are made. In Miss Stewart she has a star whose popularity can be made even greater than it has been, in the opinion of many of the industry.

United War Work Team Is Aggressive

The members of the Allied Theatrical, Motion Picture, Music and Entertainments Team of the United War Work Campaign, of which William Fox is chairman and George M. Cohan associate chairman, has been announced from the headquarters of the committee, 110 West Forty-second Street.

Men prominent in the theatrical and motion picture world volunteered to give their undivided attention for the one week of the drive, which commenced November 11th to 18th inclusive, and make every effort to oversubscribe the allotment made by the Executive Committee in charge of the National Drive.

The members of the team are: William Fox, chairman; George M. Cohan, associate chairman; B. S. Moss, E. F. Albee, A. L. Erlanger, Marcus Loew, Sam A. Scribner, Adolph Zukor, Lee Shubert and Sam H. Harris.

She told us, before starting for Los Angeles on Saturday, that she had several directors and scenario writers in mind from which to make the final choice before starting work on her first release through our exchanges. She named them and they were foremost among the top-notchers. She named several plays and books she is considering for adaptation to the screen. They are among the biggest and best in the history of literature and the stage.

The three producers mentioned above questioned her policy of protecting herself and exhibitors by insuring quality from three angles—star, story and direction. She knows that her popularity is dependent upon the kind of stories she produces. She knows that the public would not continue to lavish its patronage upon her if the quality of her product was not in keeping with her ability and standing. And she is certain to intensify her popularity in exact proportion to the increase in the appeal and entertainment value of her releases.

The bulk of trouble in our business lies with the producers. They do not believe in giving exhibitors a combination of star, story and direction. They lack vision, business ability and confidence in their own judgment. They want tremendous profits quickly. They overreach themselves and lose out completely. They are business parasites who combine luck and chance in a gamble, instead of reasoning along practical and obvious lines. They get a star and exploit him or her. The story is the last item for consideration. And if it costs more than a couple of thousands of dollars it is too expensive. The production cost would be too great. The public is disappointed and vents its disapproval on the exhibitor. And the producer declares that the business is going to the devil.

This great fault will be corrected by exhibitors, if it is corrected at all. The parasite producers will continue to throw mediocre stuff at exhibitors as long as they will book it. They have proven that they cannot measure up to the box-office standards for a producer. They will go right along, wasting, indulging their own opinions and ideas without the least thought, regard for, or study of public likes and dislikes. And exhibitors will continue to pay the freight until—

The J. A. Quinn's of the business get together and say:

"Enough of this bunk. These swivel-chair producers are going to stop playing and get down to business or expire commercially, because we are going to hold them up to ridicule and give them the chance to prove, if they can, that we are wrong. We are going to give our patronage to the stars and producers who know more about production and quality than their office boys and refuse to pay premiums in booking what we don't want to get what we do want.

"We are going to play the big star quality productions for longer runs, make them earn more money for us by more intensive to-the-public selling methods and give every ounce of encouragement we can to those who see that quantity is slowly killing the industry and are attempting to restore it to the good graces of the public by thinking only in terms of quality."

J. D. WILLIAMS.

"Under Four Flags" Will Have Official Showing

Official showings of "Under Four Flags," the third U. S. Official War Picture, issued by the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, are announced for seven cities outside of New York, where the latest Government war film will be made known at the Rialto and Rivoli during the week opening November 17th. All the official bookings are for a week.

In Washington "Under Four Flags" will be the initial attraction at Harry M. Crandall's new Metropolitan theatre, which opens its doors Saturday evening, November 23d. The Metropolitan will be one of the handsomest cinema houses in the United States.

Indianapolis will see the new picture at the Circle theatre during the week beginning November 24th. The Walnut theatre, Cincinnati, will have the official showing during the week of December 1st. Three cities will see "Under Four Flags" during the week of December 8th. In Kansas City it will be shown at the Liberty theatre, a new house; in Dayton, O., it will be seen at the Strand theatre, and in St. Louis at the Odeon.

St. Louis exhibitors favor the Odeon on account of the exploitation the picture will receive before being released for the regular picture houses, and are said to be cooperating to make the engagement a success.

The official showing in Philadelphia will be at the Stanley, which has booked the picture for the week of December 16th.

Universal Men Banquet at Kansas City

A banquet was tendered to L. B. Douglas, manager of the Kansas City Universal office, on Saturday, November 2d. This was an anniversary of his birthday.

The dinner was attended by all employees of the exchanges, including Messrs. Stern, Pearce, Lozier, Recob, Kelly, Abramz, Lukenbill, Glennon, Jones, Dodson, Quade, Cass, Hill and Miller, and Misses McLendon, Freeman, Lish, Wallingford, Helm, Bolton, Cooper, Ludwig, Bladen and Scott, and Mrs. Crisian, Mrs. Lynch and Mrs. Mossman.

A handsome diamond scarf pin was presented him, and the affair wound up in the wee hours of the morning. Mr. Stern acted as toastmaster, and speeches were made by Mr. Pearce, Mr. Hinton, Mr. Jones and Mr. Dodson.

Statues Help "Under Four Flags"

The Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information has adopted as the pictorial background for its publicity for "Under Four Flags," the third Official War Picture, which gets its first Government showing at the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, in New York City, Sunday evening, Nov. 17, the military group which has adorned the up-town front of the "Flatiron" Building, at Twenty-third street and Broadway, for several months. It is called "The Allies," and the four heroic figures represent the fighting men of America, France, Great Britain and Italy.

Parsons Tells Plans for Billie Rhodes

William Parsons and Isadore Bernstein, directing officials of the National Film Corporation of America, have returned to the coast from an eastern trip where plans for release of future productions of the National were completed. According to announcements made by Messrs. Parsons and Bernstein, a market has been established for eight features starring Billie Rhodes, to be released during the coming year. This applies to both the foreign and domestic markets. It is also stated that for perhaps the first time in the history of the film industry, a year's work has been laid out for a producing unit and its star, inasmuch as the National has purchased rights on eight different books or plays which will constitute the offerings for the next twelve months. The eight productions selected for Miss Rhodes are entirely different with respect to atmosphere, locale and the nature of the part for the star. The first release will be "The Girl of My Dreams," which is a mountain story. "The Springtime of Youth," a circus story, will follow. The latter is an original scenario by Bess Meredyth, and both of these plays have been filmed. Other stories purchased are "Hearts and Masks," a crook story by Harold McGrath; "The Road to Arcadia," a gypsy story by Nina Wilcox Putman; "Little Genius," a theatrical story, and "The Man Catcher," which is laid in a boarding house. Titles of the others have not been announced. Work of producing these several subjects is now in the preparatory stages, and the actual filming will be commenced within a few days. John B. Clymer has been engaged to prepare the continuity.

Universal Lists Releases Starting Nov. 18

Universal reports encouraging prospects of bookings for the list of its Bluebirds and Special Attractions set for release in regular order after the resumption of business November 16. The schedule has remained virtually unchanged in relation to the order of releasing.

Following is the list of Bluebirds and the dates of their release: "Hugon, the Mighty," featuring Monroe Salisbury, November 18; "All Night," featuring Carmel Myers, November 25; "Tongues of Flames," with Marie Walcamp as star, December 2; "She Hired a Husband," featuring Priscilla Dean, December 9; "Set Free," featuring Edith Roberts, December 16; "The Cabaret Girl," featuring Ruth Clifford, December 23.

The Special Attraction schedule is as follows: "Kiss or Kill," featuring Priscilla Dean, November 18; "Vanity Pool," featuring Mary MacLaren, December 2; "The Wildcat of Paris," with Priscilla Dean, December 16; "Danger—Go Slow," featuring Mae Murray, December 30, and "Roped," featuring Harry Carey, January 13.

Universal's serial of the circus, entitled "The Lure of the Circus," will be released November 25.

TWO SERVICE SECTIONS THIS WEEK

They Will Be Worth Your Reading and Preserving For Use Later

IN this issue there appear two Special Service Sections. One of these is on "After the War," the first of the peace pictures, which will be sold on the States Rights plan by the Argosy Film Corporation. In these pages there are assembled specimens of the advertising aids and numerous suggestions are made for creating word of mouth advertising community in your community.

The second is on the Universal Special Attraction, Priscilla Dean in "Kiss or Kill." Suggestions are made for getting the full value out of the title and making the most of the story and the star.

You will find no foolish stunts recommended here, but practical talks about the pictures that will enable the exhibitors to get a full understanding of them in advance and use either the suggestions made in the special sections or ideas of their own.

Pickford Heads Own Company

Arranges with First National Exhibitors' Circuit for Distribution of Her Subjects—No Release Dates Scheduled

MARY PICKFORD will in the future head her own producing organization, it was announced in New York Nov. 10, following the star's visit to the metropolis and her conferences with officials of First National Exhibitors' Circuit. On Nov. 9, during the course of these conferences, Miss Pickford signed a contract with First National, it is announced, providing for the distribution of her subjects, which she will make upon her return to the West Coast. The releasing channel will be First National. No definite release schedule has been set, it was said.

Harry Schwalbe, secretary-treasurer, and J. D. Williams, manager, respectively, of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, represented that organization. The star, her mother and her attorney, and the two officials of the exhibitor-distributing concern, were the only persons present at the time the agreement was executed.

Miss Pickford has gone to Los Angeles, where, as an independent producer, she will complete arrangements for beginning work on "Daddy Longlegs," her first release through First National exchanges.

It is explained by officials of First National that Miss Pickford's contract does not provide for any specific release dates on any of her productions. She told them that an average of three months would be required for each release to allow ample time for the effort she proposed putting into each subject to insure high quality. The terms and conditions of the contract are said to be such that Miss Pickford can take any length of time she feels is necessary, without interference or requests for haste.

The contract, it is said, makes Miss Pickford personally responsible for every release she makes through First National. She is now the head of her own producing company, on exactly the same basis that Chaplin makes his comedies for the exhibitor-directed distributing concern.

"We feel exactly the same as our franchise holders do about the contract with Miss Pickford," said an official of First National. "Pre-eminent among feminine screen stars, with a popularity that is phenominal, she has given the weight of her name, her prestige and her box-office value to the exhibitor-created policy on which First National is founded—quality production through specialization, personal responsibility for the merits of her work and her releases to exhibitors free from conditions or restrictions of any character. That fact, to First National members, is just as important in its promises for the future as is the fact that Pickford-selected, Pickford-made productions will be distributed by First National exchanges.

Fox Declares Pictures Booked Steadily

From the Fox offices comes the declaration that during the no-release period the William Fox Big Timely Pictures and the Productions Extraordinary have proved life-savers to those exhibitors unable to get pictures of an importance worthy of their patronage.

The Big Timely Pictures available for exhibitors during the no-release period are "The Prussian Cur," R. A. Walsh's play; "Why America Will Win," the photobiography of General Pershing, and "Queen of the Sea," starring Annette Kellermann.

Many theatres also have been able to tide themselves over the no-release period by showing "Cleopatra," "Les Miserables," or "A Daughter of the Gods."

Unique Exploitation for "Under Four Flags"

Director Charles S. Hart, of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, and Manager S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, arranged with Major Hitchcock, at Wing Headquarters, Mitchel Aviation Field, Mineola, L. I., for a squadron of airplanes to be utilized in exploiting the united official showing of "Under Four Flags," the new Government picture, during the week of November 17.

Mutual Corp. Gets a New Name

Since Absorption by Affiliated Will Be Called Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation—Back to Chicago

A NEW name for Mutual Film Corporation, which was taken over last week by Affiliated Distributors Corporation, and the first news of which was published in Motion Picture News of Nov. 16, was decided upon in Chicago Nov. 13. A wire from the Windy City on that date advises that the name of Mutual Film Corporation has been changed to Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation.

At first it was expected that the organization would take the name of Exhibitors Mutual Film Corporation, but this idea was abandoned after it had been practically decided upon.

In an announcement this week Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation makes it known that the publicity and advertising department of the company, which moved from Chicago to New York July 1, have been moved back to Chicago under the merger with Affiliated. Terry Ramsaye, who was in charge of the New York office, resigned when the new deal was consummated, and it is understood that he has been engaged as publicity director of S. L. Rothapfel's two Broadway motion picture palaces, the Rialto and Rivoli.

The removal of the departments was under the supervision of Colvin W. Brown, advertising manager of Mutual, who becomes acting head of the department for Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation following Mr. Ramsaye's withdrawal.

The merger was completed Nov. 7, and as stated in Motion Picture News, financial and managing control of Mutual was acquired by H. A. Brink, William J. Clark and H. C. Cornelius, president, vice-president and secretary-treasurer respectively of Affiliated.

It is said the deal does not in any way affect the releasing of productions through Affiliated and in no wise changes its plans, but guarantees exhibitor-controlled distribution through a corporation which is thoroughly equipped and can render the most efficient distribution obtainable. Affiliated Distributors Corporation, through this new movement, should benefit very materially through the advice and cooperation of James M. Sheldon, chairman of the Board of Directors of the Mutual Film Corporation. A. S. Kirkpatrick, Assistant General Manager, will as heretofore maintain and control supervision over all of the branches of the Mutual. The present efficient organization of Mutual throughout will continue and be used as nucleus around which to build the contemplated larger organization.

The officers of the new organization are: President, William J. Clark; vice-president and general manager, H. A. Brink; Chairman of the Board of Directors, James M. Sheldon; secretary, H. C. Cornelius; treasurer, Paul H. Davis; assistant general manager, A. S. Kirkpatrick; auditor, Hugh Davis, and general counsel, Charles C. Pettijohn. In addition to the above there will be appointed an advisory board of prominent exhibitors representing each section corporation and zone in the United States and Canada, who will be substantial stockholders in the Mutual Film Corporation.

Mitchell Lewis Engaged to Make Series for Select Pictures

Select Pictures Corporation announces the acquisition of Mitchell Lewis as a series star. Mr. Lewis, who has become known to photoplay fans for his characterization of Poleon in "The Barrier," and for other creations, has already begun upon the production of a series of pictures for Select, the first of which, "Code of the Yukon," has been filmed and is in process of preparation for distribution through Select exchanges.

Mitchell Lewis productions will be made in series and marketed in the same manner as the series productions of the other Select stars, Clara Kimball Young, Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, Alice Brady and Marion Davies. The Lewis series for the first season will include six features.

Interest is attached to the news that Mr. Lewis has been taken into the Select fold by reason of the fact that Select pictures have up to this time exploited only the work of women stars. There has been much speculation at various times as to whether or not Select would add a male artist to its ranks—and now comes the answer to this query.

Will Help Develop Scenario Writing

With the aid of J. C. Brownell, scenario editor of the Universal Film Mfg. Company, M. Kashin, manager of the Broadway theatre in New York, inaugurated a movement for the advancement of the motion picture creative art.

His undertaking is in effect to develop a regular course of training at the Broadway for regularly enrolled, recognized students of scenario writing.

Mr. Kashin has arranged with Mrs. Frances Taylor Patterson, instructor of the class of scenario composition at Columbia University, to make attendance by her regular class at the Broadway theatre once a week, a regular part of the curriculum of study.

The class will be called upon to analyze the film productions they see, and prepare written criticisms of the films. It is purposed to have the students provide also suggestions for substitute climaxes or twists for the film stories and to evolve, if possible, advance formulas for future films.

Cromelin Gives Details on Plaza Sales

President Paul H. Cromelin announces the titles and stars of Plaza subjects recently acquired by the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation from E. D. Horkheimer as follows: "The Angel Child," with Kathleen Clifford; "The Law That Divides" (Miss Clifford); "Playing the Game," with Anita King; "Mistaken Identity" (Miss King); "Petticoats and Politics" (Miss King); "Whatever the Cost" (Miss King); "The Girl Angle" (Miss King); "The Locked Heart," with Gloria Joy; "Wanted a Brother" (Miss Joy); "The Midnight Burglar" (Miss Joy); "No Children Wanted" (Miss Joy); "Miss Mischief Maker" (Miss Joy); "Little Miss Grow-Up" (Miss Joy); "Sunny Jane," with Jackie Saunders; "Wild Cat" (Miss Saunders); "Bit of Kindling" (Miss Saunders); "Betty, Be Good" (Miss Saunders); "Bab, the Fixer" (Miss Saunders); "The Checkmate" (Miss Saunders); "Jackie, the Hoyden" (Miss Saunders).

Mr. Cromelin also announces the acquisition of "The Transgressor," the second production by the makers of "The Victim," now in Latin-American countries, where it was placed by Inter-Ocean. The new special is in nine reels, from the story by O. E. Goebel and Conde B. Pallen, under Ludwig G. B. Erb's personal supervision.

Eugene H. Kaufman, office and accessories manager of the Inter-Ocean, announces new placements of Speer carbons, which he introduced to the foreign field in Brazil, Island of Malta, China, Dutch East Indies and Scandinavia. The shipment to the Island of Malta is the first of an American carbon ever made to that little isle.

A sale was terminated by Gus Schlesinger of Inter-Ocean in behalf of "The Transgressor" for the territories of Argentine, Uruguay and Paraguay. The sale also took in the following Inter-Ocean subjects: "Wishing Ring," "The Boss," "Hunting Big Game in the Frozen North" and "Eight Bells." Mr. Schlesinger also announces that he has sold the Scandinavian rights to "Inside the Lines." Mr. Louis Brock of the sales staff, placed "Wives of Men," featuring Florence Reed, in Australia and Argentine last week.

Paramount Schedules Moore Subject

The Success Series release scheduled by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for November 17 is "Snobs," in which Victor Moore is starring. This Paramount production was directed by Oscar Apfel from the story by George Bronson Howard. Anita King appears in the leading feminine role opposite the comedy star

The story of "Snobs" chronicles the fortunes of Charles Disney, industrious driver of a milk wagon, poor but respectable, who suddenly finds that he is an English Duke and heir to twenty millions from a deceased grandfather.

Milwaukee Plans New Motion Picture Theatre

MILWAUKEE, WIS.—Milwaukee is to have a new 3,000 seat photoplay theatre to be erected immediately after the removal of the present ban against building, if plans now under consideration are carried out.

This new theatre, which is to be erected on the present site of the Schlitz Palm Garden, Third street and Grand avenue, is being planned by outside photoplay interests who have already made several minor investments in local theatrical enterprises. But one Milwaukee man is interested in this project.

The location for the new house is an ideal one as the corner is in the very heart of Milwaukee and more people pass this corner than any other in Milwaukee. All that remained in the way of completing this deal is the actual closing of the lease for the property. Details of the transaction have been fully completed, it is said, but the actual signing is being delayed until peace has been completely negotiated.

A scale of prices ranging from 15 cents to 50 cents will be charged for the productions, and elaborate programs will be presented. Under this scale, it is planned to have 1,500 seats at 15 cents, the balance ranging upward to 50 cents, making it possible to care for that large class of people who refuse to pay more than 15 cents for photoplays and at the same time affording splendid accommodations for the higher priced patronage.

"Your Fighting Navy" to Be Exploited Big

"Your Fighting Navy at Work and at Play," the Educational Film Corporation's multiple-reeler of Uncle Sam's sea fighters, will come into added prominence as the result of the great events of the last fortnight, Educational believes. The Navy that took the victors to Europe will now begin to bring them back. The warfare against the deadly mine and submarine is succeeded by the policing of the northern European waters and due measures to cope with any sinister designs of the Bolshevist fleets. In the final peace settlement the great role of guarding the seas in behalf of the League of Nations is to be shared by the navies of America, Great Britain, France and Italy.

E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation, says: "We regard the signing of the German armistice as imparting increased value to our Navy picture. Millions of Americans, including the kinsfolk of the three-quarters of a million sea fighters, are curious to know what the Navy has done and is doing. This curiosity has been whetted by Secretary Daniels' and Assistant Secretary Roosevelt's partial revelations of its recent amazing activities. As a result of my personal talks with naval experts, I make the prediction that the Navy will play a large and perhaps a predominant role in the final settlement of world affairs."

ONE FOR THE IMITATORS!

Industry Looks for Busy License Bureau If Chaplin Stunt Is Given Wide Vogue

IMITATORS of Charles Chaplin, who on special occasions inserts the title of "Spencer" to separate the given and surname, have been given a chance to prove to what extent their imitations go, if the news that emanates from Los Angeles is correct.

It is asserted that the screen comedian and Mildred Harris were married October 23 at the home of the Los Angeles County Clerk, R. S. Sparks. The alleged secret sprung a leak on November 10, and industrious individuals within the industry have been trying to ascertain the truthfulness of the report ever since. At last reports it was said the County Clerk modestly admitted the marriage, and attributed the secrecy to Chaplin's shyness. The honeymooners threatened to go to Santa Anna or some other place unless the clerk promised to seal his lips, and everybody knows that would have took Los Angeles off the map almost entirely. So County Clerk, faithful to the Capitol of the motion picture industry and to its much imitated comedian, agreed to silence.

Then followed the news that Lois Weber will no longer direct Miss Harris and that the latter's future is "indefinite."

Anyway, there's no law against Cupid demanding unconditional surrender, even while the studios are trying to rest up from overwork.

National Association Meeting

Regular Quarterly Meeting of Directors of National Association of Motion Picture Industry Held November 14

THE regular quarterly meeting of the board of directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was held at the rooms of the association, 806 Times Building, 11 o'clock, Thursday morning, November 14th.

Numerous important matters were on the calendar for discussion and action at this meeting. The Washington situation was carefully gone over in every detail, especially the recent action of the Senate Finance Committee in amending the War Revenue Tax Bill.

Another important matter scheduled for action is the organization of the Exhibitors' Branch of the National Association. At the convention of the American Exhibitors' Association in Chicago it was decided that the two national exhibitor organizations should merge into one body to be called the Exhibitors' Branch of the National Association. Since the Chicago meeting nothing had been done pending the arrival of Peter J. Schaefer, the president of the merged organization, in New York.

It is also very probable that the Board will have a delegation of its members to attend the annual meeting and convention of the United States Chamber of Commerce, of which the Association is a member, to be held at Atlantic City, December 4th, 5th and 6th. This is a very important convention, as the question of world trade after the war will be discussed in all its details.

The part that the motion picture will play in the reconstruction period after the war is naturally very large, and it is expected that the delegation from the association will take an active part in the deliberations of the convention.

Another subject brought up for discussion was the question of inaugurating a campaign for Sunday opening of motion picture theatres throughout the United States, preliminary details for a campaign of this description are now in the course of preparation, and it merely requires the action of the board of directors to put them into effect.

Advertisers Plan to Welcome Soldiers

At the regular weekly meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., held at Rector's, the first steps were taken toward a fitting celebration of the return of those members now in the military and naval service of the country, several of whom have been participating in the fighting on the Western front. To that end, a committee was appointed by President P. A. Parsons, consisting of Paul Lazarus, Bert Adler and Julian Solomon.

The weekly addresses, which proved such an enjoyable and instructive feature of last winter's sessions, will shortly be resumed, and at Thursday's meeting Arthur James, Julian Solomon and Nat Rothstein were named as the speakers' committee for the ensuing year.

The sympathy of the association was extended by resolution to Phillip K. Mindil, whose only son has been reported killed in action in France. Mr. Mindil was connected with the film industry for many years and numbers many of the members of the association among his friends.

Minnesota Rejoices at Booze Report

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Exhibitors, a majority of them, are pleased with the outcome of the recent voting on state-wide prohibition. Latest returns show the "drys" to be in the lead by apparently safe margin and theatre men are of the opinion that a dry state will mean more business for the theatres. Hence influential theatres, open during the campaigning period, supported the "dry" amendment to the state constitution.

Film Division Is Appreciated

Many Exhibitors Write Letters of Praise for Services Rendered—Community Section Becomes Very Valuable

"YOUR cooperation is doing an immense amount of good, and I am mighty pleased with the spirit of help obtained through your kindly offices and endeavors."

Thus writes Mr. I. C. Mishler, of the Mishler theatre in Altoona, Pa., expressing his appreciation for what the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, had done for him through his Department of Domestic Distribution. What led up to it was the number of telephone calls and personal visits he had received as a result of the circular letters sent out by the Department's Community Section in advance of his showing—a form of advance publicity given to every booking now made on the Government war picture, "America's Answer."

The one point insisted on from first to last by the Department of Domestic Distribution is that an opportunity to see "America's Answer" is owing every man, woman and child in the United States. The picture is no mere diversion. It is an accounting by Uncle Sam of his stewardship in handling the billions of dollars entrusted to him. Moreover, it shows, as no other picture does on the same scale, just how our boys have been living in trench and behind the lines; how life, despite the hardship and grimness of war, is a cheerful and even a laughing matter on transport and train, in "Y" hut, and even just beyond the range of the guns, where Y. M. C. A. helpers and Salvation Army lasses have been distributing doughnuts, chocolate and smokes. It is a fine, big, powerful picture, as well as an intensely human and intimate one, and Uncle Sam intends that no one with the price of the smallest admission shall miss seeing it.

As part of the Department's plan the Community Section came into being, initiated and carried on by Clara de Lissa Berg, which endeavors through a systematically planned advertising campaign to stimulate an interest in "America's Answer" throughout the community, so that it will demand the picture; and which follows up the receipt of booking dates with personally addressed letters to heads of industrial concerns, schools, churches, clubs and various organizations, bespeaking their cooperation in making the coming exhibition a success.

When this is done, the manager receives a letter, telling him of the circulation that has taken place and inviting him to suggest other individuals whom he would like addressed, an opportunity that has been gladly taken advantage of by those exhibitors who have been able to open their theatres during the past fortnight.

There follow a few of the many replies to letters sent out by the Community Section, which show how vividly the plan has appealed to the spirit of patriotic cooperation and how practically that spirit is translating itself into action.

From Rt. Rev. Richard H. Nelson, bishop of Albany, to the clergy of his diocese: "You will render a service to the great cause in which our country is engaged if you will use your influence to have this picture exhibited in your town." Letters such as these were received from many bishops, and copies of them were sent to clergymen of the dioceses covered.

From Rev. J. Howard Gibbons, rector of Trinity Church, Covington, Ky.: "I will do all I can, and will urge the members of my congregation to attend. I have seen the film. It is a wonderful presentation."

As a result of the request made to him by Rev. J. R. Lewis, of Brunswick, Ga., the manager of a picture house in that city agreed to book "America's Answer," and the same is being done in many cities.

In response to a request made by the Community Section, Mrs. Saunders, president of the Mississippi Federation of Women's Clubs, addressed a letter to all presidents of women's clubs in her State containing this request: "Will the women of your club ask the picture houses in your community to exhibit 'America's Answer' and give them your support by attending the performance?"

Rabbi William H. Greenburg, of Dallas, Texas, writes: "I shall be glad to use my influence in inducing the manager of one or more picture houses to book 'America's Answer.'"

Dr. David R. Corson, assistant superintendent of schools in Newark, N. J., wrote that he would announce a coming exhibition of "America's Answer" at a conference of school principals. Mr. Randall J. Condon, superintendent of schools in Cincinnati, wrote as follows to all his school principals: "Will you please ask the houses in your district to arrange to show these pictures and say that without doubt arrangements can be made to allow the children to attend matinee performances."

Mr. H. H. Kenyon, promoter of service of the Y. M. C. A. in Philadelphia, wrote: "We are glad and esteem it a privilege to aid you in advertising 'America's Answer.' . . . If you will give us full details we will endeavor to carry them out to the letter."

Thus is the circle of interest completed, and a 100 per cent showing of the great picture is from every point of view a 100 per cent success.

Proctor Goes to Coast for Pathe

Ralph O. Proctor, who has served as division manager of Pathe through the Central West, with home office in Chicago, has been transferred to the coast and will supervise the exchanges in San Francisco, Seattle, Portland, Denver, Salt Lake, and have his headquarters in Los Angeles. Mr. Proctor went to Los Angeles on a vacation trip, and after spending a few days there sought a transfer which was granted him. While in Los Angeles Mr. Proctor was the guest of Bryant Washburn, star of Paramount.

De Luxe Gets Searle Dawley as Director for Doris Kenyon

J. Searle Dawley, one of the best known directors in the motion picture industry, has signed a contract to direct Doris Kenyon at the head of her own company in De Luxe features. Theodore C. Deitrich, president of Miss Kenyon's company, has been endeavoring to secure Mr. Dawley's name to a contract. Mr. Dawley had decided to give up directing and devote all of his time to literary work, and only consented to return to directing with the understanding that he would direct Miss Kenyon exclusively.

"I consider her one of the most remarkably talented and beautiful young women before the public today," explained Mr. Dawley, "and I am satisfied that I will be able to do wonderful work with her."

The first of Miss Kenyon's pictures to be directed by Mr. Dawley will be "Twilight," a tremendously dramatic production, adapted for the screen by Louis Joseph Vance, and originally written for the Metropolitan Magazine by Vingie E. Roe, and published in the October issue of that widely circulated publication under the title of "The Alchemy of Love." Work on the production will be started at once.

Mr. Dawley has been a motion picture director for twelve years, which was preceded by a stage career of four years' duration. He has always been particularly successful with women stars, having directed Marguerite Clark for three years in all of her most successful productions. He also directed Mary Pickford, Billie Burke, Elsie Ferguson, Bertha Kalich, Mary Miles Minter, Mrs. Fiske, and many other celebrated stars of the screen during his long career. In addition to all of this he found time to write eighteen plays for the stage and screen.

"Billy Hart Night" for New York Elks

W. V. Hart, veteran motion picture man, conducted one of his famous "Billy Hart Nights" at the Elks Home, 108 West Forty-third Street, Sunday, November 17th, at which he was the host to film stars and his wide circle of friends. These Billy Hart Nights are periodical affairs at the New York headquarters of the B. P. O. E., and have always attracted a capacity crowd to the auditorium.

All the leading movie heroes and heroines residing in the East are in the habit of attending, to be introduced by Mr. Hart to his friends and brother Elks, according to report, and to make a bow or speech as they may feel inclined.

This social stunt is a long established one at the Elks Home, and each year increases in importance. A program of motion pictures and music accompanies the appearances of the stars. So far, admission has always been complimentary, and by invitation, but this time an admission was charged, the proceeds going to the United War Work campaign.

Northwest Exhibitors Endorse Alfred Black

At a recent meeting the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Corporation of the Northwest passed the following resolution:

WHEREAS, in appreciation of the efficient and able manner in which Mr. Alfred S. Black, of the Maine Branch of the National Association, has labored for our interest in Washington and elsewhere, in the past,

BE IT RESOLVED, that we, the Motion Picture Exhibitors of the Northwest, in meeting assembled, wish to place ourselves on record by a vote of thanks to Mr. Black.

AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that in appreciation of the fact that he is the only representative that has aided the Exhibitor in fighting the plan of the Distributors to place the burden of the proposed film rental tax on the Exhibitor, that we lend our moral and financial support to any effort he may make in the interest of the Exhibitor.

Edison "Ad" Manager Dies

Leonard C. McChesney, 59, of Orange, N. J., died at his home recently of heart failure. He was advertising manager of the Thomas A. Edison industries of Orange for sixteen years, and was well known in the motion picture industry.

Robert Harron Ill

It was reported from Los Angeles by wire on Nov. 14 that Robert Harron, the D. W. Griffith player, is ill from influenza and is in a very critical condition. His sister, Tessie, aged nineteen years, died of the ailment a few days ago.

Dorothy and Lillian Gish, Griffith stars, are said to be improving nicely.

Edwards to Build

A. F. Edwards, of the Edwards Amusement Enterprises, Reedsport, Ore., has made known to Motion Picture News his intention to built a theatre in Reedsport in the near future. All arrangements to construct the house have been made, it is said, and the theatre will be an improvement to be proud of, it is expected.

Brunet Answers International

Declares Pathe News Film Is Not Discontinued and Was Never Known as Hearst International News

"THE Pathe News was never known as the 'Hearst International News.' It has always been identified with the name of Pathe since its inception over ten years ago, and it always will be!" This is the keynote of a statement by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in reply to the announcement printed in several trade magazines of last week, which read in part as follows: "After December 24, the date on which the contract between the International Film Service and the Pathe Exchange, Inc., on the Hearst-Pathe News expires, the name of Pathe will be eliminated from this famous reel, and it will resume the original name of the 'Hearst International News.'"

"To clear up any misconception that may exist as the result of this statement of the International," said Mr. Brunet, "it may be well to give a brief resumé of the history of the Pathe News, which for the last twenty-three months has been united with the International's news film, the combination being known as the 'Hearst-Pathe News.' The first news film to be devised, assembled and released was the Pathe Journal in France some twelve years ago. The innovation proved to be so successful that the Pathe organization in this country, about ten years ago, started a similar news film, released weekly in one reel, called the Pathe Weekly. Four years ago, in the spring of 1914, to be exact, it was changed to a daily short reel of 200 or 300 feet, and the name became the Pathe News. As the Pathe News it continued until January 1, 1916, when by terms of a contract entered into with International Film Service, Inc., the name of Hearst was added, and it was called the 'Hearst-Pathe News.' But though the Hearst name was added, the Pathe News remained the sole property of Pathe, controlled, published, edited and distributed by Pathe. For reasons deemed good and sufficient by us, the contract, originally drawn for the period of two years and which will expire on December 24, has not been renewed.

"The International statement refers to the Hearst-Pathe News as 'this famous news reel.' The Pathe News has been famous since its inception over ten years ago, and the best evidence of its fame is the fact that during the past two years it has survived with flying colors the criticisms and censure directed against it as the result of the popular misconception of the reason for the joinder of the name Hearst with that of Pathe.

"I positively and unqualifiedly deny that the Pathe News, soon to resume its old name and the one under which it became famous, was ever known as the 'Hearst International News,' as has been intimated recently in advertisements appearing in certain news and trade papers.

"I positively and unqualifiedly state that the Pathe News of December 24 and after will be the same famous weekly that thousands of exhibitors have known, shown and admired in past years."

Pioneer Releases "Prodigal Wife" Film

The Pioneer Film Corporation announces that it will release "The Prodigal Wife," which was made by the Screencraft Company under the personal direction of Frank Reicher.

"The Prodigal Wife" stars Mary Boland, and the supporting cast includes Lucy Cotton, who has made a name for herself in many recent Broadway productions. The story is an adaptation of "Flaming Ramparts," by Edith Barnard Delano, which appeared in Harper's Magazine. It is an absorbing tale of mother love, a story that is sure to hold the interest of all those who see it and furnish entertainment of a very high quality.

Following the releasing of "The Prodigal Wife," the Pioneer Company will place on the market a feature starring Mollie King, which is now in the making but which has not been named as yet.

"Wives of Men," starring Florence Reed, which the company also released, has been booked for a week's run at all of the Poli theatres in New England.

Smith Gives Bills to Employees

There was a unique celebration of the signing of the war's armistice at the Vitagraph studios in Brooklyn last Monday when nearly 200 employees were presented with a five-dollar bill each by Albert E. Smith, president of the company, and then given a half holiday to be happy. The recipients included everyone from office boy to the four-figured weekly salaried stars without difference. Owing to the recent shut-down of motion picture production, which had lasted four weeks, the Vitagraph workers had just returned to the studio that morning to resume.

Notwithstanding the urgent necessity of immediately proceeding with vitally important production, Mr. Smith decided it was time to suspend. He called the entire force together, made a short speech, and then announced his present. "Some of you," he said, "have a larger earning capacity than myself, but I ask you one and all to accept the little gift in the spirit of unanimous happiness."

Caplon Gets "Carmen of the Klondike"

Mr. Milton Caplon of the Variety Picture Corporation, Baltimore, Md., has purchased from the S. A. Lynch Enterprises "Carmen of the Klondike," the Selexart production, with Clara Williams, for distribution in the territory of Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia.

Mr. Wm. A. Johnston,
Editor,
The Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Ave.,
New York City.

My dear Mr. Johnston,-

The Government at Washington, it seems to me, ought to take notice of the conservation measures you have placed at the hands of the motion picture industry. I refer to the service department you are conducting in The News under the title of The Complete Plan Book. This department, if properly employed by all the producers, should be made the means of saving tons of paper and an ocean of human effort every week.

I have been watching the department closely for several issues, and I have noticed the fine indorsement you have received in general terms from the various leaders of filmdom. The pages of the plan book have been uniformly perfect and efficient. The comments of acceptance have been thoroughly deserved.

But it seems to me producers and exhibitors have yet a specific action to take in order to adequately apply those pages.

I believe the Complete Plan Book should be adopted by producers and exhibitors as an absolute substitute for the reams and stacks of printed material that is ordinarily sent out by the producers individually and watched by the exhibitors. The respective pages the Book devotes each week to discussion of advance films are all the exhibitors need to guide them. Why not let these pages suffice? Why not cease burdening the mails with rafts of special material from each company?

If the industry were to focus on your department an infinite amount of time, material and energy would be saved. The exhibitors, I am sure, judging from interviews I have had, would welcome the change. It is a fact that ninety-nine per cent of the producers' publicity is thrown in the waste basket. To save that material and use it even in the most limited way would require a force of book-keepers at each theatre. Besides that, the same is the case with motion picture editors of the newspapers throughout the country. They get such great quantities of material and at so early a date that it does not warrant their keeping the same. I am in a position to state that they eventually refer to The Motion Picture News for whatever information they seek.

It is utterly impossible for the film man to keep files and records of all that literature. But if your plan were accepted universally as the standard and single service medium of its kind, the exhibitors could keep the weekly issues filed easily, and would find tremendous advantage in using them from time to time.

The producers up to now, it seems to me, have been running a race to see who could produce the most elaborate press sheets in the greatest number.

A producer came to me recently and asked what I thought of the publicity material I received from his company. I told him I was doing with it just precisely what I did with the material from other companies. " I throw it in the waste basket," I said. He then asked me," Well, why not send me some of the stuff you get from other companies, so that I may be guided in improving my service?" I was glad to oblige him.

I judged that he might abandon some of his own overplus of literature and also avoid the mistakes of the others. But I regret to say that just the opposite took place. This producer immediately increased his output and tried to outshine his competitors by issuing still more elaborate press sheets.

There is no doubt still room for improvement in your department but as it stands, the Complete Plan Book is the nearest approach to real service that exists in the field.

Permit me to thank you for the refreshing ideas contained therein, and allow me to compliment you for usual progressiveness.

Sincerely,

M. Kashin

What Style of Advertising?

There Can Be No Set "Rules," for It All Depends upon Many Local Conditions

IN advertising, conditions govern. There are no such things as hard and fast rules and when some of the self-styled experts try to tell you that there are you will save time by moving on down the street. Advertising in motion pictures depends even more than any other on conditions. Of course there are plenty of things to avoid doing, but we ourselves haven't the nerve to get out in the open and tell you just what to do all the time.

We make this observation because we have received a question from an exhibitor in a large city who has not been a consistent advertiser asking what style of advertising we would advise him to adopt. We believe that there are interesting points to the general exhibiting public here and since the city that we wanted to discuss next has not reopened its theatres and there is no picture advertising appearing in the papers, we will give you the generalities of the answer here.

Specifically, the exhibitor asks whether he should adopt the line drawing style of display or the half-tone with a combination of type, or the black and white effect. Now on the opposite page we have illustrated several different sorts of these displays, all of which have been drawn especially for the theatres except that of the Orpheum, Cleveland, which has used one of the splendid drawings sent out by Universal for the main effect.

In the first place much depends on your newspaper. It is unfortunate that there are comparatively few that get good printing effects out of the half-tone and black and white effects. The Rochester newspapers do and therefore the displays of both the Strand and the Eckel theatres of that city run largely to these effects. If you do not get good printing these should be avoided, for nothing looks worse than smeared effects. It's a good idea to experiment with this if you like this sort of effect. As a matter of fact, if you have real influence with your newspapers you can improve upon the appearance of this class of advertisements by having the stereotyper "underlay" them.

It is for this reason that many of the exhibitors have dropped the style and have gone to the drawn style of display.

Now there is one thing to avoid in the black and white and half-tone style of advertising. You can rarely use small type of script matter and get away with it. Now take the case of the Strand theatre display. Now, although the original display is thrteen inches across four columns, the script matter opposite the cut of the star can be read only with a great deal of eye strain. Always avoid the use of small script on black. It is confusing at the best and with such a background there is no contrast unless the wide style of letters is used.

Echkel theatre used a quarter of a page and adopts a combination of the half-tone effect and type. It makes a distinctive display by having the name of the theatre partly hidden by the trees in the background, but at the same time it interferes somewhat with making William Farnum and his horse stand out.

We much prefer the combination of the cut and the type advertisement when you have a good deal to say about pictures. The black and white half-tone, when there are a number of pictures mentioned, somehow nearly always seems to result in confusion.

Now turn to the displays of the Sun and the Muse theatres, both of Omaha. They show up much better than they did in the newspaper because everyone of the leading theatres used the same hand-drawn effect and none of them stood out as distinctive.

That leads us into another point: A theatre has to be governed considerably by the general style of advertising that the other theatres are using. Especially designed advertising is obviously employed to make the displays stand out as distinctive. Yellow may be your favorite color, but you would hardly paint your house that color if all the others on the same block were yellow. We have noted that in more than one city the general advertising runs to one type and stays that way.

If your newspapers make a practice of jamming all the theatre advertising together in one corner of the paper and most of the other theatres are using either the type or the half-tone combination we would earnestly recommend the hand-drawn, or sketched effect. That is the policy followed by Harold B. Franklin at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo. The newspapers charge such a high rate that the use in all of them of really big space is out of the question. The result is that all of the theatres use small space and these masses of type are jammed together. Franklin soon saw that and decided to go to the expense of having hand designed displays and generally uses a little more space than everyone else. The result of the contrast is that the displays of the Hippodrome stand out as the dominant thing on the page.

Right here let us make another observation. If the habit in your city is to use small space and the others are not doing the same thing you can always get a better showing by using the hand-drawn effect—as light as possible. Note the display of the Muse theatre.

Here is another point: You are going to have a mighty good artist to get away with this. Why, some of the drawings of stars sent out by the producers as alleged displays are almost comic sketches, so unlike the players are they.

There remains a third style of this character of advertising, and the best of it is represented by the display of the Criterion theatre, Atlanta. Nine inches, three columns is the space. Now this is what is known as combination work, line work and half tone. It is the most expensive sort of engraving, but it is hard to find one that is more effective. You will find some of the best advertisers like the Standard theatre, Cleveland, generally using this form.

Plenty of white space is essential to this style of advertising and we really believe that it is the most effective of all where you are liberal with your space. Naturally the style of the line work depends on the character of the picture. We consider the specimen of the Atlanta theatre ideal because it is dainty and in perfect keeping with the beautiful picture of Miss Young. To have used a heavy effect here would have been to spoil the appeal. For a different sort of picture we would use the heavy effect.

Space counts a great deal in determining the style. There is nothing, generally, messier than a small display attempted in the black and white effect. In our opinion the worst of advertising is that which is known as the reverse effect where the result is that the lettering shows in white and the background in black, employed in small space and without a cut.

Where you take space like that of the Strand and where you get good art work and excellent printing there is nothing to beat it. With the exception mentioned, the display of the Strand is ideal. It dominates the page by its size and with that is artistic, striking and convincing. And yet alongside of this the smaller space display of the Criterion would have attracted just as much attention, and next door even the single column of the Muse would have come in for notice. In the midst of type advertising any of these displays would have dominated even had the other type ads occupied more space.

Now G. F. Fullerton, whose work is familiar to all of you, really originated the style of advertising that he has used in the northwest. He uses big space and unusual white space, sometimes the scenes sketched and sometimes in half-tone, varying them. This style of advertising has spread to many sections west of the Mississippi and it is good advertising where you have the space to do it with, but it suffers in reduction.

Selecting Advertising Style Depends Upon Many Conditions

Illustrations of the hand drawn style of advertising is illustrated by the Sun and Muse theatres, Omaha. Strand theatre, Syracuse, used the black and white and half tone effect. The Eckel, of the same city, used half tone, line and type. The Criterion, Atlanta, has the combination effect, and the Orpheum, Cleveland, "draws in" with a producer's cut

Conditions Govern Style in Advertising Motion Picture Houses

McCormick, of Indianapolis, some of whose work is reproduced on another page of this issue, generally uses a combination of half-tone, border drawing and type, and his advertising is always striking, though he uses more type than most good advertisers, for the reason that he always goes about selling the picture and puts real salesmanship behind it.

Now, referring back to the exhibitor who asked the question, let us say that we have answered it for him, but we did not undertake to do that until we had studied the copies of the newspapers of his city for several weeks and knew very well what the other theatres were in the habit of doing. Unless the others imitate him his advertising will be distinctive and be dominant because it is distinctive.

While we are aware that a lot of good advertising men are likely to come down on our heads, we would never vary the design for the name of the theatre, except in size and position, under any circumstances. We would keep that name distinctive at any cost. Then it becomes a signal to the eye.

Here are a few things to bear in mind in selecting a style of advertising:

See what the other fellow is doing and try to do yours different.

But don't let anything tempt you to get freakish. Once in a while there comes along a picture on which the freak style pays, but that is an exception.

If the other fellow imitates you, change enough to be different, but not enough to lose your individuality.

Beware of the black and white and half-tone unless you are sure of the engraving and printing. It is costly and can be an awful mess.

Beware of the wholly drawn displays unless you have a first-class artist, and on this style of work they are rare.

The combination of the half-tone with drawn work like the Criterion is always the safest. Or you can use type in the combinations of the half-tone and the drawn border and get the best results.

These are not rules. As we said at the start, we wouldn't try to lay them down.

But if there is any exhibitor who wants to know how he can improve the style of his advertising, if he will send us copies of his papers for several weeks we will be glad to advise him privately.

Defense League and Theatre Co-operate and Put Over Picture and Liberty Loan

ACCORDING to the official announcement from Washington there is likely to be a Fifth Liberty Loan even if a treaty of peace is signed, and the theatres will doubtless be expected to do even more than ever in putting over the loan which will not have behind it active war. That is one of the reasons why there is so much of interest in the manner that H. J. Thacher, manager of the Strand theatre, Salina, Kan., put over "The Prussian Cur."

It is best told in his own words:

"At the request of one of the members of the Defense League I booked this picture, as he explained that it was the best propaganda picture he had ever witnessed, and his enthusiasm gave me an idea.

"Requesting him to inquire of the Defense League if they would permit me to exploit this picture under their auspices I would exhibit it at the usual admission prices. The idea was very well thought of, due to the fact that the Fourth Liberty Loan was about to be launched, and this picture was one that would certainly aid the sale of bonds.

"Called before the board the following morning, I was requested to explain to them just what I was going to expect them to do, and my request was that I be permitted to use their name (Defense League) in all advertisements, and that they would assist me in the distribution of advertising matter by permitting me to tell the merchants that I was putting on this picture with the request and aid of the Defense League and that I must be permitted to place window cards, heralds and posters in their stores, and I did not get one refusal in the town.

"Besides all of this I had the co-operation of both papers, obtaining 'readers' or notices every day for six days previous to the presentation of the picture, and each of these 'readers' were very large and were gratis.

"I also used this line in all advertisements: 'At the special request of the Defense League we are presenting this production at the usual admission.' Every member of the Defense League was a 'walking advertisement' and worth more than all the newspaper advertising I could have purchased.

"Having been told that I could go to any extent in using the Defense League, I was permitted to use every store and business house in the city, and in the gratis notices the newspapers were demanding that everyone must see this picture, as it was their patriotic duty.

"It suffices to state that through this exploitation this production broke all house records, and was the most profitable engagement that I have ever had.

"But better still, the Fourth Liberty Loan in this city went OVER its quota in less than two days USING THE VOLUNTARY SYSTEM, and I KNOW that this picture was the means of assisting to a great extent.

"And out of all this it developed that the Defense League feel that they owe me a debt of gratitude, while in reality they have done me as great a service."

What the Liberty Theatres Are Doing

By Edward L. Hyman
Director Picture Division, War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities

To anyone who is downhearted on account of the closing of his theatre temporarily, there is inspiration in this article by Mr. Hyman on the effect of motion pictures on the soldier boys. This is good matter to get into your newspapers, good matter to aid you in winning motion picture co-operation from that paper. Show it to your editor and tell your patrons about it.

THE Americans were coming—a long, winding column of khaki-clad huskies. As they went swinging by on their way to Chateau Thierry they were singing. The moon was very bright. The pavé road stretched ahead, a ribbon of quicksilver losing itself under the shadowy elms. In column fours, company after company of these bronze-faced, bare-throated, singing soldiers swept past, most of them walking bareheaded in the moonlight, their tin derbies swinging on their arms, their stride jaunty and defiant. To Chateau Thierry they were going and to glory, and the song they were singing was "The Long, Long Trail."

Picture for yourself these lads thousands of miles from home, going up into the hell of those shell-swept areas. No depressed spirits there, no outward signs of the weariness of the long march and no thoughts of the deadly work ahead—just a splendid feeling of unity, of comradeship, of courage, imparted by the subtle magic of their singing.

Such is the esprit de corps of the American Army; they are the finest, cleanest set of fighting men in the world.

And to help raise them to this high standard, to keep them so and to bring them home again as fine and as clean as when they left—this is the work of the Commissions on Training Camp Activities.

Work of the Commission

These Commissions represent the Government. Their task of cultivating and protecting the mental, moral and physical manhood of the soldier and sailor was not inspired by sentiment or Utopian fallacies, but is a practical move in the direction of an improved individual, a better race of people, a more efficient nation.

The fact that contented recruits afford the best material for rapid, intense development into an efficient army was one of the reasons which prompted the War Department Commission to build their string of Liberty theatres, and in each of forty of the great cantonments today there is a fully equipped "Soldiers' Showshop," with seating capacities of from 1,200 to 3,000, constructed on the most modern lines of utility and safety.

The theatre idea was offered as a counterpoise for the monotony of camp life. Men get tired of drill, tired of doing the same thing in barracks, tired of lessons. To break up this monotony, to provide wholesome amusement and to directly help to make better soldiers and better fighters, is the message of the Liberty theatre.

The contrasting activities of the Liberty theatre now help to keep the soldier fit for the fighting life because they replace that gap made in his civilian existence and formerly filled with his social functions, theatres, music and the other interests with which he kept himself in trim to enjoy his daily work.

A large percentage of immorality in former armies came from lonesomeness and lack of wholesome recreation. Today a man does not have to leave the confines of the camp to secure the recreation he craves in the form of "something doing." Thus the Liberty theatre seeks to directly counteract the undesirable attractions of the nearby city and to provide a place where clean amusement and relaxation go hand in hand.

Diversified Entertainment

The form of entertainment offered by the Liberty theatres is probably more diversified than that of any other show house in the world. Pictures, yes; late releases of a character which is known to appeal to active men. Clean stories chuck full of action, feats of nerve, daring and strength, plenty of galloping horse and rescue stuff. Comedy, too, lots of it, with now and then a heart-throb tale of the kind that will make them forget where they are.

Vaudeville acts from the various big circuits are always popular at the camps, and such stars as Nora Bayes, Stella Mayhew and Harry Lauder have done and are doing their bit in this manner. Musical artists also score heavily, and with such celebrities as Melba and Maud Powell offering their services the highest character of this form of entertainment is assured the khaki circuits.

Large musical comedy and dramatic productions, such as are billed in incandescents on the great "White Way," have been produced and are touring under the auspices of the Commission.

But the range of the Liberty theatre's

Your Idea and Ours

IF the man who wrote the advertisement for the Grand theatre, the new million dollar theatre in Pittsburg, knew anything about the character of the Wm. S. Hart production, "The Border Wireless," he carefully kept evidence of the fact out of his display.

Now this is a production so far different from anything else in which Hart has been seen that this was the point to be brought out, not merely saying "different," but by telling why. In the first place the dominant thing is that it should have been told that in this picture Hart is seen in the role of an American soldier, enlisting after he frustrates the Huns and wrecks their wireless plant. Yet the writer of the display says: "Quick witted, two fisted and romantic. . . . In a vigorous story." On the top of this he uses one of the old "gun" cuts. The selling point of this picture has been deliberately passed by and the public has been given to understand that it is one of the usual sort of Hart stories—which it is not.

The designer must think that Hart sells himself in no matter what production he appears, and then proceeded to handicap Hart in doing just that.

Some managers still insist on being kaisers to their patrons.

OUT of all the good advertising that has been brought out by the second Charlie Chaplin picture, "Shoulder Arms," we think that of Shea's Hippodrome is right at the top considering the fact that Harold B. Franklin got a most effective display and used only five inches across three columns. As you know he used the light drawn effect in all of his displays so as to get the contrast with the advertising of the other Buffalo theatres. This is essential because the newspapers of that city insist on massing together all the advertising of motion picture, legitimate and vaudeville houses and Mr. Franklin aims to keep his advertising distinctive.

Here he has used in Ben Day effect small figures of Chaplin doing various things in the war with one large figure of the comedian. It stands out like a house afire.

And we want to call your attention to the fact that he does not say "Grand Double Bill." He features one picture the right plan.

Let Confidence be your advance guard and you'll find a big army of Success backing you up.

THERE could have been one improvement in this half-page display of Loew's Hippodrome, Baltimore, and that would have been to give more white relief to the face of General Pershing and the figures of the marching men. Yet the partial circle accomplished that to some extent.

The designer of the display was eminently right in playing up the name of the American commander above the title of the production. He is the one in whom the country is interested. By the time that the display was used everybody was convinced that it was assured that America has already won, but there is still that same strong desire to see pictured the life story of General Pershing. And so the display states simply what the picture is and then says no more.

We are also mighty glad to see that the Hippodrome did not try to play the vaudeville up strong. To have done so would have interfered with the appeal on the Pershing picture. It was the one big thing to put over and it was well done. The display dominated the entire amusement section of the newspapers.

Marry Progress and Personality in your theatre.

THIS display occupied two full columns in the Dallas, Texas, newspapers. For the reason that if it had been reproduced in full the cut would have been longer than the page of the Motion Picture News, we have chopped about half of the

How It Happened That No One Caught the "Flu" at Hulsey Theaters

¶ A germ never did and never can live in the Old Mill or Queen or Hippodrome Theaters. Why? Easy. These showcases ventilated—not by any fancy method, but by "the open window" process. That's nature's own way of sanitation and prevention. You can't beat it. Doctors will tell you the same thing.

¶ What do we mean by "the open window" way? We mean the old fashioned way, the same as you may do in your bedroom at night for proper ventilation. You lower the top sash of your window and raise the lower sash. Nature does the rest. There is a circle of fresh air to breathe and "used air" is drawn thru the top sash.

¶ We believe that beginning next week or very soon that things will be much happier for us. Possibly being separated a while will make us appreciate each other more. It's going to be splendid to see the "Great White Way" on Elm street ablaze with the glare of a million lights and to take part in the lure of the crowds and the hum of merry voices, and when we can again see Charlie and Mary and Doug and all the rest thru the greatest medium of fun and amusement on earth—THE SCREEN.

When our good friend Mayor Lawther says "Open Sesame" it will be a sure-enough "Sesame," and we'll all be kids together again. Eh, what!

reading matter out of the center of the display. This portion is devoted to the ventilation, the conduct of the house, the methods of keeping it clean, etc. It is good business talk.

The attention of the reader was caught immediately with the caption, "How it happened that no one caught the 'flu' at Hulsey theatres," and there is a splendid line at the bottom which says, "At Hulsey's Health Resorts" and then gives the name of the three theatres in Dallas. This is the work of Herschel Stuart, general manager of the E. H. Hulsey interests.

Unconditional surrender—to Enterprise

THIS eleven-inch, three-column advertisement of the Dayton theatre, Dayton, O., is important because it teaches a lesson on the advertising of war pictures. Just because the armistice has been signed it doesn't mean that all of these war pictures are dead by a whole lot, but it does mean that you have to use your head in arranging the displays. Those managers who go ahead and exploit them as if hostilities were still in progress are not going to get the full results.

Now note the way that "America's

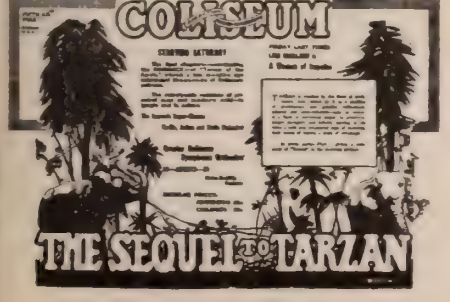
It was right up to the minute with the latest developments and has the Hun begging for peace and then it goes ahead to tell you that this picture shows why America's answer to the Hun plea is unconditional surrender. Would you want anything more up to the dot than this, and don't you think that such statements will appeal to the fullest number of possible patrons? We are sure of it.

The display is hand drawn with the face of Alla Axiom brought in at the bottom, yet the fighting theme is still helped dominant with the silhouetted figures.

You won't have to make peace with your patrons if you make yourself as one of them.

IT is becoming quite a habit in Seattle to alter the titles of pictures. We have recently recorded several such examples. This time "The Romance of Tarzan" has been advertised as "The Sequel to Tarzan" and we don't know but what this is a good way to advertise this picture, provided the theatre figures that the original Tarzan pictures scored such a big success that it will be satisfied if it gets into the house all of those who saw the first picture.



Yet when G. F. Fullerton wrote this display he evidently wasn't sure that this was sufficient appeal so he added a box telling just what this picture shows and adding that there is an additional reel giving a summary of the events in the previous picture. We believe that bigger patronage would have resulted if the picture had been advertised on its selling argument, and then there had been introduced quite incidentally the fact that this was a sequel to the other picture. Just at present it is a little too much of an invitation to only those who saw the first picture.

But, as we have observed, we are not sure in these conclusions for the original Tarzan picture did such big business that the Coliseum was satisfied that it could not handle more than viewed the first one. In that case, it was the proper style of publicity.

Now let's plan a little of the strategy that is going to bring the victory to your theatre.

YOU can make up your mind that when one of your displays is confusing at the first glance of the eye it is bad advertising. Advertising is like some humans—the first impression that we got of the other fellow somehow seems to stick.

Our first impression was that this is a triple bill and that the manager of the Griswold theatre, Albany, N. Y., is trying to put over the impression that he is offering a whole lot for the money. Of course a second glance shows us the date, but the advertisement never should have been arranged so that there would be the slightest doubt about the offering that he has to sell first. We realize that in some cities the manager believes that his Sunday show will sell itself, and in some cities that may be true, but in such a case the Griswold should have gone ahead to sell the Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday show instead of balancing it off nicely with that for the latter half of the week. We repeat about advertising two or more pictures equally—it can't be done.

VISALIA THEATRE, Visalia, Cal., shows a desire to do liberal advertising and with the help of the printer it would get much further. For instance, the half-page display on "The Great Love" has just about as messy an effect as could be given it. In the first place there is a multitude of rules and the typing practically all in lower case is bad. And whoever conceived the idea of putting part of the cast at either side of the title must be a follower of the "beautifully balanced" effect theory. It is well written, practically all taken from the Artcraft plan book.

Now if the theatre had used its name plate—it shows it has one at the left—and then the date and had gone ahead to say that Griffiths presents this picture and that it is a story of the regeneration of women by the war and had followed this with the excellent selling talks that he used, had then thrown in a prominent line saying it had practically the same cast as "Birth of a Nation" and finally had followed with the cast he would have had a straight away reading ad and would have avoided the mince pie effect.

The Visalia seems to be making a strong effort to pull them in every day of the week. The manager realizes the value of arousing curiosity sometimes and when he tells the public "If you do not know what we are fighting for, come to this theatre October 17 and 18." The house gets liberal reading notices and we had almost expected to find a reading notice that would "give away" the surprise, but we are glad to say it wasn't there.

ONCE MORE

LET us again ask you not to mark your advertising copy that you send us for reproduction. If you insist on disfiguring it you might as well save postage, as it cannot be used in that state.

Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

SUNDAY every one was just recovered from the celebration that set New York on fire on Thursday, even though it was a false one, and we were busy buying all the extras to be sure to be on the job when the Huns really did give in. Of course, every one knew that it was coming during the week and probably there are some exhibitors who would have hesitated to put on a war picture during that time.

But that is just what Mr. Rothapfel did and Sunday night at the Rivoli they were packed out on the sidewalk—and Monday, when the celebration of all celebrations happened you could not get near the place. And since the citizenry have recovered again they are going back at it the same way. And do they tear the house down with the showing of the war pictures in the news weeklies? You're right.

Now you will note, when it comes to it, that there is quite a little martial music in it, and that at the very end, but the use of "My Old Kentucky Home" as the theme keeps one stirred every minute. Both of the vocal numbers have a bearing on the picture and the war review as you will see. We haven't the slightest doubt that the same pictures on this program without the music would have fallen flat, but the result was one of the most enjoyable of presentations.

Tschaikowsky's "Solonelle," better known as "1812" is the overture. It is a brilliant co-operation written to celebrate the dedication of the Cathedral of Christ the Redeemer in Moscow to commemorate the defeat of Napoleon and the "Marseillaise" is counterpointed in it a number of times. With the times such as they are one may imagine the applause that it gets. Some how one settles in his seat, convinced that we are going to have a regular victory celebrating evening.

"Bird Studies," released by Educational, is the interesting scenic picture and it got a bunch of applause at the end when we saw it. There are some remarkable close-up views of these wild birds that must have tried the cameraman's patience to get. Drigo's "Serenade" is the music used throughout.

Then comes Miss Gladys Rice singing one of the old favorites, "Then You'll Remember Me." Mr. Rothapfel has been making it a practice for several weeks to revive these old favorites and it makes a great hit with the audiences. Miss Rice sings these unusually well and the audiences are always delighted with them. Now lots of managers think that to run a high-class house they have to have a bunch of Italian or French or Spanish songs, and we get them at the Rialto and the Rivoli at times. The audiences applaud, but you know that there are a lot of people who don't like grand opera and who go because they think that it is the proper thing to do, and they applaud most heartily because they think that they will be considered ignorant if they don't show their appreciation.

All of which is said because we have noted that at the Rialto and Rivoli these old time songs in English seem to us to get the real genuine sort of applause, the sort that springs from the heart and means something.

For this number the setting is simple, but effective. With the dome and proscenium arch in red and the side in purple the curtains part, with the singer standing before the red back curtain, near the left of the stage and just in front of three evergreens.

Then comes the Animated. For the first time Mr. Rothapfel is using some of exactly the same pictures at the two houses. At the Rivoli the Animated opens with Gaumont's pictures of the graduating classes at West Point, just as opens the Rialto. "No Victory" is the music used and with the views of the marching men the audience start on their way to patriotic explosiveness. Then follow Screen Telegram pictures of motor trucks taking supplies to the firing line and here we have "Keep the Home Fires Burning," this continuing through Screen Telegram pictures of allied women at the War Congress in Paris and Gaumont's pictures of women nurses at Chauteau Thierry writing letters for wounded American soldiers.

This leads in to the Official War Review No. 21 and when the general title is flashed on the screen the audience breaks into pandemonium again, for it is "Under the masterly leadership of General Foch." The first views are of our boys moving the artillery up through the ruins of French villages and then we are shown with the harvest of prisoners they meet coming back from the front. "Pomp and Circumstance" march up to Letter E is used here and the majestic music of it adds a lot to the general effect.

Then we are shown our doughboys caring for the people of the French villages they capture, feeding them from their stores, and "Pack Up Your Troubles" sets us all humming, while we choke down a few tears. Next are pictures of British officers studying in the field miniature reproductions of a German stronghold they are about to attack and here "Sons of Britain" is used. Then we have pictures of the Italians battling against nature as well as the Austrians and bringing up their cannon. We all knew by this time that Austria had deserted her old pal, the Kaiser, and therefore the applause of this was all the more accentuated. "Sicilian Vespers" is played up to the time we have Italian soldiers and sailors forming a human Italian flag and swaying back and forth to give the effect of the waving emblem. "March Royal" is used for this smashing finish.

Then the lights of the theatre all become blue, with the orchestra bathed in blue, and after a few bars the curtains part. Greek Evans in Arab costume is seated, behind him a half opening with the distant new moon and the stars in the blue sky, another one of John Wenger's artistic effects. After a few lines of "A Son of the Desert Am I," another favorite, he rises and completes the song.

"A Romance of the Air" is the feature, with Lieut. Bert Hall, an American of the Lafayette Escadrille, in the principal role. "Les Enfants de France" is played for the opening and then for the appearance of Hall, who, a title tells us, is a Kentucky gentleman, we get "My Old Kentucky Home." This is brought back a number of times for the love scenes, and we would call it really the theme of the picture, though the music score tells us that the theme is "Dawn Skies." At any rate the way that the old Southern song is used leaves the impression on the audience that few others would leave. "Madelon," "Meditation," "La Vosgienne," "Caressing Butterfly," Gruenfeldt's "Romance" and "Love's Lament" are also used.

"Robespierre" is the first of the patriotic music to be used and this comes when the officer and the two women reach France. When we are shown the French colonel preparing for an attack "March Militaire, St. Saens," is played and after we have "Kentucky Home" again the march is repeated. When we are told that the eve of the great offensive is here we have "Sambre et Meuse," "Battle Cry of Freedom," introduced during the defense of Hall before the court martial and finally at the end of the production with the wedding ceremony on the day that America entered the world war to bring victory to the earth.

Now just as the last scenes are on the screen Lieut. Hall, in French aviation uniform, comes out on the side of the stage. The house is dark and he cannot be seen, but when the picture ends and the white lights flare up the audience makes itself heard. Sunday night the ovation lasted five minutes. He scored a hit with his speech.

ALL SAME PROGRAM

Rothapfel to Use Same Pictures and Same Music at Both Theatres

IT may be taking the edge off of next week's account of Seeing the Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel, but we can't help calling attention to the fact that he is using the same feature, the latest of the pictures of the Committee on Public Information, "Under Four Flags," at both the Rialto and the Rivoli next week.

Not only is he doing this, but the overtures at the two houses will be the same—"The American Festival March," composed by Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld. The musical setting for the two pictures will be the same. During the showing of the picture the Rialto quartette will sing "Rose of No Man's Land" at the Rivoli and Greek Evans will sing the same song at the Rialto.

Fatty Arbuckle in "The Sheriff" will be the comedy at both houses.

We'll tell you about the experiment next week.

appear the orchestra plays selections from "The Chocolate Soldier" and then follows the very funny Fox Sunshine comedy, "Mongrels."

The symphonic poem from "Vysehrad" is the brilliant overture. For the first time we have seen it there are two harps in the orchestra for this number and it starts with a duet, with the flutes and then the other reed instruments coming. Then to mark the passing of the glory that Lumir, the singer sees, the lights go down to a roll of drums.

There is a peculiar arrangement here for the overture runs directly into the scenic that follows and there is not a moment given for the great applause that the rendition deserves. "Sumatra" is the subject of the Post-Pathe travel picture. "A Song of India" is the first selection and with it the girl next to me began to sing. "Love Song Oriental," "Samboula" and "Orientales" are the other selections.

With the lights all in red and Miss Helena Morrill dressed in a gown of the same color she sings "Kiss Me" from "Mlle. Modiste." There are a few bars from the orchestra and the lights die down with the start of the song itself. It is an effective arrangement of the lighting because it serves to center more than even all the attention on the singer. The Byzantine setting is used here.

Gaumont pictures of the West Point boys, with the music "To Victory" opens the Animated. Then comes Screen Telegram pictures of the marching replacement troops at Camp Gordon and the music changes to "Oh, How I Hate to Get Up in the Morning." Then the scene transfers to Washington and Gaumont shows us the United War Work drive opening with Mme. Schuman-Heink singing on the steps of the capitol. "Keep the Home Fires Burning" is the music. "When Yankee Doodle Learns to Parley Vous" is used for Screen Telegram pictures of teaching French to American officers. With Gaumont pictures of American aero officers we have "Over There." This continues through Gaumont flashes of Thaw, the American aviator, Mrs. T. R. Roosevelt, Jr., at the Paris Woman's Conference and pictures of the honor to Gen. Garibaldi. With pictures of American wounded seeing the sights of Paris we get "Hands Across the Sea," continuing through views of General Joffre at a celebration. Then we have a series of short Screen Telegram views in France and as the soldiers are shown sorting the junk we have "Columbia March," which continues up to Gaumont pictures showing the chief characters at the Versailles armistice conference.

The audience goes wild during these pictures. First we have Poincaire and Clemenceau, then Lloyd George and Lord Reading and a host of other noted men, and they all get a wild welcome to the screen, but when General Pershing appears on the screen it is sure enough all off and you can't hear "Allied March" which the orchestra is playing with all its power. And it is equaled with the title, "Wilson says to Germany, 'See General Foch.'"

We were surprised that the Animated didn't end there, but it didn't, for there followed Hearst-Pathe pictures of women voting for the first time in New York to the "Good Luck, U. S. A.," and then we have ing a lodging house, and first we get "On-pictures of the Queen county chapter build-ward, Christian Soldiers," and then as we have some speed stuff with the camera, "Step With Pep" is used, returning to "Onward, Christian Soldiers," at the end. But this is thrown in here to get the connection with the United War Work drive and to leave the impress on the audience and to get a laugh at the same time.

Vincente Ballester follows, singing the aria from "Hamlet." and then we have the feature, Mary Boland in "A Woman's Experience." There is no theme used for this, but you can get an idea of the music when you are told that "The Valley of Poppies," "Symphonette," "Told at Twilight," Nevin's "Love Song" and "Sicilian Vespers" are among the selections.

During the playing of the second orchestral number a novel effect is obtained. The main lights become pink, with green on the orchestra and red in the center dome, and after a few bars the curtains part and the Byzantine setting is shown.

Harold Lloyd in "Take a Chance" is the comedy. It is largely chase stuff and the audience seemed to get fun out of it. "The Porcupine Patrol" and "Here's to Our Boys" are the selections used.

Detroit Theatre Uses Spoken Prologue with Picture

How a knowledge of the drama and particularly personal experiences with the stage assist in the presentation of pictures, is illustrated by Charles J. Nevison, house manager of the Del-The theatre in Detroit. Mr. Nevison is constantly staging special scenes of dramatic worth in order to gain the approval of the patrons.

When he put on "To Hell with the Kaiser" for a three day run a week ago, he made a special stage setting and introduced a spoken prologue. The characters were Satan and the Kaiser. Satan was accompanied by a group of small devils, part of the setting showing a burning pit. The Kaiser begged Satan for mercy, but each of his requests were refused, Satan declaring that his sins were so great he wasn't even worthy of finding a place in hell.

To make Satan's statements more forcible a vision of a martyred Belgian woman and babe was shown at the right of the stage.

For "Uncle Tom's Cabin" Mr. Nevison put in a minstrel first part introducing colored buck and wing dancers on a Mississippi levee.

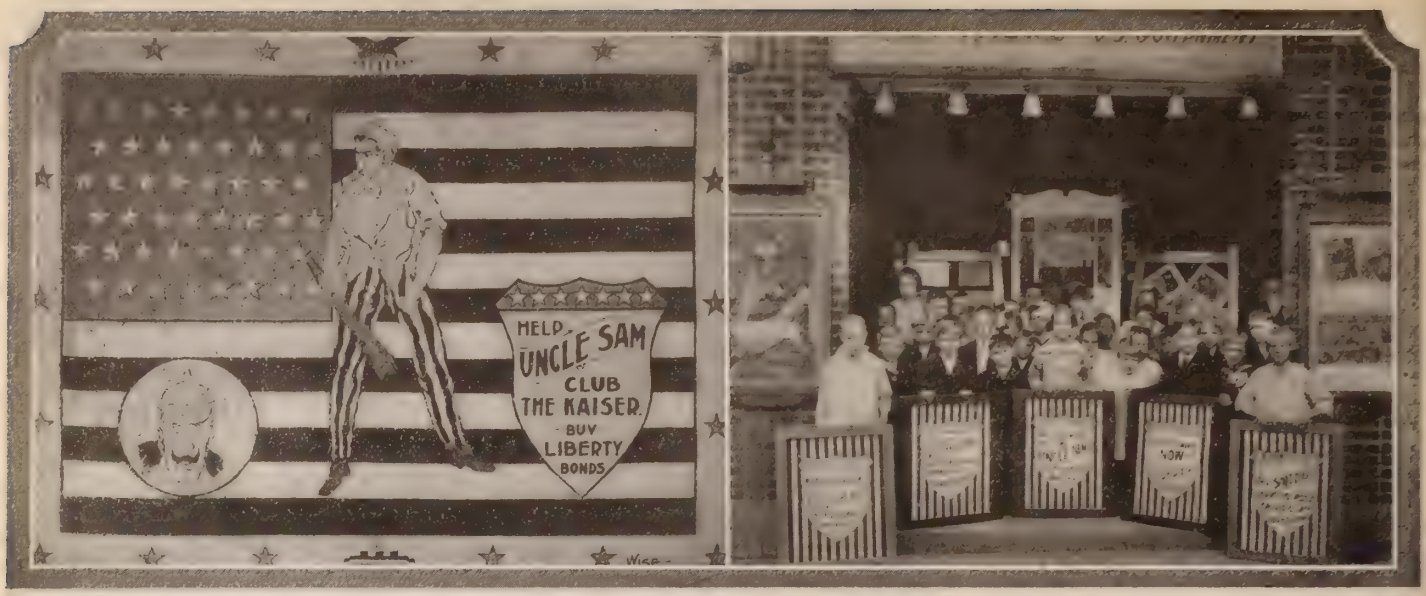
RAISED HIS PRICES

That's a Result of the Influenza in Orange, N. J.

MANAGER D. J. SHEPHERD of the Palace theatre, Orange, N. J., raised his prices when he reopened after a long shutdown due to the influenza epidemic. Formerly his prices every day except Friday and Saturday were fifteen cents, with the top prices for Friday and Saturday evenings twenty-five cents. With the reopening matinees became twenty cents and the evenings thirty.

Mr. Shepherd believes that this is the time for managers through the country to raise prices so that a fair profit can be made if they at the same time give the people the proper bills. He is opposed to double features and cut rate prices and believes that after the people have been without the pictures for several weeks this is the time to make the necessary increase.

Which seems to be good logic.



At left, Liberty Loan stage display at the Morgan theatre, Auburn, N. Y., and at right the orphans he entertained at the start of the drive

Auburn Theatre Manager Proves Smaller Theatres Can Get Results With Simple Things

MORGAN THEATRE, Auburn, N. Y., is one of the smaller city theatres that stands out among the houses that are doing things. Located in a city with a census population of 34,178, this theatre decided that it had its part to do in putting over the Liberty Loan. The only trouble was that the "flu" came along and stopped the good work just as it was good and started. But it shows that Manager Ross A. McVoy had the right idea and that things can be done in one of the smaller cities if the manager really tries.

A striking stage drop was used in connection with the Loan drive. Mr. McVoy is fortunate in having in Edward J. Wise not only one of the best operators that can be found anywhere, but a man with an artist's and a designer's touch. The basis of the display was an American flag, and with this were used one of the cut-outs from a poster on "The Yellow Dog," while the circular picture immediately under the field of stars waas taken from the displays on "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin." In keeping with the figure of Uncle Sam was a shield bearing the slogan, "Help Uncle Sam Club the Kaiser. Buy Liberty Bonds."

On the day that the drive started Mr. McVoy entertained the inmates of the local orphans' home at the matinee. The various placards were prepared by the management of the house and after the matinee they were displayed in the lobby over the heads of the people entering.

When Mr. McVoy took charge of the Morgan it was the same house that it is today, but it might be best described as "bare." The pictures were simply thrown on the screen and that was all there was to it. But Mr. McVoy decided that atmosphere was needed, and one of the means that he used to introduce this was through the music. He engaged Mrs. Cora A. Robinson, an artist in interpretation, and now at the opening of each performance there is an organ solo of a patriotic nature, and as the selection comes to an end the curtain is lowered, the lights dimmed and then the picture starts. At the end of each performance there is a lively exit march, with the curtain dropped again and the lights on in full. And this organ music is in contrast with the situation at the Morgan before Mr. McVoy took charge. At that time there was a piano, and the player played without any idea of the action of the picture. Now the pictures are really played, and the result has been a wonderful increase in the volume of business. Says Mr. McVoy:

"But with very little exception every action is caught, and, while no sudden change is ever noticeable, yet the cues are worked out so that the music is half our show, yet it is a 'one man's band.' We cannot as yet support an orchestra, so we believe in giving the best that we have."

But he should have gone further and said that he is a manager that is doing real things with the best that he has—that he is thinking about not only the presentation of his pictures, but about the things that enter into the routine and into the national life of the people. He is getting a lot out of things that he is doing.

Uses Closed Period for Improving Theatre

H. C. Young, who owns the Cotter theatre, Pittsfield, Mass., does not believe in letting temporary troubles interfere with the operation of his theatre. On the contrary, he uses these to better his theatre for the future. During the period that his house has been closed he has redecorated, added a new machine and made many other changes that are calculated to please his patrons.

Mr. Young was making great preparations for putting on "America's Answer" for an entire week, but the closing order went into effect just two days before the engagement was to start.

TWO MORE MEMBERS

Both Small and Middle Class Cities Added to Advisory Board

THIS week announcement is made of two new members of the Advisory Board, one representing cities of the middle class and the other the smaller group. Some time ago we promised you that the smaller cities should be represented well on the board and we believe that we have kept our word.

Sid Laurence is manager of the Majestic Gardens, Grand Rapids, Mich., a city of 123,227. Mr. Laurence is always doing things at his house and accounts of a number of them have appeared.

H. L. Percy, one of the owners of the Rialto theatre, Medford, Ore., a city of 12,400 is the other member. With his partner, A. J. Moran, Mr. Percy has made the Rialto one of the successes of the Pacific Coast section, and that is saying a great deal.

Ticket Booths in "Tanks" Novelty in Montreal

Manager Harry Pomeroy, of the Holman theatre, Montreal, put on a smashing lobby display with "Crashing Through to Berlin." In front of the house he reproduced the forward portion of two tanks and then used cut-outs of charging soldiers and a collection of war trophies. The two ticket booths were placed in the tanks. So much attention was attracted to this display that Mr. Pomeroy sold the entire display to another local house that had the second run of the same picture.

"How" of Costume Advertising

At Zero Hour with McCormick

By S. Barret McCormick

Managing Director, Circle Theatre, Indianapolis

This is the second of the series of articles with McCormick "at the zero hour"—the hour that he is waiting to go over the top with his attraction to victory or defeat.

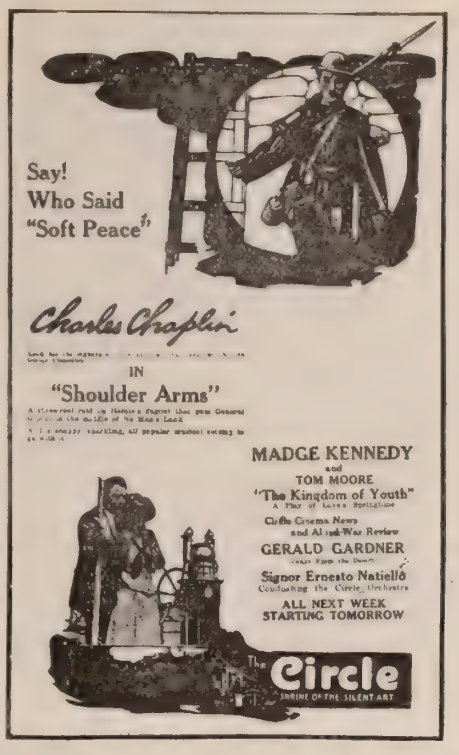
The next of this series will show the methods that Mr. McCormick uses in analyzing sales features of pictures and processes in the production of Circle theatre advertising.

"BACK in our newspaper days," said the advertising man of the Mastodon as he resurrected a corncob pipe and lit it to provide the proper local color to his zero hour seance, "we used to hear a lot about the follow with a nose for news. He could smell a story clear across the town and find the very element that old 'Pro Bono Publico' and 'Steady Subscriber' wanted to hear about.

"Funny that we never heard about him in advertising work. But he's there just the same. Perhaps he's masquerading under the title of 'sales analysist' or 'merchandising expert,' and drawing pay in proportion to his title, but 'way down deep he's just a good old reporter, a 'legger' with 'a nose for news who can scent news value' in a commodity and make us want to read about it just as though it were a franchise scandal or an affair on Capitol Hill."

Everything in the world is "news." Some of it is worth a seven-column head and some only gets a stick. The difference lies in what appeal it has to the great common human instinct of mortal man. The difference between the successful and unsuccessful advertising man is usually a clothespin over the olfactory organ, created by a generous nature and intended for news gathering.

McCormick got "Shoulder Arms" during "peace week," and he took advantage of the development of the news each day. This is the first one each day



On the second day there was talk against any "soft peace," and so this display was used

Costume Plays and Costume Advertising

There perhaps isn't an exhibitor in the country but who will rise in righteous indignation at the mention of a costume play, but "costume advertising," that copy which is as foreign to present-day appeal as are the plumes of eighteenth century drama, still flourishes in the sweet fields of amusement advertising, budding and blooming, but bearing no fruit.

The great dramatists of all time were the reporters of their time. The most successful of our modern playwrights are in reality "dramatic journalists," men who sense the dramatic element of our day and vivify it, whose hands are on the pulse of contemporaneous life and feel the beat of human blood as it surges, stirred by the emotions that arouse it to action.

It is this element that advertising must find in every commodity. It exploits, if it is to achieve its fullest power, "costume advertising."

If we may create such a name to apply to antiquated methods of publicity is simply the kind of advertising that fails to reach the buying heart because it possesses nothing in common with the mood of its readers. It offers no mental sensation and presents no news that is current with the emotions of its time.

Most frequently it is the stilted and stereotyped announcement, or the copy whose selling talk is drab and colorless, composed of threadbare phrases and meaningless description, that makes much amusement advertising ineffective.

It is but the skeleton of human interest, a thing stripped of the flesh and blood of human appeal.

The costume play fails to interest the average theatregoer because he is not attuned to its harmonies.

"Costume advertising" fails to attract because it strikes no responsive chord in the readers' hearts.

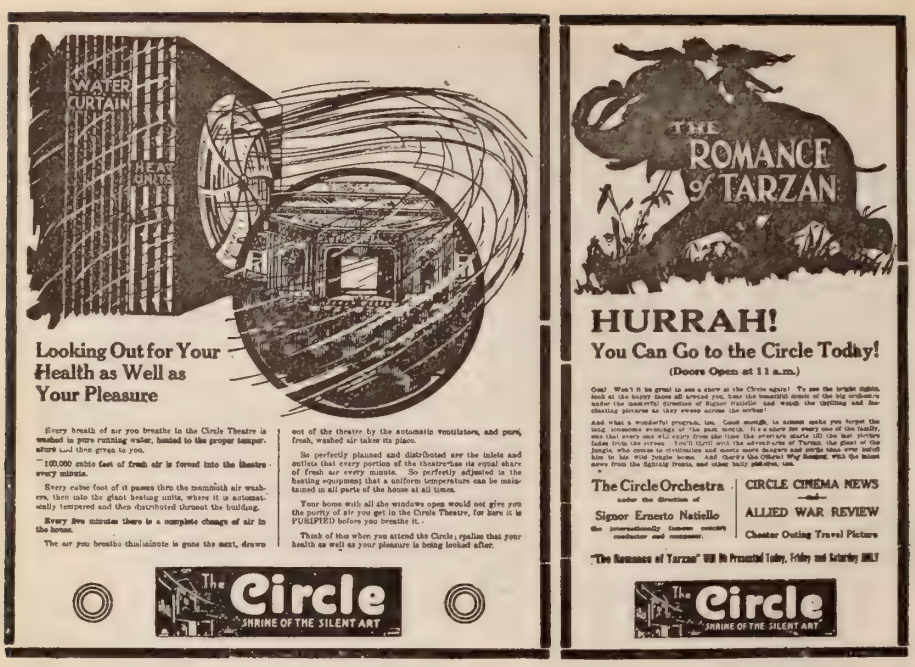
Its "news value" is nil, its sales arguments are not mooded to the spirit of the times.

Nearly every play contains some selling arguments that can be made to appeal to the current mood of the public, not necessarily parallel to the topic of the day, but sympathetic with the emotions that it must depend upon for sales results.

Obviously some plays lend themselves more than others to current news interest, as in the case of Charles Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms," which was presented at the Circle theatre during the week of armistice negotiation, and at the time of the premature peace report.

Had the picture been presented at another time a different approach to the public mood would have been necessary. As it was, the attraction's advertising capitalized an unusual news interest and itself became news which is as much as can be desired from any advertising.

On the third day, when it became evident the Germans were ready to quit, this one appeared



With his reopening announcement, McCormick took advantage of the chance to tell of the ventilation of the Circle. He used a half page in this fashion

Detroit Gets a Real Treat With McGee's Striking Presentation of "America's Answer" at Majestic

M. W. McGEE has outdone his previous efforts in the presentation of "America's Answer," the second official Government war picture and the Majestic theatre, in Detroit, has accordingly been literally besiged by thousands of Detroiters endeavoring to gain admittance. This at a time when the amusement business in the city was at its lowest ebb, due to the influenza epidemic.

The big effect that he has staged is, of course, a musical and military prelude. The scene is a spot in the ruins behind the lines. Three dug-outs are designated as Y. M. C. A., Salvation Army and Knights of Columbus. A large American flag takes the place of the curtain and shows it with soldiers marching on. They stop, get refreshments and sit or lounge around. Then they sing "Pack Up Your Troubles in Your Old Kit Bag." Joseph Ferte, one of the Majestic trio, follows by singing "I Can Always Find a Little Sunshine in the Y. M. C. A." An injured soldier, partly supported by a Red Cross nurse, and a soldier, come on and the injured man takes a seat while the nurse (Miss Hilda Barr) sings "I Love You More for Losing You Awhile."

Then the injured soldier sings "Break the News to Mother," and a male quartet joins in the chorus. The lights go down and a vision effect is produced in the sky where an old lady knits and then looks at and kisses a photograph. The old lady was secured by Mr. McGee and the picture was posed at the Ford Motor Co. studio.

Immediately at the close another drop falls representing the 24-sheet poster advertising the picture. Here the twenty performers line up and sing "Onward Christian Soldiers" and, just at the end, the stage is darkened, a screen lowered and the picture starts.

There are two more "punches" in the presentation. While the orchestra is playing Victor Herbert's "American Fantasia" the lights are dimmed and a spot light turned on a large American flag just over the proscenium arch. After the applause dies away the flag is lowered and a picture of President Wilson shown. Naturally the applause is deafening.

The other "punch" is in the opening reel of the feature. The picture shows a convoy of American ships and as they go plowing across the ocean the singers chant some marine airs.

Manager McGee has sought to keep the balance of his program away from events of a military nature. His travelogue shows the summer sports at Coney Island. There is a comedy cartoon and a topical review, with much of the war eliminated.

Coulson Proves Progress Pays in Neighborhood House

The difference that a live manager can make in a suburban moving picture theatre of average size has been shown in the case of the Coliseum theatre, which is a fairly old house in the Beach District of Toronto, Ontario. This theatre has been taken over by Mr. T. Coulson, formerly manager of the Photodrome and Globe theatres, in the downtown section.

A two-piece orchestra, piano and violin, replaced the mechanical piano, a new cashier was engaged and lady ushers were used for the first time. Lobby and window posters were no longer carelessly hung and orders were immediately issued for the placing of a little paint on the woodwork of the entrance and other portions of the house. A front store that had been unoccupied for many months was converted into an office for the manager, and the window space was used for large signs having transparent lettering. The light in the office at night now illuminates these signs, which are attractive and readable. They advertise coming attractions.

New Manager Re-established Confidence in Movies During Closed Time

ADAPTABILITY of newspaper men to the motion picture business has been proven a number of times, and there is another chance for that evidence to come forward with the appointment of Arthur E. Weld as manager of the Strand theatre, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

Readers of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS are familiar with the things that have been done at the Strand while it was under the management of Arthur G. Stolte, who resigned to become manager of one of the "Hearts of the World" touring companies. Doubtless they will soon become equally familiar with the efforts of Mr. Weld.

With the exception of two years as a salesman, Mr. Weld has been in the newspaper business since 1902, and during the whole of that time he has been making a study of motion pictures, so that he is well equipped for theatre management. He went to Cedar Rapids from the Los Angeles Express.

When Mr. Weld arrived in Cedar Rapids he found the theatres closed on account of the influenza and so he covered the city with flaming red tack cards to counteract any possible effect on the amusement patronage. The result was that public confidence was restored and the demand for the reopening of the theatres came much sooner than it would have under ordinary circumstances.

Patterson Finds Benefit From Shut Down

By W. C. Patterson
Manager Criterion Theatre, Atlanta

NOTE: This article was written before the Criterion reopened. You will hear later of Mr. Patterson's successes.

"IT'S an ill wind that blows nobody good" is admittedly an old and very trite saying, but it contains a world of homely truth. Managers of motion picture houses the country over doubtless felt they had been hit a staggering blow when they were ordered by the authorities to shut up shop in an effort to prevent the spread of influenza, but when you come right down to brass tacks the shut down will prove a blessing in disguise.

I am an optimist by faith and practice. Every problem necessarily challenges a man's thinking power. It sets his brain to work, and a man needs his brains in the picture business. It takes thought to produce a picture, and it takes brains to put it over after it reaches the exhibitor.

This shut-down has given everybody—producer and exhibitor—an opportunity to sit down and take a good, long think. The last year has been a strenuous one in the history of the motion picture industry. The producers have been working day and night putting out all sorts of pictures—short reelers, big features and serials; and everybody has been plunging along at break-neck speed trying to make the best of the situation.

We haven't had a chance to analyze things. Our noses have been too close to the grindstone. Each day has brought its own problems, large and small, to beset our waking hours and many have disturbed our nightly rest. Now we have had the opportunity thrust upon us to sit up and take notice of where we are headed.

An exhibitor whose time is taken up wholly with looking at pictures to find those he thinks best suited to his particular needs and who has the countless details of house management upon his shoulders, now is able to take stock, ascertain just what he has accomplished and, at the same time, look into the immediate future.

Of course, the shut-down means loss of money to all of us, but it also means a gain in countless ways. Here is a chance to find out if we are on the right track. Have we gotten the most out of our opportunities? Have we given our patrons the sort of entertainment to which they are entitled and for which they are willing to spend their money? Is our house merely four walls with a roof overhead, or is it a pleasant, comfortable place that is inviting; a real place of genuine entertainment?

These are questions that will bob up in the minds of the exhibitors who are far-sighted. The motion picture business is of mushroom growth, but it is an industry that is here to stay. The hold that the motion picture has upon the public at large can never be shaken loose.. It depends upon the producers and the exhibitors to make it bigger and greater than the most enthusiastic in the business can foresee.

W. C. Patterson

Personally, I am not very strong on blowing my own horn, but I do think that personal experience is of interest to the other fellow. The shut-down order in Atlanta caught me at the beginning of what I expected to be a very busy week. The injunction to close up shop came like a flash from the blue sky, and for a moment I felt that I was up against it. At one fell swoop all my plans had fallen like a house of cards.

Then I began to think. Here was just the opportunity for which I had been looking. For a long time we had been planning to give our house a good cleaning up. Of course, we had given it a thorough cleaning every day, doing all that could be done with soap and water, polish and elbow grease—but now was the chance to do the thing in a big way.

Decorators were called in for consultation. Paper hangers and painters were hired, and before the day was over we were on the road to make the house over. These workmen have been mighty busy since that shut-down order, and today our theatre is as spick and span as the day it was turned over to us by the contractor, with this difference: it is a better house, more comfortable and contains more of the little things that go to differentiate a mere film house from a motion picture theatre. We have installed improvements that we have found by experience will appeal to our patrons and make them feel that we have a personal interest in their comfort. We want them to feel that although they have paid to get into the place, they still are our guests and entitled to the best we can give them.

When our doors reopen to the public the old patrons will find a brand new house awaiting them. We believe thoroughly in the idea that a good picture must have a good setting—proper atmosphere created by pleasant surroundings and music, and this respite from the strum and stress of everyday detail has enabled us to plan this very thing.

Therefore, I say, the shut-down order has given us a chance to work up our efficiency—that is, systematize our efforts so they will accomplish the most in the way of promoting the interests of our house. It has enabled us to revive our "pep" and get right behind our promotion plans to the end that we will be able, when the time comes, to put a number of ideas that have been evolved into actual practice.

I think that if exhibitors and producers would look at the matter in this light great and lasting good will accrue from a situation which at first blush doubtless caused many persons in the industry to throw up their hands in despair. This is no time to "cry over spilled milk"; it is the time to build for the future, because the future of the motion picture business was never brighter and never offered such a flattering chance for brains, hard work and optimism to win and win in a big, permanent way.

DID YOU USE IT?

Newspapers Appreciate the Loss of Advertising Now

IN the October 26 issue we reproduced a full page from "Collier's Weekly" which told concisely but impressively the work that the motion picture is doing for the country today, and the necessity for it tomorrow. We told you that this was national recognition, and that if you were not getting the co-operation from your newspaper, you should call their attention to it and how it would help you.

The publicity manager of one of the big syndicates has already employed it, with the result that one of the leading newspapers has promised to co-operate fully in photoplay matters in the future.

We have urged you all along to work for newspaper co-operation — to neither cringe or threaten. But this happens to be a most propitious moment to call this to the attention of your newspapers. They have felt the absence of photoplay advertising. You don't have to call their attention to that fact.

But you should always avoid saying the obvious. Call their attention to this "Collier's" article. Your newspaper will get the "drift."

Have you read that article? If not, you had better reach up on the shelf and get the October 26 issue QUICK.

Dayton theatre band helps the crowds celebrate victory

Managers Get Publicity Out of Victory News; Dayton Theatre Makes Picture of the Crowds

FROM various sections of the country come reports of managers who took advantage of the announcement of peace to celebrate in their theatres and to bring the thousands of celebrants there. Most of these celebrations came with the false announcement of Thursday, but that it was untrue was no fault of the managers and they deserve credit for their readiness to take advantage of opportunity.

One of the notable instances of this was furnished by Mark Gates, manager of the Dayton theatre, Dayton, O. Almost as soon as the news was received from the local newspaper office Mr. Gates placed his big orchestra on the sidewalk in front of the house and led the celebration with a series of patriotic airs.

Residents of Dayton who were thronging the streets proceeded to gather in front of the theatre until a crowd of some 5,000 had congregated, when, at the suggestion of Manager Gates, a parade was formed which soon developed into one of the biggest in the city's history. Taking advantage of the situation thus developed Mr. Gates directed a local concern, The Pyramid Film Co., to make a moving picture of the crowds in front of the theatre and the parade as it passed the house.

This was done Thursday, Nov. 7, at 3:15 p. m., and under the hurry up direction of Manager Gates the picture was rushed through in time to be shown on the screen of the Dayton theatre at exactly nine o'clock the same evening and was received with wild enthusiasm.

The fact that the announcement of the signing of the armistice was premature did not in the least detract from the value of the action and Mark Gates is to be congratulated as having in all probability shown the very first motion picture made in the United States of the gigantic celebration in recognition of the cessation of hostilities.

Manager Sid Laurence, of the Majestic Gardens, Grand Rapids, Mich., put on a special prelude to his performance as the result of the peace announcement. First the orchestra played the "Star Spangled Banner," and then the curtain rose showing New York Harbor and the Statue of Liberty ablaze with light. A moment later a vessel was seen entering the harbor, and during this time Mr. Laurence sang "Homeward Bound." There are not many managers who can jump into the show and sing a selection, but Mr. Laurence was a member for years of the famous "Variety Newsboys Trio."

Both the Strand and the Rivoli theatres, New York, brought their orchestras to the sidewalks and celebrated the victory.

Closing Order Fails to Halt Picture's Exploitation

Since the closing order went into effect in Portland, Ore., all 24 sheets posted for "Crashing Through to Berlin" have been sniped with a 4-sheet black type poster reading "Immediately upon re-opening, this picture will be shown at the Star theatre." Three thousand tickets had been sold for this picture before the closing order went into effect.

Window displays advertising the picture have been posted in several large stores. A band concert will be given every night in front of the theatre, and vaudeville acts will be given each night. Co-operating with Manager W. W. Kofeldt is the National League for Woman's Service, of which Mrs. Alice Benson Beach is city chairman.

Hyman Tells Work Done by Liberty Theatres

contribution toward winning the war is not confined entirely to the furnishing of a cheerful environment for the boys in camp or to the building of the morale of the army. It actually makes fighters of men who through ignorance of the true cause, through training or through their religious beliefs, have objected to doing their duty when called upon by the country which has fostered and protected them.

Converting Objectors

At one of the great southern cantonments a special morning performance of a certain patriotic picture was given to all of the conscientious objectors in camp. This picture presented a truly convincing argument of why the German autocracy must be crushed. At the conclusion of the performance six of the conscientious objectors signified their change of attitude and expressed their willingness to become fighting men. So great was the effect made upon this slacker audience that within the day the number was increased to fifteen converts to the greatest cause that man has ever fought for. How much more effective is this method than the gravel pit or the thirty-year sentence.

The Liberty theatre, in many cantonments, also becomes the school for the soldier whose educational qualifications are lacking, and at such hours as their military duties permit one may see the wistful features of the Slav, the snapping eyes of the Latin or the proud eagerness of the native of the "cracker" communities—Americans all—wrestling with the intricacies of the three R's and building, with the study of civics and citizenship, a firm foundation for the future.

Admission charges to Liberty theatres range from 10 to 25 cents ordinarily, with some of the larger and more pretentious attractions bringing a half dollar.

"Smileage" coupons are as good as cash at the door of the Liberty theatre, however, and there is no more welcome gift, from the folks back home to the boys in camp, than a Smileage book. Smileage coupons average well over fifty per cent of the day's receipts in most of the theatres. In some instances the commanding officer of the camp is entrusted with the distribution of Smileage books, which have been sent in by private interests or institutions which have taken this means of contributing their bit. In this way the Smileage book becomes an award of merit and provides an incentive towards soldierly and gentlemanly conduct

"Red Headed" Girls Admitted Free to "Empty Pockets"

Free seats for red-haired girls were offered by the Central theatre, St. Louis, as an advertising stunt on the showing of "Empty Pockets."

The offer was limited by Mr. Sweeney, the manager, to the performance given between ten in the morning and noon.

The idea was suggested to him by the action of the story, in which are five red-haired women, who become entangled in a murder mystery through their acquaintance with the slain man-about-town.

Special Service Section on

Priscilla Dean in "Kiss or Kill"

HERE you have a picture that will give you a chance to get out of the rut. And more power to you if you have been thinking during the season that influenza closed you down and you could not get the pictures that you want.

In "Kiss or Kill" you have the advantage of one of the most striking titles that has ever been selected. It, of itself, is going to make people ask questions about the production and hunt for the advertising and stories of the production in the newspapers.

And there is nothing of the "trick" title about it—one of the sort that leaves people wondering at the end of the presentation what the title has to do with the picture. The people will go away from your theatre thoroughly satisfied with that part, and in fact delighted with the entire picture.

YOU are familiar with the press matter issued on almost every picture that you have bought, telling you that such and such a picture is "different" and then have them turn out the same old story. But here is a picture that has distinct originality in its every element and you are safe in going strong on saying so.

Unless you do make this appear a "different" picture you are not going to get the most out of it. Don't pass it by with the label type of advertising, but if you are still unconvinced that original advertising pays you, you have a chance here to make the test with almost a certainty of the money coming back if you use any intelligence at all in your work.

You also have the opportunity of a star who is rapidly getting into the front rank of popularity in Priscilla Dean and all the advantages of featuring the picture of a pretty woman in your advertising. You have in her leading man, Herbert Rawlinson, who has a great following. The cast, while small is a strong one and includes Alfred Allen and Harry Carter.

IN the first place you should know something about the story of the picture, for a wonderfully appealing one it is. It opens in a cheap hall room with Henry Warner, who had come back from Europe where he had been wounded, giving his landlady another excuse about his failure to pay the rent and attempting to darn a hole in the seat of his trousers.

He is strictly up against it and when he sees a drunken man in the street with a wallet full of bills he is unable to resist the temptation to snatch it. But the police are quickly on his trail and in order to escape capture he rushes into a house. There he is face to face with the owner who meets him with a revolver. But this man, Middleton, can use just such a person as he presumes Warner to be and when the police comes in search they are turned away.

Faced with the alternative of being handed over to the police he agrees to do Middleton's bidding—to recover some papers that have been stolen from him by his nephew, Craig. Middleton's spy announces that Craig is at that moment calling on Miss Ruth Orton and there he goes to find his first clue. He enters the apartment through a window and there he finds the girl the girl of his dreams. First he sees Craig who is wealthy while she is in poverty, begging her to marry him. After the suitor has left Warner is discovered by the girl who confronts him with a revolver.

NOW one of the strong points about this picture is that you can never anticipate what will happen next. Just after he leaves Craig remembers that he has not kissed his promised bride and returns for the kiss. With her hand behind her holding the pistol pointed at Warner, it is a case of a kiss or discovery—a case of kiss or kill—and she permits the familiarity of a man she really loathes. Without going into detail, the love between the man she believes a burglar and the girl is mutual and he is able to persuade her to invite him to the wedding party so that he may gain access to Craig's safe.

The story is full of complications, but suffice it to say that he learns the girl returns his love and recovers the papers only to find that it is a will leaving a fortune to the girl. He turns it over to Middleton, when he is forced to do so by his thugs, but adroitly recovers it and he and the girl are happy in the end.

We repeat that one never knows what is going to happen until the scene itself is flashed on the screen. For suspense it has been equalled by few pictures, and for that reason we wouldn't try to reveal too much of the character of it in advance. You will leave a greater impression upon your patrons than if you had outlined the plot to them and thereby you will create a greater volume of the word of mouth advertising than otherwise.

THE mystery end of this picture is one of the strongest elements, but don't advertise it merely as a mystery picture. The public has been bunked on that so much that you are not going to get the whole possible patronage into your theatre on that. There's a lot of difference in leaving the elements on the picture up in the air and calling it a mystery production.

You ought to make this love element strong in all of your displays. It is really one of the most human and gripping love stories that has been produced in a long time, but in with that love story you have all sorts of action, something doing every minute. That is the element to play.

Now there is no doubt that the war has put a tingle into the blood and that the people want action in the pictures, they are sick of the old time "mushy love," but they want manliness with romance.

We would advise use of liberal space on this picture. As we have said the title is sufficient to attract all sorts of attention to your advertising, but you want to go a little further than this. Keep the element of crime entirely out of it and make it a love story of adventure and you will appeal to everyone in the family.

These are the things that you need to know before starting out to exploit the picture. If you can see it in advance, all the better, but at least from this talk get the spirit of the production before you start its exploitation and then go at it whole heartedly.

At left, scene between Rawlinson and the two crooks, and at the right the crook makes love to the supposedly poor girl. Center, Miss Dean in her "party frock"

Splendid Advertising Possibilities in This Picture

"KISS OR KILL" lends itself particularly well to a teaser campaign which you can conduct through your mailing list or by the use of slides in the theatre. The former is the more preferable as it gives no inkling that it is the title of a picture.

We would suggest the use of a small card bearing the title of the picture. Be sure that you quote the words so that no one might possibly get the idea that it is a threat. This should be mailed fully two weeks before the first announcement is made of the showing of the picture.

That is likely to start a wealth of discussion and it should be followed up a week later with another card bearing the legend: "Ruth Orton has to choose between kissing the man she loathed or a killing. See the answer in 'Kiss or Kill.'" If you wish you can add the name of the theatre with the date of the showing. That depends upon the character of your theatre and whether you are a regular advertiser so that your patrons generally expect to find your definite announcements in the newspaper.

LET us advise you against one thing right here: Do not use this stunt and then add the question: "Would you kiss or kill?" It has been our experience that where you ask a compromising question, certainly of a woman, it gives offense very often. There is no necessity of making it personal for it is just as effective without this element.

If you use the slide campaign, you naturally give it away that you are referring to a picture, and the best way to do it in this case would be to use a slide simply bearing the title, nothing more. Run this for several days in advance of any other announcement.

KEEP IT CLEAN

This Picture Should Be Put Over On Its Merit to Win

EXHIBITORS are warned against using anything suggestive in their advertising matter on "Kiss or Kill." It may drag a certain element into your theatre to use such lines, but we feel sure that it won't get the business that would come from straightforward exploitation even on the first day. And certainly it will interfere with great amount of word-of-mouth advertising that you would otherwise get.

Then keep the crime element down. It does start off with a theft, but you sympathize with the hero from the start, and the story becomes a beautiful love story, filled with adventure. Elsewhere we have suggested a number of lines for you to use. They do not exaggerate and they do not tell all, but they'll make the people want to come to your house to see what it's all about.

Further interest can be aroused along the teaser line by the liberal use of one of the one sheets illustrated in this section, by cutting the entire outer border if you eliminate the statement of the fact that this is a photoplay and have the outline of the girl with a pistol in her hand and the title of the picture, nothing more.

We believe that you ought to make every use you can of the pulling power of the title and while teaser campaigns are often suggested and little used, this is a picture that lends itself perfectly to that.

BUT this should be in addition to your newspaper advertising on which you can go the limit, Universal exchanges are supplying one and two column mats and advertisements for use in this picture, but if you can make your own designs all the better.

If you use half tones you can get most attractive results by using either of the pictures of Miss Dean which are printed in the advertising pages of this issue. There is nothing that attracts more attention to a display than a picture of a beautiful woman.

Single column ad supplied by Universal

At left, Ruth Orton finds true love with the supposed "burglar," and at the left she is comforted under the overcoat he leaves behind for her

Unless you are using very large space you will have to reduce the size of the picture of Miss Dean with her fan, and then it would be well to use it prominently in the upper left hand of the display having a light or Ben Day rule border breaking into it. The words of the title being short you can use them alongside of the advertisement, one under the other.

Don't let anything keep you from making the title of the picture the dominant thing in all of your advertising.

THE standing figure of the girl is particularly adapted for use as it stands in a three column display ten inches or more deep. If it is used as it stands it would naturally go on the right of the display, but it would be better for newspaper purposes to have the engraver reverse it and then use it on the left hand side with the reading matter on the right. At any rate have the girl facing your reading matter.

Now the picture of the girl star is essential in your advertising of this picture. Kisses have their fascination when they are associated with a pretty girl. That's a little psychology to remember.

If you are not able to have cuts made for yourself, you can get a most attractive single column out of Miss Dean, practically the same as that on the first of the advertising pages, and this should be used in your display.

There are probably some exhibitors who figure that Herbert Rawlinson is a stronger drawing card in their community than the star, but in any case do not use any picture that does not at least contain that of the girl.

THERE is a wealth of advertising punches to the story.

First make it plain to everyone that this is a happy picture of an unusual adventure, that it is the sort of a mystery story that everyone will like. Keep as far away from the crime element as possible. When you use the word burglar, quote it.

Right from the start of the picture the audience will understand the motive of the hero. While the law does not excuse a person who steals because he is starving, general sentiment does and the sympathy is with him from the start.

Refer to it as a most unusual love story. Here are same of the lines:

"She thought him a 'burglar' when she found him in her apartment, and so he proved in the end, for he stole her heart after he had won her fortune back for her."

"Faced with kissing or a killing, she kissed the man that she loathed even though she promised to marry him to save herself from poverty, while the man she really did marry stood behind the door with a pistol trained on the unwelcome suitor. It was a case of Kiss or Kill."

"Crook sought to use him against crook, but a beautiful girl entered the scene and it was she that won the fortune in the end, long after she had won his heart."

"You'll thrill and laugh and love with the man the girl thought a 'burglar,' but in the end you'll find that the only ones who suffered were the crooks, and the only thing that he stole was the girl's heart."

MOST times the shorter the selling lines, the better, but this picture is one that will stand more talking about, bearing in mind all the time to keep the title in large type. And don't give the entire story away in your ad. You might try something like this.

"When she met him she was cold and hungry and he covered her with his coat and then she was warmer and happier. Then she began to love him, and her ardor was chilled only because she thought him a burglar. But she kissed a man she loathed to prevent a killing—because she loved the 'burglar.' And then more things happened.

"It's the sort of a story that will keep you in suspense until the final scene, for you never know what is going to happen. There's not a tear in it and it's clean as a whistle, though it makes your heart jump and your nerves tingle."

PUBLICITY AIDS

No Excuse for You If You Fail to Exploit This Picture

UNIVERSAL exchanges are equipped with a full line of publicity on "Kiss or Kill" and the exhibitor has the chance of doing everything from a big billboard campaign to heavy advertising in the newspaper.

The paper includes a 24-sheet with the title in huge letters, two one-sheets, two three-sheets and a six-sheet. Most of these can be used for cut out matter for lobby displays.

Ready prepared newspaper advertising comes in both cut and mat form and this is so arranged that you can saw through the middle and add your selling talks below. This is very advisable.

There are one column cuts of Priscilla Dean and two and three-column scene cuts or mats.

In addition there are 8 x 10 and 11 x 14 scene pictures for lobby display and newspaper use and 22 x 28 pictures of the star.

At left, one of the one sheets; center, a six sheet, and right, three sheet for attractive exploitation

How to Boost Priscilla Dean and Her Lead and Story

YOU as an exhibitor know that during the past year there has been an unusual fluctuation in the popularity of stars and that the drawing power of some of those who were right at the top has gone down and that new stars have come into running. One of these is Priscilla Dean, the star in "Kiss or Kill."

She has scored a hit recently in such pictures as "The Brazen Beauty," "The Ghost" and "Which Woman?" and you should call attention to this fact in your exploitation, whether you showed those pictures or a competitor showed them. We know that some exhibitors refuse to refer to a picture that has played at some other house, but this is the rankest folly. The thing that you are looking forward to is getting the most money out of the picture, and you have to take advantage of the selling points.

There are points in her career which you can take advantage of. She was born in New York and made her first appearance as "Teenie" with Joseph Jefferson in "Rip Van Winkle." Later she toured the country with the Ben Greet players. Especially if your town is a college one where the Ben Greet players appeared, this will help you some. After that she went to a convent for an education and then returned to the speaking stage, appearing in stock companies in a number of cities. Possibly yours was one of these. Her screen career has been with Universal, first in comedies and then in the bigger features.

WE are not going to repeat here the things that we have said so many times about how to get attention for the stars further than the observation that it pays you to increase the popularity of the players who appear regularly at your theatre, and in the case of a beautiful woman this is all the easier.

We would certainly advise a lobby display of pictures of Miss Dean with this production. There are a number of stills in which she appears unusually attractive.

One of double columns at Universal exchange

You could use in the center of the display something of this sort:

"And how would you like to kiss her? She gave the first one to save a life, but all the others for love."

The front page of the advertising section in this issue will make you an excellent picture for this use.

GET all of the press matter you can about Miss Dean into the newspapers. In the Universal press sheet there is an interesting story of her career, and we would much rather have it used, were we an exhibitor, than the ordinary press notice. In the first place, it is of interest and is something that the newspaper will probably welcome, and, again, while it mentions the name of the attraction, it does not give away the story of "Kiss or Kill," and we have already advised you against doing that.

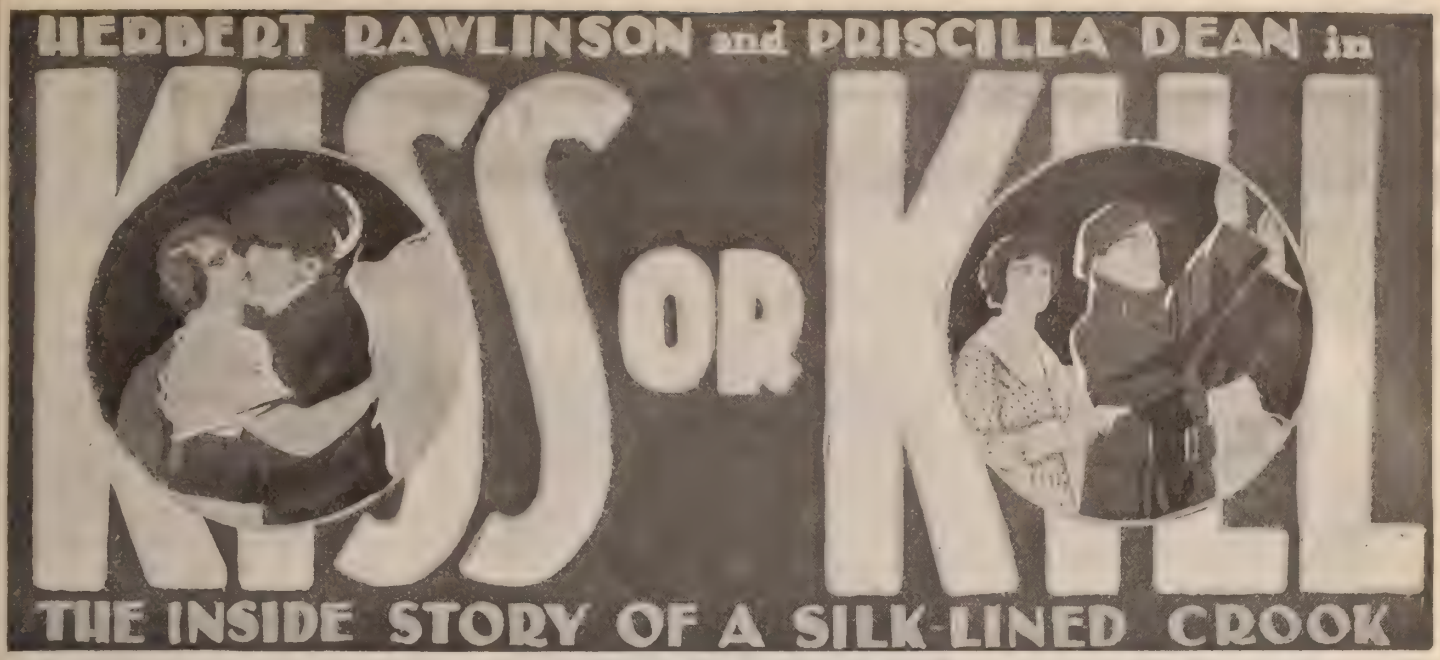
Be sure to get a cut used. If your newspaper makes its own cuts you will find several attractive ones of her in the stills provided by Universal, and we would advise the use of the one of her in her "party" frock or the one where she is seen in bed covered with the "burglar's" overcoat. Both of these are illustrated in these pages.

WHEN we advise you to play up Miss Dean we do not mean that you should ignore Herbert Rawlinson, who is one of the most popular of leading men. His last big success with Universal was "Smashing Through," which doubtless made in big impression in your community. Since then he has been appearing with some of the best known women stars of other companies. He has a big following in some sections, at least, and we would advise the mention of his name in all of the publicity.

We don't believe in bringing a lot of names into the advertising, and we believe that some mighty good work is spoiled by the designer listing the name of every one to do with a picture, but it might be well to mention the name of Elmer Clifton, who scored his first success with Triangle and then went to Universal. He is now directing Dorothy Gish. Certainly you can go the limit in praising the direction of this film.

The story is taken from one by Max Brand, which appeared in All Story magazine. This publication has a large circulation in many communities, and this mention might help in getting those readers into the theatre.

While the cast of principals is small, there are a number of big scenes in this production in which many minor characters take part. It is a story of New York life, but we wouldn't mention that fact, because of the way that most producers have adopted in creating a "story of New York life" is to make it an underworld picture. And this one is absolutely clean.



Striking 24-sheet which may be used in lobby display

Titles and Cuts Offer Possibilities for the Lobby

AS we have said to you the title of this production is one to keep foremost before the public and we would make that the central idea of the lobby display. Repetition of this title along with attractive cut-outs will get you the business.

If you can do it without crowding your lobby it would be a good idea to use the twenty-four sheet above the lobby. In that case it might be well to cut off all of the reading matter that appears on it except the three words, because that is more likely to draw the people across the street to see the rest of your display.

The one sheet which bears a picture of the girl with her streaming hair pointing a gun and at the same time holding her lips ready for a kiss will attract attention and we would advise using these for such posters as you carry in frames within your lobby. Of course in addition to these you should use the stills, especially the pictures of Miss Dean herself that we have suggested elsewhere.

You can make splendid cut outs from the three sheet which shows the girl sitting up in bed with the overcoat thrown over her and the revolver in her hand, if you need additional matter.

IN our opinion this picture is no place for the use of the stunt, beyond the teaser campaign that we have suggested. Therefore we do not believe that freak lobby displays are going to help you any in getting business. Any that you attempt to design are most apt to be misleading.

Therefore keep your lobby comparatively simple, remembering always that the name of the picture is one of your biggest assets and that you are overlooking a bet if you fail to keep this prominent in every bit of the advertising as well as in your lobby display. We don't believe very often in the idea of hanging big banners across your lobby or in front of your theatre, but the use of the twenty-four sheet certainly ought to get them in.

It aids in arousing the public's curiosity and when you do this you've got 'em.

Live News from the Producers

Eighteen Metro Features Ready

Metro Pictures Corporation Announces That It Has Eighteen New Features and Super-Features Ready for Distribution

EIGHTEEN productions distributed by Metro, comprising twelve of the All-Star Series features, and six Screen Classics, Inc., super-features, are ready for exhibitors throughout the country according to President Richard A. Rowland of Metro. The productions made in the Eastern studio have been supervised by Maxwell Karger, director general, and those on the West Coast by George D. Baker.

On November 18 Metro's first contribution will be a comedy drama starring Emmy Wehlen, entitled "His Bonded Wife." Lois and Arthur Zellner wrote the story which was scenarioized by June Mathis. Charles J. Brabin directed it. Creighton Hale is Miss Wehlen's leading support in this production, and others in the cast are Warda Howard, William Frederic, John Terry and Frank Currier.

"Wilson or the Kaiser?" the Screen Classics super-feature written by Maxwell Karger and directed by Charles Miller from A. S. Le Vino's scenario, will be offered to exhibitors at an early date. It includes Henry Kolker as the Kaiser, Joseph Kilgour as Von Bissing, Creighton Hale as the young Alsatian hero, Florence Billings as his sister Vilma, Helen Ferguson in the ingenue role of Amy, Florence Short as Elaine, a Belgian woman, Baby Ivy Ward as her child, Earl Schenck as the arch-villain, Lieut. Ober, Fred Stanton as a typical Hun, and Margaret McWade as Nurse Cavell.

Hale Hamiltons initial Metro starring vehicle, "Five Thousand an Hour," will be released Nov. 25. It was written by George Randolph Chester. June Mathis has scenarioized the book, which was published by Bobbs, Merrill & Co. The picture has been directed by Ralph W. Ince.

December 2 is the date announced for May Allison's next feature, "The Testing of Mildred Vane." Charles T. Dazey, author of "In Old Kentucky," wrote it. Darrell Foss as Prof. Moreland, Ralph Jeffries, George Field, and Nigel De Bruiller are in the cast.

"Hitting the High Spots," which will be released Dec. 9, is the title chosen for Bert Lytell's next feature, written by himself and adapted by George D. Baker. It was directed by Charles Swickard. The cast is headed by Eileen Percy, and includes Helen Dunbar, Winter Hall, Gordon Griffith, Fred Goodwins, Stanton Heck and Ilean Hume.

An Unusual "Still" of Emmy Wehlen, Metro Star, Admiring Herself in the Mirror

Next in the list of All-Star Series releases is "Sylvia on a Spree," an Emmy Wehlen feature, which will be seen for the first time December 16. The cast includes W. I. Percival, Eugene Acker, Peggy Parr, Isabel O'Madigan, Frank Currier and Francesca Ward, Harry L. Franklin directed "Sylvia on a Spree," which was written by E. Forst and adapted by June Mathis.

Export and Import Has Many Metro Rights

With reference to recent announcements regarding the Metro productions, the Export & Import Film Company wishes to emphasize the fact that it has the sole and exclusive rights to the Metro Productions and Screen Classics for South America and Continental Europe.

Up to date the following territories have already been disposed of: Argentine, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru, Bolivia, Brazil, Norway, Sweden and Denmark.

Select Has Two Ready for November

Select Pictures Corporation announces two new pictures for the month of November. These will be "The Road Through the Dark," the Maud Radford Warren story of the war, in which Clara Kimball Young is starred, and Alice Brady in a New York story, "Her Great Chance."

While there is no definite date for either attraction, the Clara Kimball Young picture will probably follow "Her Great Chance."

Gaumont Plans Progress After War

In answer to the rumors that occasionally float up and down Broadway that Gaumont had sold out, that organization this week came back with the emphatic statement that not only is the company still in the ring but that great progress is being planned for after the war.

The announcement states that Gaumont plans to improve its cinematographic news service as soon as peace is declared. Which means, on the face of things, that the improvements will begin at once. Gaumont asserts all of its offices will be reestablished and its vast staff of cameramen in various parts of the world will be increased.

In France the Gaumont news service is released under the name "Gaumont Actualities," in England as the "Gaumont Graphic." In this country the service is released semi-weekly, the Tuesday issues being named "Gaumont News" and the Friday issues "Gaumont Graphic."

The Gaumont announcement states that the "News" and "Graphic" will continue to be released throughout the United States and Canada by the best states rights exchanges. For the present the semi-weekly schedule will be maintained, but it is said to be not at all improbable that at times extras may be issued.

Rolfe Shows Houdini Film to Reviewers

The first four episodes of the B. A. Rolfe Productions serial, "The Master Mystery," starring Harry Houdini, was given a trade showing at the Strand theatre in New York on November 7. The episodes were received very well.

"The Master Mystery" is the initial production of the B. A. Rolfe organization, and is to include fifteen episodes. It will be released in two-reel episodes. Arthur B. Reeve and Charles A. Logue are the writers who furnished the story.

In the cast with Houdini are Margaret Marsh, Ruth Stonehouse and Charles Graham. Carl Edouards, director of the Strand orchestra, arranged a special score for the four episodes shown to the press November 7.

D. J. Dolan Takes Over an Albany Exchange

D. J. Dolan has taken over the Albany office of the Modern Feature Photo Plays.

Mr. Dolan formerly covered the state for the George Kleine System out of the New York office, and before coming into the film business was secretary of the Interborough Contracting Corporation of New York.

Robert Lieber Cites Financing Benefits

Owner of Circle Theatre in Indianapolis Declares Banking Tides the Exhibitor Over Rough Places—Could Open After Being Closed Through a Solid Year

FOLLOWING closely the glowing announcements that the theatres of the country were gradually reopening after the enforced shutdown because of the influenza epidemic, the publicity department of First National Exhibitors' Circuit issued from its New York office some opinions of Robert Lieber on banking and financing. Mr. Lieber, who is owner and operator of the Circle theatre in Indianapolis, declares banking and financing are essential and extremely necessary factors in the continued success of any exhibitor, large or small. If the showman takes the necessary precautions, according to Mr. Lieber, he can close his theatre for a whole year and reopen as strong as he closed.

The exhibitor owes it to himself and to his stockholders to provide ample financial protection against any emergency, says Mr. Lieber.

Reserve Fund Needed

"A reserve or sinking fund of at least twenty per cent of the total sum invested in the theatre and its occupied property is the exhibitor's safest insurance against the nominal risks of the business," said Mr. Lieber in his interview through the publicity department of First National.

"If the Circle theatre closed its doors tomorrow for an enforced shutdown of one year," declared Mr. Lieber, "we could reopen the house at the end of the twelvemonth with colors flying and our finances in splendid shape for the carrying on of the business, even in the face of severe competition or adverse circumstances of any character. We are adequately protected against even that remote possibility—simply as a matter of sound business judgment—so it is reasonable to presume that we could weather any probable storm of lesser intensity."

Mr. Lieber is president of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., and head of the H. Lieber Company, owners of the First National's Indiana state franchise. In the Circle theatre he has developed what is recognized by the industry and the exhibiting branch particularly, as one of the model houses of the country. While his manager, S. Barret McCormick, has devoted himself to the artistic phases of motion picture presentation, Mr. Lieber has devoted himself to the practical commercial side of exhibiting, with the result that the Circle theatre presents a novel and unique anamoly as a profitable business proposition.

Avoid the Reverses

"It is the easiest thing in the world for an exhibitor to pay dividends to his stockholders when the theatre is showing a profit," said Mr. Lieber, "and it is the hardest thing in the world for an exhibitor to levy an assessment on stockholders when the theatre is weathering a turbulent period and needs more money than is being taken in at the box-office. Any exhibitor, no matter how strong and impregnable his business may appear to be, is liable to experience reverses.

"The jeweler conducts his store for eleven months in the year on a gross income which is little more than enough to pay his operating costs. But during the holiday season his sales reach their highest point and he gets his year's profit from the Christmas trade. He has to divide that profit between dividends to his stockholders and himself and a reserve fund on which he can draw, if necessary, during the spring, summer and fall when there are months that show a loss. The retail clothier has much the same financial problem. In the average town he has two profitable seasons—spring and fall.

Robert Lieber, President First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., and owner and Operator of the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis

"The exhibitor has the summer months to consider in arranging his financial program for the year. He knows that there will be weeks without profit and that it would be economy for him to close the house. Perhaps competition makes such a course unwise. To maintain his standards of quality in entertainment he must make no curtailment in rentals. The fixed overhead charges for the theatre remain the same. Perhaps there is a sudden and unexpected loss due to a disease epidemic, similar to the present influenza shutdown. There are a score and more of possible happenings which may occur with a serious effect on any theatre's bank account.

Founded on Good Will

"The exhibitor owes it to himself and to his stockholders, if there are any, to provide ample financial protection against any emergency. Otherwise, his investment in the theatre is in constant jeopardy. I believe that one of the reasons why many bankers look with distrust and doubt upon the retail branch of the motion picture business is because many exhibitors have bank balances which do not give proper protection to their investments.

"Exhibiting is a business without fixed, liquid assets. It consists of retailing merchandise with a momentary value and it is founded chiefly on good will. A clothier or a jeweler can go to a bank and borrow money, at six per cent, on stock on hand. Their merchandise is negotiable, because it has a fixed market value. But an exhibitor has only his theatre. And its value depends entirely upon the ability of one or more men to manage it successfully.

"When an exhibitor goes to a bank to apply for a loan to tide him over an unprofitable period, or to finance improvements to the theatre, the banker would first examine his account and then say something like this: 'Your deposits with this bank have averaged five per cent of your total investment in your theatre. On several occasions you have overdrawn your account. I understand that early in the spring you were doing an extremely profitable business. You tell me you invested that surplus in a home and there is still a first mortgage on it for sixty per cent of its value. If I grant your application for a loan I will have as security a theatre which might prove an utter loss under the management of some one else if illness or death made such a change necessary. You have no tangible assets excepting the theatre which I could sell to recover the amount of the loan. And your habit of spending your progts as you make them leads me to question your business judgment.'

Judged by Surplus

"The banker has judged the exhibitor by the only means at his command—cash or negotiable securities on hand. He measures the exhibitor's business ability not by the volume of the daily deposits, but by the net surplus on hand at the end of each month. If, in the estimation of the banker, that balance is kept big enough to guarantee the exhibitor ample financial latitude in any emergency, he is impressed with the fact that the exhibitor is a good business man and is conducting his affairs along sound commercial lines. As a consequence, the exhibitor is received with open arms when he requires assistance.

"Surplus funds can be safely invested in one or more of several good securities. The most timely one is Liberty Bonds. The cash reserves for the Circle theatre are invested in Liberty Bonds and this will continue to be our outlet for surplus cash as long as the Government needs Liberty Loans. It is probable that there will be several more of them, even though peace is declared."

Jane and Katherine Lee in a Scene From the Fox Picture "Tell It To The Marines"

Lee Children in "Keep Smiling"

Jane and Katherine Lee to Appear in Fox Production Termed the First Musical Comedy of the Screen

RALPH H. SPENCE, special writer of humorous subjects and sub-title specialist for William Fox, has just written what he calls the first "musical comedy of the screen." The new play is entitled "Keep Smiling," and the stellar roles will be interpreted by Jane and Katherine Lee, the Fox kiddies.

In constructing his comedy it is declared that Mr. Spence has managed to fit each episode to some well-known musical composition and that he has punctuated the picture with one hundred and thirty humorous sub-titles, thirty of which form definite orchestra cues.

"Keep the Home Fires Burning" is the keynote of the play. Other selections that fit the action of "Keep Smiling" are: "Smiles," "Till the Clouds Roll By," "The Sunshine of Your Smiles," "Over There," "Stars and Stripes Forever," "Let Me Like a Soldier Fall," "Taps" (bugle), "Manny's Little Chocolate Soldier," "We're All Going Calling on the Kaiser," "Beautiful Lady," "I Hate to Lose You," "Blue Bells of Scotland," "I'm So Glad My Mama Don't Know Where I'm At," "My Hero" and several others.

"While 'Keep Smiling' has its dramatic moments, it is mostly comedy-drama, and at times drops—or rises—to 'real farce,' said Mr. Spence. "Its plot, characters, settings and tempo strongly suggest musical comedy, and there is a real surprise in the finale.'

"Mr. Fox instructed me to write a comedy for the Lee children, and 'Keep Smiling' represents my idea of comedy," continued Mr. Spence. "I have depended entirely upon situations to provide the laughs. I have studiously avoided unnatural, improbable and impossible incidents, and the only place that custard pie appears in the play is on the dining table. I have always been a hearty supporter of custard pie for the last inning of a table d'hote dinner, but I have always nursed a strenuous objection to desecrating this delectable dessert by draping it over the bewhiskered physiognomy of some pantomimic comedian."

Mutual Places W. A. V. Mack in New York

IT was announced this week that W. A. V. Mack, manager of the Buffalo branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, has been appointed manager of the New York Exchange of Mutual by President James M. Sheldon, succeeding Fred G. Sliter, who, as announced in MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week, has been appointed by the Government a foreign film commissioner. Mr. Mack has assumed charge of the New York office. He is succeeded in Buffalo by Edward J. Hayes.

The promotion of Mr. Mack is in accord with President Sheldon's policy of selecting men within the organization for higher places.

Mr. Hayes has been connected with the General Film Company, Buffalo, as branch manager, and has also had charge of several big theatres, among them the Colonial theatre of Elmira, N. Y., and the International theatre of Noagara Falls. He has been a branch manager for the Metro Pictures Corporation, where he made a splendid record. His wide acquaintance and intimate knowledge of conditions in the trade and the needs of the exhibitor should carry him far in the ranks of Mutual.

President Sheldon also announces the appointment of Edward L. McShane as manager of Mutual's Washington, D. C., branch, succeeding H. R. Mason, who resigned on account of ill health.

The Red Cross Plans to Aid Its Films

As part of its campaign to secure co-operative circulation of its war work films, the Bureau of Pictures, American Red Cross, issues bulletins which are the direct medium of communication with the chapters of the organization, and through them with the twenty million members in this country.

The division bulletins, with several hundred thousand circulation of an intensive sort, keep the chapter leaders advised of the Bureau of Pictures releases and how to find the theatres where they are being displayed. This co-operation is said to be continuous, and is reported as bearing fruit in the inquiries received at General Film Company exchanges.

A timely release is now ready, "Victorious Serbia." The Bureau of Pictures, W. E. Waddell director, has recently removed to 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, in order to be in the film district of the metropolis.

Rothacker Complimented on Film Developing

The Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago is exhibiting with pride the following commendatory communication from the Exhibitors' Film Exchange of Seattle, Wash.:

"We beg to advise that shipment containing our prints of 'Shoulder Arms' reached us a few days ago. Yesterday we screened this comedy for the benefit of the other exchanges on film row; we had quite an audience, as everybody from exchange manager to poster boy was anxious to see Chaplin's latest. It somewhat helped to take the edge off the gloom which has made itself felt since the closing of all theatres in the territory, and everybody agreed that 'Shoulder Arms' is positively a riot.

"Many expressions were heard on the excellent photography, and the writer wishes to add his appreciation of your work in developing and printing the films."

Blanche Sweet's Latest Called Timely

"Particularly timely," said Harry Garson in referring to his latest production, "The Unpardonable Sin," starring Blanche Sweet.

"When I say that this production is particularly timely I must be given credit for reading the newspapers and therefore know that the War is ended and that the influenza also has practically finished its course.

"The people are now in the mood for good, clean, substantial entertainment. But a motion picture production must have exceptional merit if it expects to keep in the so-called 'special' class. Many scenes of 'The Unpardonable Sin' depict Belgium.

"During the many years to be spent in the period of re-construction of that country it will always be a keenly interesting and absorbing topic," continued Mr. Garson.

"Marshall Neilan has produced a masterpiece in this eight part production and I am firmly convinced that it will prove to be a classic for a long time to come."

The New York theatre that will house the premiere of "The Unpardonable Sin" has not yet been announced.

Normand to Do "Sis Hopkins" for Goldwyn

THE next picture which Mabel Normand will make for Goldwyn will be a screen version of "Sis Hopkins." Goldwyn has acquired the moving picture rights to this Hoosier play from Rose Melville, who wrote and created and played the part for nearly a quarter of a century.

Very few plays on the American stage have a more curious history than "Sis Hopkins." To the present generation of New York theatregoers it is known only by hearsay. In the provinces it was said to be for twenty years about as well known as "Rip Van Winkle," "'Way Down East" or "In Old Kentucky."

Rose Melville and her husband, Frank Minzey, toured America with it year after year for nearly twenty-five years, always making the same sure profit and usually playing to about the same audience. In both large and small towns all over the country many people would go to see Rose Melville regularly once a year.

As a matter of fact, "Sis" is one of those parts that grew rather than being written, because Miss Melville never ceased building and elaborating the part. It is considered to be an ideal character for Mabel Normand in pictures, as the character and situations offer ideal opportunities for her to build comic scenes on.

Lehr in Full Charge of New Goldwyn Studios

In full charge of the new Goldwyn studios at Los Angeles is a man who less than a year ago had never been behind the scenes in a motion picture manufacturing plant.

He is Abraham Lehr, vice-president in charge of production for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, which has just moved its studio and producing staff from Fort Lee to the Coast.

So marked was Mr. Lehr's success from the start that within a few months after joining Goldwyn he was elected a vice-president and placed in full charge of production under the supervision of Mr. Goldfish.

Ramsaye Leaves Mutual

It is announced by Terry Ramsaye that he has resigned from the executive staff of Mutual Film Corporation and that he will make known his future affiliations next week.

Mr. Ramsaye joined the Mutual organization as director of publicity in June, 1915, going into the organization as a member of the staff of John R. Freuler, the then newly elected president.

His offices were maintained in New York City and then moved to the Chicago headquarters and then back to New York again.

Canada to See "Cannibal" Film

Canadian Premiere of "Cannibals of the South Seas" to Follow New York Trade Showing at Hotel Astor

MARTIN JOHNSON'S "Cannibals of the South Seas" has its Canadian premiere at Massey Hall in Toronto November 23, which follows by a few days the New York trade showing in the ballroom of the Hotel Astor on Tuesday evening, November 19.

The metropolitan trade showing was arranged by the Robertson-Cole company, which controls the distribution of the feature for the entire world. New York State will be handled through the First National Exchange and the showing is particularly intended for exhibitors in this territory.

The Toronto presentation of "Cannibals of the South Seas" will run seven days. George W. Beynon, who has arranged a special musical score for the film, will handle the music at the Toronto showing, as he will at the Hotel Astor presentation. Martin Johnson and his wife, who accompanied him throughout the expedition, will attend the Massey Hall premiere in Toronto.

By December 1 the Robertson-Cole company will announce how "Cannibals of the South Seas" is to be presented in the remainder of the United States outside of the Empire State. Remarkable interest is declared to be manifested by exhibitors everywhere, and the Robertson-Cole organization is said to be in receipt of hundreds of inquiries regarding the releasing of "Cannibals of the South Seas" throughout the country.

Robertson-Cole are sending a print of "Cannibals of the South Seas" to the London offices of the company. A British trade showing is being arranged. Particularly strong interest is being evinced in "Cannibals of the South Seas" in England, since most of the savage islands visited by Mr. Johnson are British possessions.

The picture will be released in two parts of 5,000 feet each. The sub-titles are said to have been carefully handled, retaining all the vital information and the real flavor of adventure, as well as a lively vein of humor.

"The Birth of a Race" to Open in Chicago

It has been announced that "The Birth of a Race" will open for an indefinite run at the Blackstone theatre at Chicago beginning December 1. Joseph Carl Breil, who composed the music for "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance," is the composer for "The Birth of a Race," and will have an orchestra of thirty musicians.

Scenes for this photoplay were taken in Florida, New York and New Jersey under the direction of John W. Noble. The photography is by Herbert O. Carleton, and the developing, printing, tinting and toning is the work of the Craftsmen Laboratories. Art titles throughout the picture are from the studio of Ferdinand Pinney Earl.

Among many who have contributed characterizations to this production are Jane Gray, Anna Lehr, Anita Cortez, George LeGuere, Philip Van Loan, Charles Graham, Will H. Gregory, Ben Hendricks, Alice Gale, Doris Doscher, Dick Lee, Edwin Boring, David Wall and Belle Seacombe.

"Shoulder Arms" Three Weeks at Broadway

With an extension by the Broadway theatre, New York, of its original booking of one week to a threee weeks' run on "Shoulder Arms," and increases by the vaudeville houses of the B. F. Keith Circuit of from three days to a week on Chaplin's second million dollar comedy, with reports on early runs on "Shoulder Arms" from practically all of the exchanges of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, indicates to them that it will play to a total of more days than any other Chaplin production.

Lesser Buys "Five Nights" for the Coast

With the announcement that Sol L. Lesser has bought "Five Nights" for California, Arizona, Nevada and the Hawiian Islands, comes news of other sales of the screen version of Victoria Cross' novel, that is declared to denote a spurt of activity in the state rights market.

The Southern peninsula of Michigan for the Victoria Cross feature went to Haynes Features, Inc., of Detroit, and the Siles Film Exchange has acquired "Five Nights" for Chicago, while Al Harsten has it for New York.

A deal has just been reported with F. M. Sanford whereby he gets the picture for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

According to the Classical Motion Picture Company, which is selling "Five Nights" to state rights exchanges, one of two things is happening. Either the big box office results shown by "Five Nights" in New York and Ohio are attracting attention to the feature, or the state rights market is showing sudden activity.

Mary Miles Minter in Active Close-ups

What the American Film Company declares is a new departure in the realm of film art is termed the "active close-up."

In "Wives and Other Wives," featuring Mary Miles Minter, a screen farce in which she plays a young matron, there are said to be many demonstrations of this by the star, augmented by the cameraman.

"Heretofore," said an American official, "the close-ups have usually been taken with the object or the person in a fixed pose or with very limited action. Few of the producers have risked the dangers of facial movement at close-ups because of the fact that not many faces can be active and yet remain attractive under the tremendous magnification on the screen."

Coast Studio Notes

There is a switch made in the directing staff at the William Fox studio. On Monday, November 18, when Gladys Brockwell began work on her new picture Lynn Reynolds, the former Tom Mix director will take over the management of the company. Tom Mix, on the same day, began work on his new film under the direction of Edward Le Saint who up to that time handled the Brockwell company.

Walter De Courcy, of the William Fox forces, was stricken with Spanish influenza on Thursday, October 31. While the attack was severe De Courcy recovered quickly and was able to leave his bed on Friday, November 8. He is now able to go to the studio daily.

A. E. Gillstrom has arrived from New York and has begun work on the new picture featuring Katherine and Jane Lee.

Metro Has "The Great Victory"

"The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns" Is Next Screen Classics Feature

WHILE Richard A. Rowland, Metro's president, disclaims any supernatural method of obtaining information, others in the Metro offices are declaring that Metro luck is again triumphant in having perfected another topical patriotic production in its newest Screen Classics offering, "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns."

"Scenes already photographed have been verified by current events," declared one official. "Metro directors seem to have an almost uncanny foreknowledge of the trend affairs would take, and the new production de luxe simply repeats the proverbial 'Metro luck' as powerfully demonstrated in 'To Hell with the Kaiser,' 'The Slacker,' 'Draft 258,' 'My Own United States,' 'Her Boy' and 'Lest We Forget.'

"'The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser? The Fall of the Hohenzollerns,' will show in tangible form the actual events of the conclusion of the world war. History has collaborated with Maxwell Karger, the author, in providing the material for this splendid representation of the most important period in world affairs," he continued.

"Weaving a beautiful romance woven into the thread of important happenings of the war's earlier phases, Mr. Karger has completed his story in such a way as to give motion picture patrons the benefit of the amazing occurrences of its climax and close. 'The Great Victory' will not only serve as an inspiring means of entertainment for playgoers of the present day, but will undoubtedly be preserved as a correct chronicle of world events for future generations.

"The capture of Sedan, the Versailles conference, the reception of the German envoys by Marshal Foch and his associates of the Allied command, the delivery of the terms of the armistice and the final acceptance of it, the abdication of the 'Kaiser and King,' William II., who thereby became simply William Hohenzollern, the subsequent wild acclaim with which the news was received in America, and President Wilson's appearance before Congress to read them the whole text of the armistice terms, have all been included in the picture.

"Moreover, there will be further incidents in 'The Great Victory' which will not be made public until the actual projection of the production upon the screen of a New York theatre, remarkable incidents connected with these epoch-making events.

The Cast Is One of the Strongest Points of "The Great Victory," Screen Classics-Metro Production. In It Are Henry Kolker, Joseph Kilgour, Creighton Hale, Florence Billings, Baby Ivy Ward and Others

Select Gets Julia Arthur Film

Select Is Distributing "The Woman the Germans Shot," with Title Changed to "The Cavell Case"

SELECT PICTURES CORPORATION announces that it has arranged to market through Select Exchanges the drama embodying the story of Edith Cavell, the British Red Cross Nurse, in which Julia Arthur is being presented by Joseph L. Plunkett and Frank J. Carroll.

This is the feature which, under the title "The Woman the Germans Shot," was presented at the Strand theatre in New York City the week beginning October 27, and which on the initial day of its run is declared by Select to have created a new turnaway record for that playhouse.

The new title of the picture is "The Cavell Case," the phrase, "The Woman the Germans Shot," being retained as a subtitle. The picture will be handled as a Select Special. This is the second Special to be announced by the Select people this season, the first being the Thomas Dixon production, "The One Woman."

"Select considers itself fortunate in securing for distribution so strong a subject as this," said one of the officials, "the picture having been pronounced a success from every standpoint.

"Based on one of the best scenarios Anthony Paul Kelly ever wrote, dramatically gripping from start to finish, beautifully played by its distinguished star, Julia Arthur, and by a supporting company which gives to every character in the drama the individuality and prominence it deserves, splendidly directed by John G. Adolfi and given a production that is eminently satisfactory, 'The Cavell Case' has won golden praise from the expert public of motion picture circles, and from New York critics and theatre patrons.

"This opinion was crystalized in a striking statement in the New York Evening Mail of October 29, which noted that 'Tradition is vanquished in "The Woman the Germans Shot,' the principal film feature this week at the Strand theatre. Unlike most film portrayals of historic events it does not leave the impression of elaborating facts for the purpose of dramatic suspense.'"

Albert E. Smith Plans a Training College

A training college for the development of motion picture actresses and actors from inexperienced material is planned by Albert E. Smith, President of the Vitagraph, to be opened after the first of the year.

There will be no charge for tuition, and practical experience will be afforded the students as "extras" for Vitagraph.

Hodkinson Releases "Made in America"

It was announced by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation this week that it will in the near future release "Made in America." an eight-reel production. The scenario was furnished by the Division of Films and the United States Government co-operated.

It is to be produced and directed by Ashley Miller and will be released, one reel each week, through the Pathe exchanges. It is the story of the making of the American soldier, from the time he signed his registration card for the first draft till he landed armed cap-a-pie in France and won a glorious victory over the Hun.

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation was selected by the Government to handle this film, which will be preserved in the archives of the Government as an accurate pictorial history of the making of the American soldier in the war for liberty and justice.

Caruso Subject Among Early Releases

With the resumption of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's release schedule November 17, attention is largely centered upon the first screen appearance of Enrico Caruso, idol of the opera world, whose Artcraft picture, "My Cousin," is released on that date. The story chosen as the vehicle for the tenor's first venture as a star in motion pictures was written especially for him by Margaret Turnbull.

The central figure in "My Cousin," is a poor artist, Tomaso Longo, by name, who makes models for plaster casts and whose proud boast is that he is a cousin of Cesare Caroli, the great tenor, whom he greatly resembles. Tomaso is in love with Rosa Ventura, a cashier in her father's restaurant, and although she flirts occasionally with Roberto Lombardi, proprietor of a fruit and vegetable stand, she really loves Tomaso.

Reports That "Manx-Man" Has Steady Booking

State right pictures have been proving their worth in the recent epidemic, according to information just received by Sales Director J. L. Kempner, of the Manx-Man Company, from his special representative, Leon Schlesinger. Writing from Chicago, Mr. Schlesinger says:

"I have just visited some of the Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa territories unaffected by the epidemic closing ban, and find that although the exhibitors were deprived of the new pictures they were working state rights pictures pretty hard, and in many instances making money. Of course, even in this 'open' section business was affected, because many people were afraid to attend, even though no ban had been ordered by the authorities.

"The exhibitors were not looking to make money, but they were glad to meet expenses. This they were able to do according to the strength of the state rights picture. And the good ones got the business, and we can include 'The Manx-Man' among the latter."

Special representatives Weiner and Pelzman, who were recalled from the New England and Ohio territories, respectively, when the epidemic first commenced to rage, some weeks ago, have been sent back to these territories by Sales Director J. L. Kempner, who feels that conditions have been restored to normal.

Climax of "Hands Up" on November 24

"Hands Up," the Pathe Western serial, starring Ruth Roland, comes to an end in what Pathe terms a tremendous climax the week beginning November 24.

Echo Delane, the heroine, and the Inca Prince have been hidden in a cave by "Two Gun," the girl's cowboy protector. She is being sought by the Incas to be wedded to the Prince, according to the prophecy. The night has arrived on which, the tradition tells, the great meteor is to fall. And then the climax occurs.
